Enlarging Your Business

If you are in business and you want to make more money you will read every word we have to say. Are you spending your money for advertising in haphazard fashion as if intended for charity, or do you advertise for direct results?

Did you ever stop to think how your advertising can be made a source of profit to you, and how its value can be measured in dollars and cents. If you have not, you are throwing money away.

Advertising is a modern business necessity, but must be conducted on business principles. If you are not satisfied with your advertising you should set aside a certain amount of money to be spent annually, and then carefully note the effect it has in increasing your volume of business; whether a 10, 20 or 30 per cent increase. If you watch this gain from year to you will become intensely interested in your advertising, and how you can make it enlarge your business.

If you try this method we believe you will not want to let a single issue of this paper go to press without something from your store.

We will be pleased to have you call on us, and we will take pleasure in explaining our annual contract for so many inches, and how it can be used in whatever amount that seems necessary to you.

If you can sell goods over the counter we can also show you why this paper will best serve your interests when you want to reach the people of this community.

When You Need Printing Done

You want it to be of the very best kind. As you expect your printed matter to make business it is necessary it should do the talking for you. Poor or indifferent printing cannot do this as it lacks the strong points required to gain and hold the interest of the patron.

¶ In this particular line of work we excel, for several reasons, viz: 1st; we have the largest and best variety of up-to-date type to be found in the western part of the state. 2nd; we carry only the very best grades of papers; and 3rd; the know-how with which to create original and attractive tye display.

THE ACTUAL SIZE OF BABYLON.

Much Wild Conjecture Is Swept Away By The Recent Explorations.

The report of the German Oriental Society on the extensive explorations carried out on the ruins of ancient Babylon, which has just been issued under the editorship of Dr. Friedrich Delitzsch, is a document of more then usual interest.

Perhaps one of the most astonishing discoveries in the field of topographical research has been the tracing of the walls of the city and the ascertainment of the true size of the city. Wonderful descriptions of the size of Babylon have been given, based chiefly on the hearsay evidence of Herodotus, in ancient times, an the theories of the late Dr. Oppert. These writers made the city a vast parallelogram, surrounded by a wall fifty miles long and hundred feet high, with one hundred gates, and bisected by the Euphrates. According to them the area was about as large as London and Paris together, or some forty square miles. All this wild conjecture has been swept away.

The exploration of the walls commenced at the Babil fort, and here was found a wall twenty-five feet thick, with buttresses every sixty feet. The line of the wall was traced to the southeast angle, until it bends to the west and joins the great quay on the banks of the river. This portion was pierced by only one gate, the gate of Isar, flanked by tall towers decorated with friezes of lions and dragons in encaustic tile work. On the north it was traced to the river bank. The whole enclosure covered an area of a little over one mile, or roughly that of our City of London.

In the Kasr or "palace" mound were found the remains of two great palaces, one built by Natupalassar, the other by Nebuchadnezzar. Both were most complex in plan, containing hundreds of rooms for the accommodation of retainers, officials in the royal family. The two palaces are separated by a street. The later or new edifice is on the eastern side and consists of several groups of chambers arranged around quadrangles separated by strong walls and gateways. The largest of these is a royal quadrangle, entered by a double gateway.

On the south side of this square is the northern facade of the royal audience chamber or Selamlik. This facade was forty feet wide and had been richly decorated with floral designs in enamelled brick in yellow, white, blue and black. The audience hall measures 60 by 170 feet and on the south side is a deep alcove with a dais in front, where the royal throne was placed.

What a historic chamber this is! Here Nebuchadnezzar had sat and received homage on his conquest of Jerusalem. Perhaps in this very chamber Belshazzar's feast was held and the plaster covered walls had received the terrible message. Pere Cyrus the Conqueror was enthorned in June 538 B. C., and perhaps in this very chamber Alexander of Macedon held the fatal revels after his overthrow of the Empire of the East.

Nebuchadnezzar speaks of richly decorated palaces and temples, but the one prevailing feature of all the building was the dull, monotonous brickwork, void of decoration If gold and silver and precious stones, bedar and cypress wood had been used, all disappeared long ago.

Protection Against Loss By Fire.

Is your property insured? If not, could you afford to lose your home or your place of business at this time by fire? If such a misfortune should overtake you are you able to rebuild without borrowing money and putting a mortgage on your premises? If not, then insure your property at once in one of the large and reliable Fire Insurance Companies represented by our Agency, and in case of fire you will be promptly paid the amount of loss sustained under your policy, and it will not be necessary to borrow. FOR CONGRESS,

GEORGE A. PEARRE,

OF ALLEGANY COUNTY.

HOW TRAMPS ARE MADE.

Here are the forces that help to jar men and boys loose, forces that have doubled in the last twenty years and are still increasing: New labor-saving machines to make use of child labor, new machines to speed up the American pace. In the last ten years the railroads, the mines, the factories, mills and docks have maimed over 1,000,000 men, and the public is paying the pensions. For thousands of cripples, thrown out of their regular work, takes to the road, and with no miracle coming to turn them back, become out-and-out tramps and bums, doing no work at all, begging and stealing their way. Rush and slack seasons demanding more and more armies of surplus labor; the swift growth of industry, bringing to America millions of immigrants, over half of them young men who come alone; and most of all, the railroads, demanding increasing throngs of nomadic camp workers, the railroads "the real hot circus," tempting boys to the road and giving all kinds of hobos easy and free means of travel. Lastly, the huge tenement hives, where year by year life grows more serious and tense and restless.

And deep under all these conditions responding to the chances they offer, the old human love of the road that lies deep down in the souls of men—the "wanderlus" of humanity.—Washington Post.

MR. BRYAN'S VICTORY IN THE STATE CONVENTION.

No other comment is needed to show what, Mr. William J. Bryan has done to the democratic party of Maryland than the news accounts printed in the last few days of the difficulty the party in this State has had to get men of first-class ability to go to Denver in the role of delegates-at-large. It looked for a time as if the selections for this honorable post would actually have to be made by the convention itself—a thing which, of course, is unprecedented in the politics of the State. It was necessary to resort to draft in order to secure the Governor; Attorney General Straus aud Mr. Murray Vandiver could not well refuse in the circumstances, while Hon. J. F. C. Talbott is made to serve in default of somebody better.

Our esteemed contemporary, the New York Sun, which is so valiantly striving for the nomination of a Democrat whom it can support in opposition to Mr. Taft, in its headlines over the account of the Convention, says:

BRYAN HIT HARD IN MARYLAND.

Feeling Strongly Against Him in Convention.

Disorder When Attempt is Made to Get Vote to Instruct for Him—No Unit Rule and the Delegates Go Unfettered—Only Four of Sixteen Are for the Nebraskan.

Alas and alack! Our comtemporary grabbing at straws. The result of the Convention was a Bryan victory, in that he gets four votes when it was confidently predicted he would get none, and, further, in that every one of the leaders whose presence at Denver it was believed would help to stem the Bryan tide refused to go, thus indicating his belief that the fight against the Nebraskan is hopeless.

Instead of being "hard hit," no convention has been held in many moons which so clearly showed that it is Bryan all the way as the Convention of the Maryland Democrats.

It was good politics in the situation to recognize Mr. Bryan's following in the State and to give it representation in the Denver delegation, unhampered by the unit rule.

GOOD ROAD QUESTION.

There appears to be some apprehension among those who met the commission in the western counties that the law restricts the improvement to those main roads which run from county to county, and that the commission has no power to improve the main roads that begin and end in a county or extend from one large town to another in the same county. The law provides that the commission "shall have full power and charged with the full duties to select, construct and improve and maintain such a general system of improved State roads and highway as can reasonably be expected to be completed with the funds herein provided in and through all the counties of the State." It may be argued that a road leading, for example, from Brunswick or from Knoxville in Frederick county to Frederick city, is just as much a part of the system as a road leading from Frederick to Hagerstown or Westminster. Frederick is already the center of a splendid system of stone roads, while Brunswick, a town of nearly 5,000 persons, is almost mudbound in winter, without a single good road to reach it. It surely cannot be the design of the law to compel the commission to build a road from Frederick to Hagerstown and to Mount Airy when there is already a fine road to each one, and leave Brunswick and the whole Merryland Tract, the only part of Frederick county minus turnpikes, without any good road.

And so in Washington county; the county commissioners have recommended a road down the western side of South Mountain through Pleasant Valley the only part of Washington county which has no turnpike. Such a road would connect a large number of turnpikes with the main line of the Baltimore and Ohio road at Harper's Ferry and the turnpikes up the Valley of Virginia, and it could also be made to connect with a road from Knoxville to Jefferson in Frederick county, and so give a good road from Harper's Ferry and the whole Valley of Virginia and from Pleasant Valley and the Merryland Tract to Baltimore. Brunswick could be connected with this road by a side road two or three miles long. An impression that seems to be gaining ground, namely, that there is an effort by automobile people to control the selection of roads without regard to the local advantage, should be corrected.—Baltimore Sun.

DELIGHTFUL NUPTIAL EVENT.

Miss Annie V. Landstreet Becomes the Bride of Mr. R. C. McCandlish.

Miss Annie Verlinda Landstreet and Mr. Robert Coleman McCandlish were married Tuesday evening at 7:30 o'clock at the handsomely appointed residence of Mr. Upton Beall McCandlish of Westernport, the ceremony being performed by Rev. Horace W. Stowell, rector of St. James Episcopal Church.

Mrs. Fairfax S. Landstreet, of Baltimore, was the matron of honor and Mr. DeWarren H. Reynolds, of Cumberland, officiated in the capacity of best man. Capt. John Landstreet, of Richmond, Va., a brother of the bride gave his sister in marriage. Miss Carrie Roush, of Martinsburg, W. Va., and Miss Catherine McCandlish, of Westernport, were brides maids, and Miss Margaret Martin, of Washington, D. C., a neice of the bride, was flower girl. The wedding march from Lohengrin was played by Miss Emma Martin, of Brunswick, Md.

The stately parlors in which the nuptial rite was solemnized and the dining hall where a delicious supper was later served were exquisitely decorated with roses, ferns and sweet peas.

R. C. McCandlish, the groom is the cashier of the First National Bank of Friendsville, and vice president of the Bank of Bruceton Mills. He is a brother of U. B. McCandlish, the cashier of the Davis National Bank, of Piedmont.

The bride is a sister of Mrs. U. B. McCandlish and also of Capt. Landstreet, of Richmond and Fairfax S. Landstreet, of Baltimore.

The bride and groom took their departure immediately after the reception for eastern cities, where they will spend their honeymoon.

Married in Hagerstown.

BIXLER—THOMAS.—Mrs. Caroline Lucas Thomas, daughter of Dr. A. W. Lucas, of Hagerstown, was married on last Saturday to Dr. Wm. H. H. Bixler, formerly of Oakland, at St. John's Protestant Episcopal church by the rector, Rev. J. Poyntz Tyler. The bride is the widow of Frederick Mayhew Thomas, of New York, who died several years ago.

NORTH GLADE.

Miss Ida Wilson and Miss Walker, of Blaine, were welcome visitors here last Saturday and Sunday.

Geo. Fitzwater and Chas. Ashby of Deer Park, were visiting at Judge Fitzwater's on Sunday.

Chas. O'Brien with wife and daughter were guests of Geo. W. Moon last Sunday.

Jas. Fitzwater is one of our proud citizens. It is a new daughter at his home.

We regret to note the sudden death of Mrs. Salem Lee on the 4th inst. She with nearly all the family, had been down with the measles. We extend our hearty sympathy to Bro. Lee and family in their sad loss.

John Mason's little boy is still very sick. There seems to be no hope of his recovery.

Daniel O'Brien, Jr., is also one of our unfortunate neighbors. His wife has been seriously ill for a long time. He lost a cow and heifer the other day.

The May freeze injured the fruit crop very materially in this section but we will have more than we had last year.

Farmers were late getting their crops out, owing to the bad weather. It seems now that the continued wet weather is at an end.

Rev. Engle will hold services here commencing on Friday evening and continuing over Sunday.

Because of the prevalence of measles in this community our Sunday school, as well as other gatherings, have not been so well attended. That danger, however, seems about past.

GRAND JURY REPORT.

Body Discharged Saturday Morning—Forty-Two Indictments Found.

The Grand Jury for Garrett county, in session from Monday until Saturday morning, was discharged by Judge Henderson upon making its report to the Court, as follows:

To the Honorable, the Judges of the Circuit Court of Garrett county, Md.,

The Grand Jury for the June Term of the Circuit Court for Garrett county beg leave to report that we have now completed our labors and desire to report our proceedings and receive our discharge.

We have to the best of our ability performed the duties devolving upon us as members of this body and have in the performance thereof and of the trust reposed in us, have endeavored to do so, without fear or favor and in accordance with the oaths administered us and of the charge of your Honors. We have had before us and have examined one hundred and twenty-nine witnesses, have found thirty-one presentments and forty-two bills of indictment. We have found presentments in all cases in which we believe the evidence justifies and have ignored trivial cases and those cases in which the evidence did not appear to warrant presentments.

We are glad to note that there have been no crimes of a serious nature committed in this county since the last term of the Circuit Court. We find that there appears to be a number of violations of the liquor laws of this State and especially in the sale of liquor without licenses and of the sale of liquor to minors.

We further report that we have in accordance with the provisions of law inspected the records and visited the county public buildings and are pleased to report that we find the records are kept in as good condition as their present quarters will permit, and that they are kept by the officials having custody thereof in a careful, neat and excellent manner, and much credit is due to Mr. Tower, Clerk of the Circuit Court, and also the other county officials having charge of the records of the county, for the excellent condition in which we have found them.

We have carefully examined the records of the County Treasurer and have made special investigation of the accounts relating to tax on mortgages and find that the mortgage taxes have been collected and properly disbursed.

We deem it unnecessary to make any recommendations as to any improvement to the old court house, in view of the fact that we believe it will subserve the purposes for the present and until the new court house is completed.

It is with pleasure that we note the marked progress on the new court house building that is now being made in the erection thereof and the work so far completed appears to us to have been done in a substantial and satisfactory manner and when finish will be a credit and honor to the citizens of our county.

The Sheriff, Mr. Austin Brown, has manifested much interest in the cleanliness and the general condition of the county jail and sheriff's residence, and we congratulate him in keeping it in a neat and careful condition, and we make the following recomendations in regard to the county jail and sheriff's residence: That there should be a door placed through the closet from the hall into the jury room, and that the wood work of the porch should be repaired, that the roof should be painted and that the spouting examined and repaired in order to properly carry away the water from the roof, and that there should be several additional mattresses placed in the jail and also two strong benches, and we further recomend that the ashes should be promptly removed from the building.

We desire to acknowledge the many courtesies which we have received from your Honors and also of all the public officials with whom our duties have brought us in contact and we especially desire to express our thanks and appreciation for the coutresies, valuable and efficient aid and assistance of the State's Attorney, Mr. Julius C. Renninger, which he has splendidly given us while in the discharge and course of investigations and wish to commend him for the capable manner in which he assisted us.

During the present term of Court we had the pleasure of meeting with our distinguished Governor, Hon. Austin L. Crothers, and the Good Roads Commission of Maryland, and we congratulate the tax payers of Garrett county upon the prospect of a most excellent system of good public roads in this county, and that our county will receive from the State for such purpose the magnificent sum of two hundred and thirty-eight thousand dollars.

We trust that the Good Roads Commission will find it convenient to commence the work at an early day in Garrett county, and we recognize the fact that with the inauguration of a system of good roads and in the consumation of the same will result the progress, advancement, prosperity and material welfare of our people.

We now beg to be discharged.

Respectfully submitted,
J. A. GRANT, Foreman.

J. S. MYERS,
WM. B. SWEET, Clerks.

ROBBERY AT DEER PARK.

Burglars Entered W. L. Shaffer's Store There Monday Night.

The general store of Mr. W. L. Shaffer at Deer Park was entered by burglars on Monday night of this week when they carried off shoes and other goods. Entrance to the store room was effected through the door from which a pane of glass had been cut. The money till in the store room was forced open and the contents were also carried away.

There is no clue as to the identity of the thieves.

Monday night marked the forth time this store has been forcibly entered.

Engraved calling cards and wedding invitations may be procured by leaving your orders at this office. A very attractive and stylish line at moderate prices is shown.

CHURCH TO BE DEDICATED.

New Edifice at Red House Will be Consecrated Sunday Morning.

Next Sunday promises to be a red letter day for the congregation of the Red House Ev. Lutheran congregation, when the new church, which has been completed after more than a year's work, will be dedicated. Rev. J. H. Kuhlman, of Gettysburg College, will preach the dedicatory sermon, and will be assisted in the service by Rev. E. Manges, of Oakland, and other ministers.

The church is a modernly constructed edifice, comfortably furnished and handsomely finished, having a capacity for seating two hundred or more people.

To the dedicatory service all are earnestly invited by the official board of the church.

Beginning this evening services will be held each night this week in the new church, also on Sunday hight.

To Be Married.

Two of Oakland's best young people will be joined in wedlock on next Wednesday evening, June 17th, at nine o'clock, when Miss Effie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Mealy, will become the bride of Mr. Roy H. Hamill, only son of Mr. and Mrs. M. R. Hamill. The ceremony will take place at the home of Miss Mealy and will be performed in the presence of a few friends by Rev. E. Manges, pastor of St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church of Oakland. The Republican extends its congratulations to the young people and wishes them a long, happy and prosperous life.

THE QUESTION OF GOOD ROADS.

Washington County Opposed to Taking Over National Or Other Pike.

Many heavy taxpayers of Washington county opposed to the Good Roads Commission taking over the National pike or any other pike in this county are in favor of the Commission postponing action for awhile.

The sentiment at the meeting held in the courthouse on Thursday was overwhelmingly in favor of the Commission improving the important and much-traveled dirt roads, but members of the Commission appeared to think that the roads law compelled them to build only such roads as would comprise a part of the general State system of roads.

The chief road asked for by the County Commissioners—from Ringgold to Harper's Ferry—runs north and south and does not connect, only by means of other roads, with either Allegany or Frederick county.

Rather than have the Comuission go to work and take over the National pike or any of the other pikes, many citizens of the county prefer waiting for a couple of years in the hope that the next legislature can be induced to change the law so the people of Washington county at least can have improved the roads that they select.

Many think the taking over of the turnpikes, which are for the most part in good condition, would be a pure waste of money. The sentiment of the people is in favor of the macadamizing of the important dirt roads which would lower taxation, as the state will keep in repair the roads made by the Commission, and give the county 30 or 40 miles more good roads.—Hagerstewn Globe.

BITTINGER.

Fire broke out in the roof of the "cheese house" on Elias Orendorf's farm at this place, last Friday about noon. Neighbors quickly responded to the alarm and the blaze was extinguished before much damage was done. The house was occupied at the time by Adam Snyder and family.

Rev. Alvin Jugel, pastor of the Lutheran church at this place, is attending conference at Fairmont, W. Va., this week.

Mrs. Jacob Peck, an aged widow residing about three miles west of this village, is reported in a critical condition from a complication of diseases.

Jacob Brenneman and family were visiting relatives on the east side of Meadow Mountain last Sunday.

Mrs. Brininger and two sons, of Sunnyside, spent a few days this week at the home of T. J. Lohr near here.

Perry H. Broadwater was visiting friends in the New Germany settlement last Saturday and Sunday.

Miss Ida Ralston was shopping in Jennings last Saturday.

PRESIDENT PUTS QUIETUS ON THIRD TERM

Will Leave United States Next April for Year's Hunt in Africa.

HE WILL GO FOR BIG GAME

Will Enter Dark Continent at Mombasa Four Hundred Miles South of Equator Thence to Mt. Kenia Where Elephant, Rhinoceros, Hippopotamus and Lion are Numerous.

WASHINGTON, D. C. June 9.—Important significance in connection with President Roosevelt's determination against a third term is contained in the admission made today for the first time, that the President is making definite plans to leave the United States in April next year for Africa, where he will spend a year hunting big game. Rumors that Mr. Roosevelt was to leave the country at the conclusion of his term of office have been printed heretofore but when confirmation was sought at the White House the answer has been that no definite conclusion had been reached as to the President's plans.

But today it was stated positively that Mr. Roosevelt, with his son, Kermit, would sail from New York for Cairo in April, 1909—just as soon as the necessary arrangements for the departure could be me made after the 4th of March. It is the desire of the President to bring back at the end of the year from the wilds of Africa specimens of every species of big game to be had on the dark continent. He will visit no other country, it is stated.

The outfit for the expedition will be obtained on reaching Africa. The exact size of the hunting party—number of guides and retainers, animals, etc.,—has not been determined on. The President, however, will take an assortment of arms, which he will require in the variety of hunting comtemplated. This outfit will include guns of the highest power.

During the absence of Mr. Roosevelt in Africa, Mrs. Roosevelt and other members of the family will remain at the family home at Sagamore Hill, Oyster Bay.

The President will enter the Dark Continent at Mombasa, an ancient city on the east coast of Africa 3000 miles north of Cape Town and 400 miles south of the Equator. Thence he expects to work his way northward toward Mt. Kenia, which is the centre of the most famous big game country in the world. The elephant, rhinoceros, hippopotamus, giraffe, lion and many kinds of antelope are numerous. Crocodiles, pythons and cobras abound.

The climate of Africa, as a rule, is not oppressive. On the coastal plains rains are frequent, and there appears to be a little variation in the temperature. On the plateau, generally speaking, the days are hot and the nights cold. Wet seasons are in the spring and autumn. These Presient Roosevelt will avoid by hunting during the dry summer.

The President will also return directly from Africa without stopping in Europe. After reaching Mombasa he will travel north and south as the seasons permit. For several weeks past the President has been engaged in making preparation for the trip. It is said he will take two elephant guns for himself and son, and will carry a first-class hunting outfit.

It is understsod the President, while in Africa, will make a careful study of the habits of animals, and that on his return he will write some magazine articles, and perhaps a book, on his explorations.

HICKS ON HOW TO FORECAST WEATHER.

All You Have to do is to Ascertain The Planets' Influence on The Sun.

The Rev. Irl R. Hicks, St, Louis, was not surprised when he learned that Jim O'Leary, the race horse gambler, had won $10,000 by backing his weather forecasts. He said he had hundreds of letters from men in business life saying they had profited by following the forecasts which he sends broadcast through his publications.

At his home, in Wellston, Mo., on Monday, he explained in part his method and his success during thirty years. He was originally a Methodist Episcopal minister, but the rules of the church made it necessary for him to move every three, years and as this interfered with his astonomical work he abandoned that church and joined the Congregational. He is now a member of the Congregational Association of St. Louis.

All of Hicks' forecasts are based on the positions of the planets, he says, and they are as scientific and simple as the calculation of an eclipse. Without the planets influencing the sun the summers, year by year, would not vary; neither would the winters. Mr. Hicks has calculated, he says just how much influence each planet or combination of planets has on the sun.

O'Leary, according to Mr. Hicks, won his wager by playing a combination of Mars and Venus. Mars exerted influence on the sun from April 7 to31 and Venus from April 15 to May 20. The two planets, working together during that period, caused almost continuous rain. Mars and Venus in combination perturbed the conditions surrounding the sun and rain resulted. This period is just now fading.

Every tornado and storm which during April and May caused great loss of life was forecasted, and the forecast which made O'Leary $10,000 richer was written a year ago.

To show how little he thinks of money, Hicks says that a Boston syndicate, with $10,000,000 capital, sent an agent to him to tender him a share in its grain business if he would give it his exclusive service. He declined.

A Boy's Surprise.

At the time of which I am speaking I owned a dog, called Watch, who was my constant companion, and who had never up to that time met his match. So that with the old long long rifle, the dog, and such a good opinion of my own fighting qualities, I was not a bit frighting when I ran afoul of my first wildcat. I found him in an oak tree, at what we called the stone quarry; the quarry had never been worked to any extent, but the stone lay in ledges, of which there were four or five, and on each ledge there was five or six feet of smooth and level surface. Then it was four or five feet of a drop to the next ledge, and so on down. The oak tree in which the cat had taken refuge grew at top of the highest ledge, and when standing upon the ledge I was within thirty feet of the cat, which was on a limb directly over the ledge on which I stood.

Making sure that Watch saw the cat, and was ready for business, I pulled up old Kentucky, took aim at the place where his heart ought to have been and blazed away. The cat went up into the air, and came down directly upon old Watch, and I chuckled to think what would happen to that cat when Watch got a grab at him. But for some unaccountable reason Watch failed to get his hold, was knocked head over heels, and then the cat came my way, striking me on the left breast and shoulder, knocking me clear off that ledge and down upon the next one, the cat going over with me and disappearing in a hole in the rocks.—Forest and Stream.

CURIOUS FACTS ABOUT MONEY

First Coinage Was Made 895 B. C.—Iron and Lead Currency.

While the first actual coinage of money is attributed to Pheidon, king of Argos in 895 B. C., it must not be supposed that there had not existed a keen appreciation of the value and use of money for centurres previous to the introduction of coinage. The ancient Egyptians had a gold and silver standard of currency and their money was in the form of gold and silver ornaments, rings and nuggets, the purchasing value of which depended on their weight.

The Greeks improved somewhat on this system by first marking the weight on gold and silver nuggets so that it would no longer be necessary to reweigh them every time they were to be used for the purpose of exchange or trade. Then, says the New York World, came the introduction of gold, silver and copper nuggets of graded uniform sizes and values. The next step was the moulding and stamping of discs made from the precious metals. Some of these first coins were enormous, the idea apparently being to discourage the greedy from attempting to accumulate and carry around too many of them. There were copper coins as large as dinner plates. While the idea was based on excellent motives, it had to give way before the demand for smaller and more convenient forms of currency, and the giant pennies soon dwindled in size to meet the popular demand.

The earliest trace of the use of gold as money is to be found in the pictures of the ancient Egyptians, weighing in scales heaps of gold and silver. There is no actual record, however, that these rings were what may be termed coins with a fixed value.

Iron, judging from the statement of Aristotle, was once extensively employed as currency. Lead has also served as money. In fact it still does in Burmah.

Copper has been more widely employed as money than either of the two last mentioned metals. The early Hebrew coins were chiefly composed of it, while down to 269 B. C. the sole Roman coinage was an alloy of copper.

Tin money was once used in England, probably on account of the rich tin mines of Cornwell. Early English coinage contained much of this tin money, principally in the form of farthings and halfpence.

Silver formed the basis for the early Greek coins and was introduced in Rome in 269 B. C. Mediaeval money was principally composed of silver.

The only other metals for money are platinum and nickel. The former was coined for a short time by the Russian Government and then given up as unsuitable. The latter is used as an alloy and in this country for the 5-cent piece familiarly referred to as a nickel.

Comed money was first used on the Continent of Europe twenty-five years before the Christian era. It was in copper and silver. The gold was not coined there till the eleventh century, and the money did not receive the round form to which we are accustomed until the lapse of another hundred years or so.

The oldest coin in the United States is owned by a southern collector. It was minted about the year 700 B. C. in Aegina. The design in high relief represents a tortoise crawling across the face of the piece.

The Swiss were the first to date the coinage. They introduced the dated coin 400 years ago, and the style was universally adopted within a very short time.

The coin of the smallest value ever issued is the "mite," so called, such as the widow of the Bible story contributed to the poor. Its shape was hexagonal, and its face value one-fiftieth of a cent. Five thousand "mites" are the equivilent in value of one American dollar.

Probably the queerest coins in the world are the roundish, irregular lumps of silver used in Siam. They vary in size from a walnut to a buckshot, according to the value represented.

All kinds of guesses have been made as to the number of one-dollar bills that would be required to equal the weight of a five-dollar gold piece. The guesses range as a rule from about 50 to 500. And when a humorist in the subtreasury asked a visitor which he would prefer, all the five-dollar gold pieces he could lift or the same weight in one-dollar bills, the visitor immeniately votes for bills, imagining as he does that the proportion will be abont ten to one in favor of one-dollar bills as against gold. As a matter of fact, there is very little difference between weight of one five-dollar gold piece and five one-dollar bills. To be exact, just six and a half bills will balance the five-dollar gold piece.

Wild Horses Escape.

Several efforts have been made to capture three bands of wild horses feeding in the neighborhood of Kit Carson.

Among the group that runs wild about twenty miles north of the town are said to be a powerful horse and an equally handsome mare that would make a team worth about $400. A huge sorrel stallion with a blazed face, a tail that reaches the ground and a heavy, flowing mane is the leader of the band and is said to be so wary that up to date all attempts to run down any member of the group has resulted in failure.

Whenever a man appears on the horizen the stallion sounds the alarm and starts the band off in the other direction, led by a small roan bronco. The stallion himself brings up the rear, snapping at the mares to make them run faster, and if too hard pushed he will stride off by himself.

The country where the band roams is known as the Little and Big Springs section, and the farmers in that vicinity are watching their own horses closely to keep them from joining the wild herd. A domesticated horse is often coaxed away by a band of wild ones and in a few days is as wild as the rest.

There is said to be another band led by a big brown stallion, about twenty miles south of Kit Carson, and a third led by a bay not quite so far off. Some of the horses have brands while others have not. —Denver Republican.

Took No Chances.

Edware McIntyre, a Minnesota young man, has set an example of combined patience, endurance and foxiness that it would be hard to match. An abandoned homestead near Estevan, Saskatchewan, was thrown open to entry, and animated was the scramble therefor. McIntyre took pains to be the last inquirer at the land office on the day previous to that set for the filing. Then he stationed himself on a chair in the corridor, with his hand on the knob of the land office door. And there he stayed till the office door opened in the morning, a vigil of seventeen hours. Many others had gathered from all directions to get a chance at the homestead, but McIntyre was the winner. Whenever western Canadians want to be shown a trick or two let them apply to Gopher genius.—St. Paul Dispatch.

How to Hold Body Correctly.

When the body is being held correctly in a standing attitude, the main weight is on the balls of the feet, not on the heels or toes. The chest and the head are held up well, though the latter is not to be confounded with throwing the chin out. I have seen some women thrust their chins forward evidently believing they were holding their head well. This is an error, for holding the head correctly draws the chin a trifle without allowing it to droop.

Survival of Republican Government Is the Issue.

By WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON, Secretary of the American Free Trade League.

WE should discard the term "tariff reform" because slippery and evasive, not to be used when words are half battles. Since the British protectionists have adopted the same cry to dissemble their purpose it is doubly discredited. In both countries it serves TO SHELTER THE ENEMIES OF COMMERCIAL FREEDOM. The only efficiency of American tariff reform has been to block the way. We may reform habits and characters, but not theft, arson or murder.

For what end is the PROTECTIVE SYSTEM OF GRAFT fastened upon the nation? That we may have honest service rendered to the people? The tariff is not a soil out of which honesty grows. We cannot say of its products that "honor rooted in dishonor" stands. It is dishonor rooted in ignorance and credulity, a rank weed overrunning the land.

The whole burdensome system of protection yielded to the government the past fiscal year two hundred million dollars less than the sum squandered on war expenditure alone, army, navy and pensions. Every dollar raised from the necessities of the people through the suppression of natural industries and the artificial support of wasteful ones has been flung into the great caldron of war, whose POISONOUS FUMES STIFLE THE HUMANITY, THE COMMON SENSE AND THE CHRISTIANITY OF THE NATION.

THE TARIFF REVENUE INEQUITABLY EXTORTED FROM AMERICAN CONSUMERS IS BUT A FRACTION OF THE VASTLY GREATER SUM TAKEN BY THE TARIFF BENEFICIARIES, ACCORDING TO MY PROTECTION AUTHORITY, MR. MILES—A TOTAL GRAFT OF TEN BILLION DOLLARS SINCE THE ENACTMENT OF THE DINGLEY BILL. IT STAGGERS EVEN THE FREE TRADER TO CONCEIVE THE HUMAN WOE CAUSED TO THE PEOPLE OF THIS COUNTRY BY SUCH A DIVERSION FROM THE POCKETS OF LABOR TO THOSE OF PLUNDER.

A party that presented such an indictment against its opponent, pressing it earnestly upon the intelligence of the voters, could sweep the country. THE VICTIMS DO NOT UNDERSTAND IT. When spoliators largely control the sources of public information and the organs of opinion, how easy to deceive and befog! We need an army of reformers with the power of explanation and the patience to endure, with no ambitious motives and the courage to speak the truth, though it blisters and burns. Only CRUSADES OF ENLIGHTENMENT avert revolutions of force, for which the danger signals are now set.

Without exaggeration we face an epoch dramatically historical. Its issues are more comprehensive than those involved in the civil war. Thoughtful observers are comparing the impelling forces of today with those of the last fifty years of the Roman republic and the earlier years of the empire. It is not a question of party supremacy confronting us, merely involving a change of officials and laws which can easily be reversed when public opinion demands. We are in a region of larger issues. THE SURVIVAL OF REPUBLICAN GOVERNMENT IS IN THE BALANCE, and confirmation of bastard imperial policies is urged upon the people of the United States. It is a question of class rule against the people's rule. "Under which king, Benzonian? Speak or die!"

Measured by years, it is not a far cry to the Cleveland days. Measured by events, the distance seems a century. Never before has the VAST POWER VESTED IN THE PRESIDENT been so arbitrarily exercised. Never has the unconsulted nation been committed to such momentous departures from its avowed principles. Never has the control of the legislative branches been so concentrated—in the senate by the trusts, in the house by the despotism of the speaker and committees. Never have so many important questions been decided by the bare majority in the supreme court. And this is not a record of Russian methods.

THE GENESIS OF THESE DEPARTURES FROM DEMOCRATIC IDEALS IS FOUND IN THE TARIFF, MOTHER OF TRUSTS, WHOSE PROGENY THE GOVERNMENT THREATENS WHILE IT DARE NOT TOUCH THE PROLIFIC SOURCE. TO SUCH A MONSTROUS SIZE HAS THE TINY TARIFF BOUNTY FOR INFANT INDUSTRIES GROWN! IT OVERCLOUDS THE LAND.

Stick to the Traditions of 1776.

By JOHN A. JOHNSON, Governor of Minnesota.

TODAY there are those who for the purpose of expediency favor A NEW FEDERALISM in order that the country may take a more prominent place among the nations of the world.

I SAY THAT, IF WE STICK TO THE TRADITIONS OF 1776, THE WORLD WILL RESPECT THIS NATION.

When we took Hawaii and the Philippines we were told that those people were not fit for self government. That has been the cry for years and years, not because it is true, but because THOSE WHO ARE IN POWER WANT MORE POWER.

I do not speak of any officer or any particular person, but we have apparently come to a time when the constitution is not good enough.

In Defense of the Supreme Court

By President ADRIAN H. JOLINE of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad.

IT is fortunate that there is one great bulwark given to us by the founders of our republic to protect us against the tide which would engulf us with all its scum and foam.

I mean the supreme court of the United States, which has within the past few months proclaimed again and again THE TRIUMPH OF LAW OVER LAWLESSNESS, the victory of reason over folly, the supremacy of right over wrong, and which from the foundation of our government has stood like a rock between the hosts of ignorance, passion and perversity and the army of those who built up this country into a great and prosperous nation.

JONES TRAVELS ON.

Reaches Huckleberry Hill After a Tramp of Fourteen Miles.

LOVE IS HIS LECTURE THEME

No More Sentiment About It Today Than Buying a Brickyard or Trading Horses, Declares Q. Hope—The Old Fashioned Kind For Him.

[Copyright, 1908, by T. C. McClure.]

"Ladies and Gentlemen of Huckleberry Hill—I arrived in your midst only two hours ago after a walk of fourteen miles along the railroad track from Spoonersville. I had only time to tack up a single notice on the door of the blacksmith shop to the effect that the celebrated Q. Hope Jones would deliver his lecture this evening, and yet I see before me most of the inhabitants of this enterprising and romantically situated burg. The receipts at the door are only 30 cents, but I am no sordid wretch. I love money only because it buys me a piece of johnnycake and a couple of fried sausages when the flesh is weak and demands sustenance. My one sole object in life is to make the world brighter and better, and when I have left a town behind me with its people singing new songs of gladness I feel amply repaid for any sacrifices I have made.

"NERO FIDDLED WHILE ROME WAS BURNING."

"I see before me seven men and nine women with sober, serious faces. There have been mighty changes in the world mentally and physically since you were young. It is one of those mental changes I am going to speak of tonight. In our desire for something new, in our leaving old things behind us, in our ambition to improve on the ways of our forefathers, we have committed a grievous error. We have left old fashioned love behind us and adopted something that is a combination of business and formality. Today we love and marry by machinery. There is little more sentiment about it than in buying a brickyard or trading horses. He that mentions love among the sentiments is sneered at. The man that loves or thinks he loves is an object of ridicule. The change has been gradual, but it has been sure. It has done more than any one other thing to make the world hard hearted and wicked and to bring those sentiments that follow love into disrepute.

"Alexander the Great was rich enough to have made the greatest corner in corn this world ever saw and brainy enough to have organized a trust and jumped the price of flour 100 per cent. He did nothing of the kind. He loved. He loved in the old fashioned way, and there was no room for speculation in his mind. He courted Mrs. Alexander in the way the Lord intended all men to court for all time to come. He didn't love her for the herd of cattle and the cash in bank her father had, but for her own sweet self. She was in his mind day and night. He could scarcely wait for his sparking nights to come.

"And the girl was actuated by love alone. She wasn't marrying him for the rhino or a place in society. She blushed when she heard his footsteps. She was shy and coy when they sat down together on some chair. The thought never came to her that he might be great some day and that the name of 'Mrs. Alex the Great' might be engraved on her visiting cards. Just love—just old fashioned love! And it was that love that made him great, that made him a conqueror. Love was with him when he went into battle, and it was love that helped to lick the other fellow out of his boots.

Franklin and Love.

"Does any one in this audience imagine that Benjamin Franklin would have amounted to what he did without old fashioned love behind him? Up to the time he met the girl who later became his wife he was simply sloshing around. He had done no playing with lightning, and he had not written one of the good things in Poor Richard's Almanack. He was thinking of opening a grocery when he fell in love. He didn't sit down in cold blood and figure out how much cash that girl was going to bring him. He was simply filled up to the chin with love. He whispered it to the trees of the forest, and he sang it to the babbling brooks. When the day came that she called him Ben and he called her Polly they were the happiest couple in the state that Quay afterward came to carry around in his vest pocket. They drank buttermilk out of the same glass. They ate strawberries and cream with the same spoon. They were not ashamed of their love.

"And what did the result of that love do for a country—for the whole world? You know and I know. Without love to incite ambition Benjamin would have opened a one horse grocery and sold molasses and codfish and had a gang of old liars sitting around the stove every evening.

"The world was already beginning to sneer at love when George Washington got his eye on the widow Custis, but he showed his independence by falling in love in the old fashioned way. The widow liked him at once for it. They didn't sit as stiff as pokers in their chairs on opposite sides of the room and talk about the poets. If I know anything about George, he was holding her hand after three or four meetings, and if I know anything about widows Mrs. Custis wasn't pulling very hard to get away. It may be hard for you to imagine Washington playfully pulling her ear and smoothing down her raven hair and calling her 'birdie,' but we all know that he must have done so. Those things belong to old fashioned love, and that's the way he was loving. What a change in his life marriage and love brought! What a hustle he got on him! Had it been today, under the new system, he might have possibly reached the state senate, but he would have stopped there.

"How many divorces took place in America a hundred years ago? Not ten a year. How many take place per year these days? Tens of thousands. Why? Because old fashioned love has been relegated along with other old fashioned things. The love of today is simply a business affair. The sparking is a travesty on the real thing. It's like drawing off two-thirds of a barrel of new cider and filling the space up with water. People marry without even having kissed.

"You have read of Nero. Some of the histories try to make him out a bad man, but they are prejudiced. He gave his enemies the flipflap, and they never got over trying to blacken his reputation. Nero loved. He loved in the right way. At the age of twenty-two it was doubtful whether he would become a ward heeler or a one horse lawyer. Love decided his fate and his future. He met a girl at a candy pull in Rome and fell head over heels in love with her. She reciprocated. Her governor was down on Nero and talked about chains and bolts and bars but he got left. Nero went right at it to win that girl, and he got her. There were twenty other fellers after her at the same time, but he shoved them off the sidewalk and gathered his birdie to his arms. Then he began to climb the ladder of fame. Love pushed him from rung to rung, and at last he reached the top.

While Nero Fiddled.

"You may read that Nero fiddled while Rome was burning. So he did, but he didn't know how big the fire was, and he was fiddling the air of a love song to Mrs. Nero. It wasn't his business to run with any of the engines.

"We now come down to my own case. I have saved it for the last. Before I fell in love I knew that there were two ways to do it—the old fashioned and the new fashioned way. I selected the former. When I met the right party I let all the emotions of the old fashioned love thrill my being. I didn't clap on porous plasters, as is the fashion now, to keep the thrills down. I wanted that girl for herself alone and not for her father's hogs. We nestled up to each other. We held hands. I fed her popped corn. We paid no attention to the clock, but loved on and on and on, and I stayed for breakfast in the morning. I ran every other young man out of the county and married her, and love has made me what I am. If I had loved in the new fashioned way I should now be a tin peddler or a lightning rod man.

"I say to the farmer's hired man in front of me, I say to the hired girl on the back seat, I say to all unmarried people in this land of ours, be progressive, be up to date, be at the head of the procession in all things but one. Love, court and marry in the old fashioned way. Nothing new can improve on it. Heaven pointed out the road to Adam and Eve, and you that walk in it shall know not scandal and divorce."

The Symptoms.

Now Annabel is plunged in thought.
Her forehead wears a frown.
She hardly hears me when I speak.
She journeys off to town.
I've caught her posing more than once
Before the mirror, too,
And trying bows against her hair—
Pink, purple, green and blue.

She leaves the new piano shut,
The magazines unread,
And sits for hours with silent lips
And sadly drooping head.
But I am not alarmed, because
I know the symptoms that Appear each year when she begins
To plan her Easter hat.

Uniform Marriage Law to Control the Divorce Evil.

By HENRY C. POTTER, Protestant Episcopal Bishop of New York.

A UNIFORM marriage law is more important than a uniform divorce law. The sane regulation of marriage will in a large measure control the divorce evil.

THE VERY EXISTENCE OF THE NATION DEPENDS UPON THE PRESERVATION OF THE HOLY INSTITUTION OF MATRIMONY AND THE IDEAL HOME LIFE. THE REGULATION OF MARRIAGE IS FAR MORE IMPORTANT THAN THE GOVERNMENTAL REGULATION OF THE CORPORATIONS.

In many respects our laws upon marriage are more crude than those of any other great nation of the world.

With a record of some 50,000 divorces a year we lead any other nation in proportion of divorces to population. The law should so safeguard the sacred institution of matrimony that we would be spared the disgrace and scandal of the SILLY SECRET MARRIAGES that are of almost daily occurrence in this country.

While the state may and indeed should step in and regulate marriage in many wholesome ways, yet happiness or unhappiness, honor or dishonor, depends chiefly on each individual. The great lesson to be learned by each of us is to perform our duty and our obligations and to do both of these things well in the sight of God.

THE SHIRKING OF THE RESPONSIBILITIES OF PARENTHOOD IS THE CAUSE OF MUCH UNHAPPINESS, NOT TO SPEAK OF ILL HEALTH. IN DOING THIS THE PEOPLE "KNOW NOT WHAT THEY DO." NATURE'S LAWS CANNOT BE TAMPERED WITH IN ANY ARTIFICIAL MANNER WITH IMPUNITY BY EITHER THE MAN OR THE WOMAN. MORE RIGID LAWS REGARDING THIS SHOULD BE PASSED. IF THE PEOPLE COULD BE INSTRUCTED IN THIS ALL IMPORTANT MATTER, THE DECREASE IN THE NUMBER OF NERVOUS PROSTRATIONS, SOFTENING OF THE BRAIN, INSANITY AND EVEN CONSUMPTION WOULD BE VERY MARKED.

HEALTHY COUPLES SHOULD HAVE LARGE FAMILIES. The "one child" family is better than none at all, but a single child is unfortunate for the child itself as well as for the parents. Usually the one child grows up to be selfish, vain and with exaggerated if not perverted ideas of life. Where there are one or more brothers or sisters to sympathize with, to make sacrifices for and to love it makes better rounded and sweeter characters.

Good Morals Requisite To Good Business.

By OSCAR S. STRAUS, Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

THE first requisite of good permanent business conditions is GOOD MORALS—not one kind of morals for the farmer who drives his cart of produce to market and another kind of morals for the railroad which brings the products of the farms and factories from distant points.

EQUALITY OF OPPORTUNITY AND RIGHTS IS AS NECESSARY ON THE ONE HIGHWAY AS ON THE OTHER. NO UNREASONABLE CONDITIONS OR RESTRAINTS MUST BE PLACED UPON EITHER.

There are combinations which promote trade and combinations which restrain trade. To check both is harmful; TO PERMIT BOTH IS MORE HARMFUL.

To adjust our laws to preserve corporate industrial and individual right, and BY ALL MEANS INDIVIDUAL RIGHTS, and to curb wrongs, whether corporate or individual, is of the highest concern not only to commerce, but to the stability of the commonwealth.

A Humorous View of Happiness

By J. ADAM BEDE, Congressman From Minnesota.

HAPPINESS means the uplifting of civilization. Each year we meet new obstacles, and when they have been overcome we have obtained a new lead to happiness. Our comfort and happiness lie in the mastery of obstacles. And I might say that it is not the wealthy class that enjoys the most happiness. It is THE GREAT MIDDLE CLASS of this great country.

The women of the country today enjoy more happiness than did those of a century ago. This is the result of THE MASTERY OF OBSTACLES. The women have more time to join the Daughters of the American Revolution or to start a revolution of their own. The men also enjoy more privileges, and privileges constitute happiness.

It has not been so long ago when a law was passed prohibiting the sale of whisky in the capitol at Washington and on the Indian reservations. The lawmakers evidently assumed that drunken Indians and congressmen were dangerous. Perhaps they were right. But it only shows the march of progress, which emphasizes happiness.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT IS SUCH AN ADVOCATE OF PROGRESSIVENESS THAT HE HAS EVEN CHANGED THE NATIONAL BIRD FROM THE EAGLE TO THE STORK. EVIDENTLY HE ACTS UPON THE THEORY THAT THE EAGLE MERELY SCREAMS, WHILE THE STORK DELIVERS THE GOODS.

Does Honesty Lead To the Poorhouse?

By WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE, Kansas Editor and Author.

I MUST deprecate the present lax methods of charity. Those who need it don't get it.

The millionaires have not returned to the common people what they took away from them. And under the present scheme of government these millionaires are fostered. The rich get richer and the poor get poorer without any doubt. There is an uneven distribution of wealth that TENDS TO MAKE THE POORHOUSE THE GENERAL DESTINATION OF THE HONEST MAN.

Miss Dobson's Chance.

By Katharine Kingsley Crosby.

Copyright, 1908, by P. C. Eastment.

Her name was Dobson, but she intended to change it as soon as possible, not in any conventional way, like a process of law or getting married, however, but simply by going upon the stage. In pursuance of this plan she haunted the office of the theatrical manager, Malcom Sturgis, far up on the top floor of one of the older office buildings in that part of the city which the casual shopper never sees.

The elevator boy got to know her very well. Jim was a susceptible youth, and when on one of her ascensions Miss Dobson chanced to drop the circlet of blue ribbon which tied her left sleeve above a dimpled elbow he made a love knot of it and decorated the controlling lever. His passengers, if they noticed it at all, doubtless ascribed it to some hidden aesthetic yearnings.

From all this you may guess that Miss Dobson was pretty, which was very true, and, moreover, dainty and girlish, which does not always follow, with wide gray eyes and a glint of gold in her soft brown hair.

She had a reserve of temperament and dramatic power which her complexion and bearing quite belied, however, and it may have been this which made it so hard to get a hearing in the office above stairs.

Jim had carried her back and forth now for over a month and noticed that her color was beginning to fade, a fact which proved it to be her own at least, but also suggested that her ambition was slowly consuming her with its white heat.

He knew her type, for he had seen it before, and it never gave up. But this girl was younger and fresher and—well, different, Jim thought. He was a chivalrous chap, and he lay awake nights thinking how he might help her. He wondered if it would do any good to speak to Mr. Sturgis, the manager, about her some morning.

Malcom Sturgis had given the boy a five dollar bill the previous Christmas and always passed the time of day when he was not thinking about something else, but somehow his manner did not invite liberties.

A second month passed while Jim still pondered over the problem, and Miss Dobson's neat black suit was wearing shiny at the seams in spite of careful brushings. Then the end came. It was late in November, when the days are very short and dusk falls early. Miss Dobson had been waiting for the time when the door of the great man's office should open and she be bidden to enter.

So she had waited all these weary weeks, watching others pass in and out and reading on their faces what their fortunes had been. In spite of the despair which she so often saw her own hope never faltered, for she was sure of herself and her powers.

For this reason she was still sitting there, though it was after 6 and everybody had gone except the manager. Suddenly the door opened, and Malcom Sturgis hurried out and crossed the room into the corridor outside, where the elevator was waiting. The girl sprang up and followed, and the door clanged upon them, the two of them, and Jim.

If it hadn't been for Jim—well, failure does not make an interesting story, most people think, for Miss Dobson was just gathering her wits for a third appeal to the august man for a hearing on the morrow when—the car stopped.

The boy juggled with the levers, and the elevator went up a few inches, stopped again, then shot down another story, where it stopped definitely and so suddenly that it fairly bounced.

Instead of her speech Miss Dobson exclaimed earnestly, "Gracious!" and the manager inquired: "Jove! What's the matter?" To this Jim, not Jove, replied truthfully enough that "she" had never acted like that before, and he guessed the power must have given out.

"Well, open the door, can't you?" demanded Sturgis impatiently.

"Sorry, sir, but we are between floors," replied Jim, who had so arranged it.

"Where is the watchman?"

"Doesn't come till 7, sir."

So there was no help for it, and Malcom tried to take it philosophically. He turned his attention to the girl. Where had he seen her before? Oh, yes, she was one of those little stage-struck things whom he had been trying to tire out. He was in for it now, though.

"Please, sir," said Miss Dobson bravely; "please, Mr. Sturgis, may I do some of my parts now? It—it may serve to pass the time while we are waiting."

The manager expected to glower at this bold request, but the man in him smiled instead. He, too, noticed a difference, and her pluck appealed to him. He would try to let her down gently.

"What experience have you had?" he inquired.

"Only in college," she replied, "but listen."

It was a tiny stage, that little car, hung between heaven and earth, with darkness everywhere beyond the reach of its single incandescent—a tiny stage, but her audience forgot it in the glamour of the scenes she spread before them.

She recreated old parts so freshly that the great manager could only wonder how else they might be played. Ancient and modern, from "She Stoops to Conquer" to "Alice-Sit-by-the-Fire" and the subtleties of "Candida," tragedy and comedy and problem—she forgot her audience completely till an involuntary "Bully!" from Jim, who could contain himself no longer, brought her to herself.

"Where did you learn to do it?" gasped Malcom Sturgis when Miss Dobson stood somewhat abashed in her own personality.

"Why, I've always done it," she stammered. "Do you think—do you think I will do?"

"Yes," he answered briefly, "I think you will. Meet me here at 10 tomorrow to talk over the contract."

"Do you mean for an engagement?" Her eyes were wide with astonishment.

"For an engagement," he said, and at the look of gratitude she gave him he suddenly conceived the possibility of a secondary meaning to the phrase. Aloud he only asked, "You haven't told me your name yet, Miss"—

"Dobson," she replied, adding hurriedly, "but I can change it if you think another would be better."

"I have one in mind which might do better, I confess, but we will talk that over another time. This has been a very lucky trip for me."

It seemed to Jim that matters had gone far enough, and as though suddenly inspired he turned his lever in a way which sent the car quickly to the street floor. As they passed out Miss Dobson gave his hand a little squeeze and whispered, "I'll never forget this, Jim," and the manager slipped a bill into the same receptacle.

Jim grinned.

"Shouldn't wonder if I'd made a match as well as a star," he thought. "Not a bad day's work that!"

Dislike Curly Haired Men.

It is not generally known that there is a well defined prejudice against curly haired men when it comes to choosing a jury. When asked to explain the objection to curly haired men a prominent lawyer said:

"When I was just starting life my legal mentor inculcated that idea very forcibly into me. He said that curly haired men almost invariably had been the pampered darlings of their parents and in their youth had been so accustomed to having their own way that they had grown up in the belief that everybody on earth was wrong except themselves. In this way the seeds of opposition were sown, and as men they made it a point to disagree with everybody and everything. If every other man on a jury voted one way they would vote the other. They usually are as stubborn as the day is long; hence a curly haired man never goes on a jury if I can prevent it."—Exchange.

The Camel's Eye.

The Nile is essentially a river of silence and mystery. Even the camels turn their beautiful soft eyes upon you as if you were intruding upon their silence and reserve. Never were the eyes in a human head so beautiful as a camel's. There is a limpid softness, an appealing plaintiveness, in their expression which drag at your sympathies like the look in the eyes of a hunchback. It means that with your opportunities you might have done more with your life. Your mother looks at you that way sometimes in church when the sermon touches a particularly raw nerve in your spiritual makeup. I always feel like apologizing when a camel looks at me.—Exchange.

Relativity of Knowledge.

The "relativity of knowledge" means that you can know things only as they are related to your faculties. The thing in itself and apart from the way it appears to us is unknown and unknowable. Absolute knowledge is out of the question. In a word, we know appearances, but never the reality behind the appearances; the shadows, but never the substance itself. In fine, the gist of the doctrine of the "relativity of knowledge" is that our so called knowledge is only phantasmagoria. We know the appearance, but we have no means of deciding whether the appearance is true or false.—New York American.

40 State vs George Griffin; procuring liquor for minors; plea of guilty; Renninger—Thayer.

32 State vs George R. Long; liquor to minors; before the court; guilty and fined $50 and costs; Renninger—Peddicord.

A murder case removed from Allegany county is set for Friday. The probability is that court will last all of next week.

ABUSE OF LAWS BY MERCHANTS

Postoffice Department Intends to Put Stop to Practice on Rural Routes.

Information having reached the Postoffice Department of certain methods by which the postal law in regards to mailable and unmailable merchandise on rural routes have been evaded, rural carriers are permitted to deliver express matter for hire, for patrons of their routes, unmailable merchandise weighing in excess of four pounds. An example of the abuse of this privilege is that of a merchant who sent out by rural carriers as mail matter a pair of shoes to which he added a bag of salt to make the package overweigh and to avoid paying postage so that the carrier might carry the package for him.

In view of such abuses, Fourth Assistant Postmaster General DeGraw has issued the following statement:

"All packages of merchandise to be sent out by rural carriers by merchants of the town should be presented at postoffices for inspection, and in case it is found that extraneous matter not ordered by the patrons has been added to any mailable matter or package for the purpose of making such package of matter unmailable, postmasters should refuse to permit the carrier to carry any such matter or package for hire outside of the mails, and rural carriers should not receive and mail matter from patrons as unmailable matter for hire which they suspect has been made unmailable by such devices as adopted by the merchant referred to."

Orphan Court Proceeding.

The Orphans Court were in session this week and passed the first and final account of Elizabeth Englehart, guardian of Alvin C. Englehart; second account of Jacob and C. A. Beachy, Executors of Aaron Beachy, ratified. E. C. Burkholder appointed admr. of the estate of Conrad Burkholder.

Ice Cream and Strawberry Festival.

The Ladies' Aid Society of the Presbyterian church of Oakland will conduct an ice cream and strawberry festival in the Litzinger store room on Second street this (Thursday) evening to which all are cordially invited. In addition to ice cream and strawberries, cake, home made candy and other delicacies will be on sale.

GEN. ROBERT E. LEE.

A Tribute to the Southern General in a Memorial Day Address.

The followng tribute was paid to Gen. R. E. Lee in the closing words of the address delivered by Mr. C. M. Miller at Deer Park on Memorial Day and handed to us for publication by 'Squire W. D. Hoye, Deer Park:

But out of the strees of those turbulent yet not inglorious times, one Southern soldier emerged without a fellow. Brilliant in every strategy upon the chess-board of military genius in a four years' contention of the most powerful armies that ever clashed upon the soil of this Continent, to him no rival is in sight. Idolized in the South and respected in the North, he rode through the momentous and altering vicissitudes of the war between the States from the beginning to Appomattox. Sheathing his gleaming blade in that Sunday morning's capitulation of his wasted army, without a murmur he stepped from the rank of military supremacy to that of subordinate oitizenship and walked the the ways of civil life reaching up and partaking of only those fruits that grow and ripen but upon the topmost boughs of the great trees of better things.

The drama of his life closed in the shade of Virginia's lofty mountain peaks towering over the valleys as this Confederate soldier towered above the fog ranging over the human plain.

His splendidly poised character was subjected to the most exacting test in both extremes of fortune without disturbance to its equanimity in either.

When the rancour of strife shall have disappeared, as eventually all embitterments must under the effacing hand of time, and the sunlight of merit sifts through the breaking clouds over the historian's pen, English speaking people of the world will behold him looming up from the long night of 1861-1865 a star resplendent in flash and flight.

"But Lee has a thousaud graves
In a thousand hearts, I ween;
And tear-drops fall from our eyes in waves.
That will keep his memory green.
Ah, Muse! you dare not claim
A nobler man then he.
Nor noble man hath less of blame,
Nor blameless man hath purer name,
Nor purer man hath grander fame,
Nor fame—another Lee."

HOWE'S GREAT LONDON CIRCUS.

The Part the Clown Plays in a Big Circus a Feature in its Success.

The clowning part of a circus program is not understood by the outsider. There are times during the show when there is not a clown in sight, and then in the next instant the the hippodrome track will almost swarm with them. They seem to spring from the ground and they will disappear as quickly. The presence of the clown is appropriate and is desired with most circus acts, and again there are some features which would be ruined if they were allowed to be clowned.

Clowning is a fine art. The best clowns are born, not made.

When intermingling with citizens on the streets they would not be suspected of being wearers of the loose robe of a fool, but when they appear in the circus rings with their makeups or they laugh and the crowd laugh with them. They help to unload, temporarily, at least, the cares from the minds of thousands of people. These men who appear so dignified and quiet upon the streets and out of the circus ring would never be picked out as being clowns on the road, but they are.

The work of the clowns with the Howe's London Show is not the same day after day, as they take delight in springing new jokes and new tricks upon their co-workers, which entertains the members of the troupe as well as the audience.

Howe's Show will be here Saturday, June 20.

GORTNER.

Revs. C. J. Fricke, of Michigan, and John Slabach, of Texas, delivered interesting sermons at the Union church last Sunday afternoon and evening.

Merchant Lewis Gortner and son Alvah, of Oakland were calling on Mrs. G. J. Brenninger Sunday.

Messrs Eli Brenneman, Charlie, Georg and Jacob Beitzel, of Bittinger, and Daniel Lichty, of Gortner, left here on laft Thursday evening for Kansas, and will make a tour of the far western states before they return to old Garrett again.

Contractor Gibson and son completed the substructure of the Cherry Creek bridge on last Monday and on the same day Mr. Bert May, of the York Bridge Works, York, Pa., erected the bridge, after which a crowd of young folks had their pictures taken by a local photographer, I. N. Baker.

P. P. Gortner is busy erecting a large barn for D. J. Slabach.

On account of the dedication of the new Lutheran church at the Red House next Sunday there will be no Sunday school till June 21st, at 10 a. m.

American Women and Foreign Titles.

By the Reverend Dr. ROBERT S. MACARTHUR, Baptist, New York.

RECENT newspaper reports of married troubles between titled foreigners and American women who have become their wives fill the hearts of all true Americans with MINGLED PITY AND HUMILIATION. That some of these marriages are most happy is quite certain. Some of them, without the slightest doubt, are TRUE LOVE MATCHES. There is also political, financial and social gain at times in these international marriages. Some American women have exercised much political influence in Great Britain and in other countries beyond the sea.

Some American women have paid an ENORMOUSLY HIGH PRICE FOR THEIR TITLES. There is a type of Americans fonder of titles than are the people of the old world. Boasting of their DEMOCRATIC ideas, they will do more to secure a foreign title than Europeans would do.

WHAT IS THE PRICE THESE AMERICAN WOMEN AND THEIR AMBITIOUS FATHERS AND MOTHERS ARE WILLING TO PAY FOR TITLES?

Some time ago during a famine in Russia we read that many poor peasants sold their daughters with which to buy bread. This announcement shocked the civilized world. AMERICAN PARENTS HAVE DONE MORE AND WORSE than did these starving peasants. American girls have SOLD their womanhood, their country, their language and their religion for husbands who are peculiarly contemptible cads and altogether worthless, although having ancient titles.

THAT IT IS A MATTER OF SALE AND PURCHASE CANNOT BE DOUBTED. THESE ABOMINABLE TRANSACTIONS BRING THE BLUSH TO THE CHEEK OF EVERY HONORABLE AMERICAN MAN AND WOMAN. RECENT EVENTS IN ENGLAND AND FRANCE ARE A REPROACH TO NOBLE MANHOOD AND TRUE WOMANHOOD ON BOTH SIDES OF THE SEA.

Some of these titled foreigners deserve and receive the contempt of all TRUE American men and women. How can these women so far forget a worthy and religious AMERICAN ancestry as to forswear the religion of their fathers and the country of their own birth?

Bringing the Man And the Land Together.

By T. V. POWDERLY, Chief of the Division of Information, Bureau of Immigration.

THE division of information was organized July 1, 1907, but it is not yet fully established and equipped for successful operation. The object of the division, as set forth in the law creating it, is "TO PROMOTE A BENEFICIAL DISTRIBUTION OF ALIENS admitted into the United States." To beneficially distribute these aliens we should be able to tell them SOMETHING MORE than what the climate is like or what the products and physical characteristics may be.

THEY COME HERE TO EARN A LIVING, THEY WANT WORK, AND TO TELL THEM WHERE TO GO, HOW TO GO, WHAT TO DO WHEN THEY GET THERE, WHAT IT WILL COST TO LIVE, WHAT THE WAGES WILL BE, WHAT THE SCHOOL AND CHURCH FACILITIES ARE AND A FEW OTHER THINGS OF A PRACTICAL NATURE IS WHAT THE DIVISION IS TRYING TO DO AND WILL DO. WE INTEND TO LOCATE AND CLASSIFY EVERY IDLE JOB AWAITING A WILLING MAN OR WOMAN.

At present we are writing farmers, farmers' organizations and farmers' journals, with a view to ascertaining first hand WHERE MEN MAY FIND IDLE ACRES TO CULTIVATE. In two or three years this division will be able to tell where every available acre of land in the United States is located, its productive capacity, whether improved or not, accessibility to lines of transportation and every other thing essential to an understanding of its worth. Then it will so work as to catch the attention of THOSE WHO NEED THIS KIND OF INFORMATION and inspire them with confidence in the reliability of the institution.

The gathering of this information WILL TAKE TIME, but, once the fact is established and understood that the division is in earnest, that it states FACTS, that it keeps continually noting changes in conditions and is hunting up the idle hands, the work will be easy of accomplishment.

Bad Example Set By Society Drinkers.

By the Rev. Dr. CHARLES F. AKED, New York.

DRINKING among American men and women is STEADILY ON THE INCREASE. At least it seems so to me. When I first came to this country in 1893 intoxicants were used very moderately, but in the present day we see them used INCESSANTLY. One would not believe it possible that a country which fourteen years ago was extremely temperate could develop so strong a passion for drinking in so short a time. It is only in the UPPER CLASSES that I perceive this increased use of intoxicants.

WHAT IS CALLED SOCIETY IS SETTING A VERY BAD EXAMPLE FOR ITS POORER BROTHERS. AND IT IS NOT ONLY THE MEN. THE WOMEN, TOO, HAVE BECOME ADDICTED TO THE HABIT. EVERYWHERE YOU WILL SEE REFINED AND SWEET WOMEN DRINKING WITHOUT A THOUGHT AS TO THE EVIL EFFECTS OF THE ALCOHOL OR THE BAD HABITS THEY ARE FALLING INTO.

Young girls, too, no longer regard alcohol as a beverage with horror. They, too, imbibe as freely as their elders. I warn the American woman that THAT WAY MADNESS LIES, for that is the way of destruction, traveled by all the victims that God has sent down to hell.

Hurt in Runaway.

Patrick Griffin, of Deer Park, while engaged in driving a horse attached to a lawn mower at work on the grounds of the Deer Park hotel Tuesday afternoon, was thrown from the machine by the horse becoming frightened and running away. The mower, which is a large iron constructed piece of mechanism, weighing nearly a half a ton, passed over Mr. Griffin, injuring his knee very painfully and bruising him otherwise. He was brought to Oakland on a train and his injuries were dressed by Dr. John E. Legge.

The man Who Makes A STUDY OF HIS APPEARANCE

Is the man who best appreciates the detail of the tailoring we turn out. The workmanship passes without a question, the fit is naturally a matter of course, but the shape we mould into the garments give them a character that finishes them off and makes the satisfaction of the owner complete.

All this is a bid for your next tailoring order. We know we can make you the best clothes you ever wore. We want you to know it. That order is the best and only sure way to settle the question.

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 32. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, JUNE 18 1908. NUMBER 16

DEVELOPMENTS EXPECTED.

it of Civil Engineers and Geologists to This Section Yesterday.

Yesterday a party of civil engineers and geologists, representing various interests in Pittsburg and other cities, was in Oakland and drove from here to Swallow Falls and Muddy Creek Falls, where they inspected the water power owned by the corporation here and controlled by Mr. H. P. Tasker.

What may follow the visit of these gentlemen to Oakland and vicinity is as yet unknown, but it is presumed that developments of our mineral wealth may follow and the construction of an electric line and possibly a steam railway may result.

A Swanton Festival.

In the sober happenings of Swanton Saturday night, June 13th, 1908, should be memorable. Ladies of the United Brethren church and of Anderson chapel combined in an entertainment for a realization of means to reconstruct the fencing about the lots of the two denominations.

Nature lavished her glories over the moon-lit evening in June—

"Sweet as the smiles when fond lovers meet,
And soft as their parting tear."

Such an evening with its inspirations, and the practicing of a week or more of a superior program of excelling interest, fortified the popular anticipation of pleasures at hand. Some while in advance of the announced hour for opening the doors, the floor of the spacious building was crowded with young people from the surrounding community; and, in this instance, the community extended to Oakland and brought three attractions to places in the program and the conduct of the festivities. Music in a variety of forms and melodies filled the gaps between parts and annihilated the tedium of waiting. A just reference to the whole proceedings and to those conspicuous in their progress might cause the printer to lift a deprecating finger and remind us that there are fourteen districts in Garrett applying for space in his columns. But the star of the stage came from a West Virginia firmament, Miss Mollie Miles, who quickly caught every intelligent attention and in[illegible]ayed it at will. To Miss Miles' cultured elocution is added a natural grace of gesture captivating before an appreciative audience.

This feast of song and say was followed by that, perhaps grosser, feast which, like Washington, is first in the hearts of our country men.

Oh! Mr. Editor, you might have dashed your pen in abandonment to the ground and, Judas like, sneaked out to hang yourself, had you seen your correspondent in that Leap-Year festival with so many beauties trooping about him to treat to ice cream and cake, soft beverages and candy, fruits from the Tropics and smiles from the beautiful. But don't feel too badly, perhaps in some lucky day a soothing poultice may come to your own weak side.

RELLIM.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

C. W. Hopkins is manager of the Columbian Hotel, instead of the Lewis livery, as we announced last week.

The Baumgardner cottage, next door to the drug store, has been rented and is now occupied by Mrs. Shaw.

The Allen cottage will be occupied today by Joseph C. Sheehy, Esq., and family of Washington, D. C. They occupied this cottage last season.

Dr. Goucher and daughters are occupying the Goucher cottage, Philadelphia avenue and I streets.

The drug store is now open for business, with Messrs. Gonder, McComas and West, three handsome, efficient and obliging young men, all single, to wait upon customers.

Dr. W. W. Davis preached an able sermon in the M. E. church Sunday evening and will preach in the same church next Sunday morning at 11. Dr. Kirk will probably preach at night.

John Hillis, the noted singing evangelist, has rented the Fullerton cottage and is now here with his family.

Mrs. Taney and family, of Wheeling, W. Va., are in their beautiful cottage on G street.

Miss Eleanor, daughter of Dr. W. W. and Mrs. Davis, who has been attending school in Baltimore city, arrived here yesterday.

GORTNER.

William Schrock and Misses Cora and Savilla Bender, of Grantsville, are among the visitors to this village this week.

Lewis Swartzentruber and Noah Lichty were in the vicinity of Wilson, W. Va., last week where they were engaged in moving a house for Mr. Isaac Abernathy.

Mrs. D. M. Schrock left for Johnstown, Pa., where she will visit relatives for a few weeks.

J. C. Shettler is attending the combined county normal schools at Oakland.

Mrs. S. B. Foreman and children and Mrs. Laura Killius were visiting in this vicinity Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. George Yutzy, of Mt. Lake Park, spent Sunday with relatives here.

Mrs. T. Murphy and daughter Marie, of Keyser, W. Va., are spending a few weeks with her sister, Mrs. P. P. Gortner.

Mrs. Anna Wotring, of Brookside, W. Va., is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Schlossnagle, at present.

DEMOCRATS ARE DEMORALIZED.

Conservatives Against Bryan and Republicans Planning for a Sweep.

The Democratic organization in Maryland is in a demoralized cnndition. The state boss, Senator Smith, is now on the ocean and the party is drifting along. The state convention found it a most difficult task to secure a delegation to Denver, practically every prominent Democrat of standing declined the honor of serving at the prelude to the party funeral in November. Bryan is about as popular with the Maryland Democrats as a red ant at a picnic, The leaders not only regard him as disagreeable but somewhat of a nuisance. It is a notable fact that while certain anti-Bryan men in other states have in the past few days scrambled aboard the Bryan band wagon not a Marylander opposed to the "peerless one" has made an effort to get in touch with the Bryan machine.

These Democrats see other things in the band wagon besides delegates shouting and hurrahing for Bryan. They see two past defeats for the Presidency. They see figures which remind them in 1896 Bryan lost the state by 32,000 majority, and 1900 by 18,000 majority. They see the ghost of Bryan in the campaign of 1904, when he and his friends retaliated for the part played by Cleveland and his friends in the defeat of Bryan in 1896 and in 1900. They see such utterly impracticable ideas as the free coinage of silver, anti-imperialism and government ownership of railroads, all of which and others have been or ought to be consigned to the waste heap.

Is it any wonder then that the conservative Democrats of the state hesitate to climb aboard the band wagon.

The Republicans are harmonious and the state organization looks for a clean sweep in November. Chairman Parran predicts the election of every Republican candidate for Congress. A prominent Republican in discussing the state's outlook said: "With Bryan as the Democratic standard-bearer Maryland will go Republican anywhere from 20,000 to 30,000 majority—in fact, there's no telling how large the majority for Taft will be. I know hundreds of Democrats in the western end of the state who intend to vote the straight Republican ticket. They regard Taft as an ideal candidate and one whose confidence in the future of this country and whose election will once more set the wheels of industry in motion. I speak from personal knowledge because the Democrats I refer to have themselves informed me of their intentions."

In Baltimore city the Republicans expects to roll up a majority for Taft which would be large enough to overcome the normal Democratic majorities in the counties. All the elements in the city are in accord on National politics and if there is a Republican there who will not vote the ticket the leaders are not aware of the fact.

Resolutions of Respect.

Whereas, It has pleased the Almighty to remove from our midst, by death, our esteemed co-laborer and brother, P. C. George Pearson White, of Loch Lynn Heights, who has for many years occupied a prominent rank in our midst, maintaining under all circumstances a character untarnished and a reputation above reproach; and

Whereas, by the irreparable loss that we have sustained it is fit and proper that we manifest our grief and fraternal sympathy for the bereaved widow and family in this their hour of great sorrow;

Therefore, be it resolved by the members of Garrett Lodge No. 113, Knights of Pythias, of Oakland, Maryland, that we extend to our bereaved brother's family our heartfelt sympathy in this the hour of their affliction and grief, and commend them to Him who said: "Call upon me in the time of trouble and I will deliver thee;"

And be it further resolved, That in the death of Bro. George P. White we have sustained the loss of a brother whose fellowship it was an honor and a pleasure to enjoy; that we bear willing testimony to his many virtues, to his unquestioned probity and stainless life, and pray that the Infinite Goodness may bring speedy relief to the burdened hearts of the sorrowing family and inspire them with the consolation that Hope in futurity and Faith in God give even in the shadow of the tomb;

And be it further resolved, That our charter be draped for the period of thirty days, that a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of our lodge and that a copy be forwarded to the bereaved family.

TRAINING SCHOOL WORK.

Combined Normals of the County In a Three Week's Session Here.

[REPORTED BY MISS MATTAAE M. RILEY]

The Training School for Teachers and Normal Students, which was announced some weeks ago through these columns is now in session in Oakland and will no doubt prove one of the most helpful and instructive meetings that has ever been afforded the teachers of our county.

Following is a report of the first two days' procedure by the instructors present.

MONDAY MORNING.

School was opened with singing of "America," with Miss Ruth McRobie as pianist.

Supt. E. A. Browning was then elected Principal of the school with U. G. Palmer Vice-Principal, and Misses Ruth McRobie, Rose Callaghan, Mary Browning and Rose Wilson pianists.

Pleasing addresses by Supt. Browning, Miss Phoenix, William Miller and Dr. Bartlett followed, which ended the morning session.

MONDAY AFTERNOON.

The afternoon session was opened at 1.30, with the song entitled "Way Down Upon the Swaunee River."

The organization was again taken up and Prof. P. E. King was appointed Vice-Principal of the school.

J. C. Beahm, Mattaae M. Riley and Miss Mary O'Donnell secretaries.

This was followed by an enrollment of the teachers and pupils.

Miss Phoenix then presented the subject of Primary Reading in an able manner.

RECESS.

Announcements were next made after which school adjourned.

TUESDAY MORNING.

School opened by singing "Joy to the World," led by Dr. Gibson.

The usual roll call was responded to by about one hundred and seventy-five pupils after which Dr. Gibson had a period for music.

The presentation of the subject of Language was next given by Miss Phoenix, which was deep but thoroughly instructive.

Singing of "Little We-Wees" by the school was followed by adjournment.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON.

School opened at 1.30.

Roll call.

The work was then divided into two sections, Prof. Gibson taking the subject of Language and Prof. Palmer that of Mental Arithmetic.

After a forty minute period by these gentlemen, Miss Phoenix introduced the subject of Number Work, which she carefully handled and followed her work with a drill in Physical Culture, which was greatly enjoyed by all.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

School opened at 9.30 by singing "I Need Thee Every Hour."

Roll call.

Music, taught by Dr. Gibson until 9.45, in which he clearly brought out the first principles to be taught in music.

Miss Phoenix, at this period, took up the subject of Language and very beautifully illustrated the first work in language for pupils just entering school.

RECESS.

Phonics by Miss Phoenix.

Section Work was taken up by Dr. Gibson and U. G. Palmer, in which much interest was manifested by all.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON.

Roll call.

The work of Language was again taken up by Dr. Gibson and Arithmetic by U. G. Palmer.

After this period Miss Phoenix, in her very attractive manner, presented the subject of Number Work, and followed this work with a brief recreation in which Physical Culture was indulged in.

RECESS.

Dr. Gibson next arranged his Chorus Class for a forty-five minute period and no one should frame the idea that Garrett county teachers cannot sing when under such an efficient instructor.

A Church Wedding.

A pretty church wedding was solemnized Sunday morning, June 14, 1908, in the Catholic church at Hoyes, Md., by Father Connell, who used the solemn and impressive mass marriage ceremony. The contracting parties were Mr. Jessius Weimer and Miss Carrie Elizabeth Edgar. Miss Kate Weimer, sister of the groom, was bridesmaid and Mr. John Weimer, Jr., brother of the groom, was best man. A number of relatives and friends witnessed the ceremony. After the wedding the happy couple returned to the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John A. Edgar, near Deep Creek, where a tempting wedding dinner was served and enjoyed by about twenty-five relatives.

Desirable Clothing
For Boys

Is one of my specialties. I have been very particular in the selection of my line to get only goods of dependable quality.

My suits for LITTLE BOYS 3 to 7 years in Eton, Buster Brown and Sailor styles at $3.00 to $5.00 are hard to beat.

Suits from 8 to 16 year sizes in either plain knee pants or Knickerbocker style at $4.00 to $7.50 I believe to be the best to be had in this range of prices. I also have a lot of cheaper suits if you want them.

Yours Truly. E. A. WEIMER.

FILIBUSTERING IN THE OLDEN TIME

How a Minority Sometimes Stops Legislation.

U. S. SENATE FIXES NO LIMIT

On Speech Making—Henry Clay Approved One Hour Law—Tried to Have It Adopted in Senate But Was Called Boss.

The recent disgraceful scene in the United States Senate caused be the 18-hour speech and filibustering acts of Senator Lafollette, of Wisconsin, have caused calmly minded people to think and speak of the extraordinary occurrence, and to inquire whether or not there can be a preventive remedy for such happenings, if any more such should occur in that august body. They have been of infrequent occurrence there, it is true, but there should be none at all, and there should be some rule or method to prevent it. The Senate has a great number of rules for its proceedings. Some of a commanding character, and others of a restraining nature. The rules of the Senate are in the nature of a code for its government or action, but they are capable of becoming altered or amended as changes of conditions may require and should be. The condition of things now are very different from what they were in the early stages of our government.

Long ago lengthy filibustering in the lower house of Congress, by minority members, to defeat or prevent the passage of measures which the majority wished to enact. This kind of action was equivalent to the minority, where of right, the legislative power or control rested. This evil or obstacle existed in the house for some time. But in 1841 that body determined to put an end to it. Historic hour rule was then for the first time established. By it no member was allowed to speak more than one honr at a time.

It was a Whig measure and strongly opposed by the old Democratic party. The opposition to it was bitter. It was called the "gag rule," with other odious epithets, but there it stands to this day. No demand for its repeal or alteration becaase it was and is yet a good and useful rule for that body and is it not advisable to have it adopted in the other branch of Congress?

About the same time the hour rule was enacted for the House, an effort was made to pass it for the Senate. The mover was the great Henry Clay. He uaged with all his eloquence, power and influence but it miscarried. The opposition was too strong and determined, even fierce epithets were more plentiful against it than arguments. The leader was called dictator. The term boss was not then known. This name stung the great statesman to the quick, as was evidenced by his great farewell speech in the Senate not long after the defeat of his measure. In this famous speech, he showed truly who and what a dictator really was or had been—the great factor in the Roman imperial government. This speech ranks as one or his greatest oratorical efforts.

At the time mentioned there were but 26 states in the Union, now 46. Then 52 Senators, now 92, at that date, 232 Representatives, but now 392. The previous question rule was established long ago in the House was for the purpose of preventing unseasonable opposition or obstruction to the passage of bills or laws. Some of the arguments against these curbing rules were that neither the House of Commons or Lords of the British Parliament, had such rules. This was and is still true there was a remedy for such speeches—they had to be made to empty seats instead of listeners.

It is evident that the evil of obstruction does now and has exited in the United States Senate for a long time, just as it did in the lower House. More available time is now needed for legislation than in former times, when there was less legislation and smaller populations. Let the evil, therefore be cured or lessened by a suitable rule to be adopted by the Senate. The people will be satisfied and even pleased. What legislators need are facts, reason and common sense, and not long empty harangues to kill time and impede necessary legislation. So let something be done of a curative character.

BREWERS WOULD ELEVATE SALOONS.

United States Brewers' Association Plan to Drive the Dives Out of Business to Offset Temperance Wave.

Milwaukee, Wis., 15 June—As a result of the temperance wave that is now sweeping over the country the United States Brewers' Association. which began its annual convention here today, will seek to secure the adoption of plans that will drive the dives and low groggeries out of business. Brewers who are here from all over the land agree that such action is necessary to protect the legitimate liquor dealers and to prevent the spread of the "dry" sentiment to sections yet unaffected.

One of the plans under consideration is that recently adopted in Cincinnati and which has met with much success.

In Cincinnati several leading brewers have been sworn in as probation officers of the juvenile court of that city and are taking part in prosecuting every case of liquor selling to minors and endeavor to revoke the leases as well as licenses of those who have violated the law.

As the brewers own a large percentage of the property in which saloons are run, their power is considerable.

They also employ secret agents to make investigations, and if they find saloons not being conducted in accordance with the law, they put them out of business.

In a small way the crusades against dive saloons have already been begun by the brewers in various other parts of the country, but the plan is to extend this movement and during the next year many undesirable saloon men will be driven out of business.

The spirit of inquiry, which has been started by the anti-saloon agitation has brought the reputable saloon men throughout the country to realize that their worst enemies are within their own ranks. For some years efforts have been made here and there to rid the saloon business of its disorderly and law-defying element. In Massachusetts this has been pretty thoroughly accomplished by wise legislation. In other states the laws themselves have invited and stimulated over-competition, which has proved disastrous to the morals of the business.

The Texas brewers two years ago employed their own lawyers and secured their own evidence and forced the hands of the police and prosecutors and have rid the state of 2,000 gambling and other joints which were annexes to the saloons. The brewers of the board of trade of New York have now undertaken to do the same thing in co-operation with the Committee of Fourteen (organized to regulate the Raines hotel law evil) and the bonding companies which bond the licenses. As a result of this arrangement it is expected that 150 disorderly places will be put out of business through their inability to obtain new licenses.

The Buffalo brewers have already done the same thing, and it is expected that similar resolutions will follow in Rochester, Syracuse and other up state cities.

The West Virginia Brewers' Association has sent a circular letter to liquor dealers, insisting upon their rigid compliance with the law in every particular. The New Jersey brewers passed resolutions to the same effect a few months ago, and in Ohio brewers have taken similar action.

The Minnesota brewers are also in line, and the Milwaukee brewers are now taking the matter up. It is expected that a wholesale house-cleaning will take place in the retail liquor trade in every city of importance.

DETECTIVE WORK IN FAR INDIA

Some of the Cute Tricks They Use at Times.

A very old Indian detective trick played its part in the arrest of the Bengall youth Khurdiram Bose, who threw the bomb which killed Mrs. and Miss Kennedy, of Mozufferpore.

He was seated in the railway station at Waini, some twenty miles from the scene of the crime, and was eating a meal of rice, when two constables approached him. One of the constables noticed that the youth's saliva had ceased to flow, apparently through fright at the sudden appearance of the policemen; and that, in spite of his nonchalant air, he was unable to continue his meal. The constable toyed with his man for a while, and then, having his suspicions confirmed, seized him before he could fire the revolver with which he was trying to shoot himself. The system of detection it is stated, is traditional among the Indian police.

A suspected person will be placed with others, and a native inspector will mutter some gibberish over an old four-cornered fears of his auditors he will give each of them a handful of rice and instruct them to eat it as fast as they can. The guilty one, it is averred, will be unable to eat, and the strike of the salivary glands is regarded as furnishing a prima facie case for arrest.

Cat in Battle With Sparrows.

An army of English sparrows attacked and rounded a big maltese cat on Broad street, in Bloomfield, N. J., yesterday, The cat was totally blinded by the persistent attacks of the sparrows which swarmed about it like so many wasps. The animal had to be killed to put it out of misery. New Jersey naturalists regarded the news of this battle as highly important—if true.

The cat had climbed to the eaves of a porch and dislodged a nest of young sparrows. The parent birds had fluttered about in alarm,and when the nest fell to the ground their vigorous chirping attracted a flock of sparrows to the scene. The cat, sure of its prey, approached the fallen nest, and the the little birds, led by the parents of the dead youngsters, attacked the cat.

At first the animal was able to protect itself by threatening blows of its paws as the sparrows circled about it, but in the same way in which they have been able to corner larger birds the sparrows continued their combined attack until the cat was worn out and practically helpless.

HOWE'S GREAT LONDON SHOWS

What Boy Ever Lived That Wouldn't Go and See the Circus Unload?

"There is nothing that recalls a man's boyhood days more vividly than the circus. It is a trite saying that many fathers are mighty glad that the taking of their children gives an excuse to attend all the circuses that comes to the city, but there are a lot of men who are not ashamed of the fact that they are merely boys grown up, and go to the circuses because they enjoy them. The odor of the animals and sawdust brings back the days when, knowing the circus was coming, they would get up before daylight, not to see the big vans unloaded from the trains, for circuses did not travel by railway those days, but to walk out in the country a few miles to meet the caravans, which traveled overland from town to town. To walk into town beside the elephant was the greatest fun imaginable. There was not as much to the average circus seen as there is to day, but there was plenty for all to see, and the boy who was not permitted to at least hang around the grounds was indeed in bad luck."

The children will be delighted with the miniature menagerie, with boy trainers, drivers and caretakers.

Let the boys and girls tell their parents that Howe's London Shows will be here Saturday, June 20.

Earning His Fee.

By COLIN S. COLLINS.

Copyright, 1908, by M. M. Cunningham.

"What are you doing here, Alma?" demanded Blake as he ran across his little hostess in the conservatory.

Mrs. Thearle lifted a tear stained face to Blake's. In spite of her three unhappy years as the wife of Osmund Thearle, who had obligingly drunk himself to death in the third year and left her with her youth and a round million of dollars, Alma still was pathetically a child in many ways

"It's perfectly horrid," she said sobbingly. "I had planned to have this dance a sensation, and now"—

"It is perfect," declared Blake warmly. "Every one is saying that the arrangements could not be improved upon."

"That's just it," was the tearful response. "It was all going so nicely, and now that horrid Count Cazman has spoiled it all."

"He has been annoying you!" Blake's face grew stern, and his hands clinched. Ever since they were children together he had loved Alma. That this somewhat repulsive scion of nobility should offer her affront was not to be borne.

"He hasn't said anything to me," explained Mrs. Thearle, "but I don't believe that he is a count, for all of his splendid letters of introduction. He stole Bessie Vardon's bracelet. You know the one I mean, the one with all the diamonds. I saw him slip it from her wrist. She does not know yet. She thinks she lost it. I have asked her to say nothing about it for the moment, and I came here to think what I could do."

"Send for a policeman," suggested Blake grimly.

He was resentful of the count's manner toward Alma, and he would be glad to see the public humiliation of his rival.

"Heavens, I can't do that!" gasped Mrs. Thearle. "Don't you see, Paul

"I'D GLADLY PAY BESS THE COST," GASPED MRS. THEARLE.

that if I should even accuse the count he would make a scandal, and that is the last thing I would wish for at my first entertainment since—since"—

"Since freedom came," Blake finished for her. Thearle's death had been a matter of congratulation to more than his widow.

"It a sort of second debut," she ran on. "The count is a sort of star feature, and to have him discovered as a thief would be to make the whole affair a failure."

"So it would," agreed Blake, "and yet we cannot get that bracelet back without some sort of a scene. It's not fair to Bess to let him get away with the spoils. It's easily worth $20,000."

"I'd gladly pay Bess the cost," gasped Mrs. Thearle; "but, don't you see, I can't do so without explaining why I should make good her loss."

"And that would never do," agreed Blake. "The question is, What shall be done?"

"That's what I want you to tell," was the trusting answer. "You have never failed me yet. Paul, even when"—

Blake nodded. No need to put into words the memories of those troublous times when he had intervened to save her from the drunken whims of the man her parents had forced her to marry.

"I think I have an idea," he said after a moment of thought. "I don't suppose the count knows that you saw him?"

"I was on the other side of the room and with my back turned. I saw him in the mirror. He took it off Bessie's wrist and slipped it into the breast pocket of his coat."

"We used to have a lot of fun over my magic," Blake said reminiscently. "It's hardly the thing for a ballroom, but you might ask me to do a few tricks."

"And borrow the bracelet of the count?" she asked hopefully.

"Something like that," was the laughing answer. "I believe that you have a bracelet a little like Bess'. Well, put it on and lend it to me when I ask for it."

Mrs. Thearle clapped her hands. "I knew that you would think out some way," she declared. "Shall I ask you as soon as we get back to the ball room?"

"In about a quarter of an hour," he explained. "Don't let it look too cut and dried."

Blake slipped out of the conservatory by another door, and his surprise was well simulated when he was asked to perform a few tricks. Mrs. Thearle had only to make the suggestion, for the other guests eagerly took up the matter. Paul Blake had at one time thought of going upon the stage, for he was a more than ordinarily clever performer, and only the unexpected inheritance from a great-uncle had headed off a professional career.

Of late he had refused all requests to perform in drawing rooms, as the demands upon his good nature had become too frequent, so there was the promise of novelty in his performance after two seasons of retirement.

He rapidly arranged his improvised stage with a couple of tables and such simple properties as he could obtain from his hostess, while the guests stopped dancing to crowd around and watch his really clever work.

"Here's a new one," he announced after he had performed a routine of familiar vanishments and appearances. "For this I want a piece of jewelry—a watch, a ring, anything."

A dozen articles were offered, for a number of times he had drawn upon the audience for handkerchiefs and other small loans. Without seeming to make any particular selection Blake took the bracelet that Mrs. Thearle offered and palmed it while he pretended to wrap it in a borrowed handkerchief, which he gave to Mrs Thearle to hold.

"You are positive that you feel the bracelet in the handkerchief?" he asked, and Mrs. Thearle in answer to an almost imperceptible nod declared in the affirmative. Blake gave her closed hand a tap with the fan he used as a wand.

"Do you feel it now?" he asked.

Mrs. Thearle gave a well simulated cry of surprise and at Blake's direction unrolled the handkerchief to show that it was empty.

"If the count will oblige me by taking the bracelet from his pocket, Mrs. Thearle will identify it as her property," announced Blake, stepping toward the surprised foreigner.

Before the count could act he had thrust his hand within the pocket and obtained possession of the stolen bracelet. A quick pass and the bracelet which he had borrowed from Mrs. Thearle was in Blake's hand and the other was in his pocket.

Later the stolen property was conveniently found by a servant and handed to its owner, and Blake's trick was not thought of in connection with the find.

"It was beautifully done," praised Mrs. Thearle as he lingered after the rest had gone. "No one suspected. I just knew that if I accused the count he would insist upon making a scene. He is that sort of man."

"As it was, he found the trick a decided surprise," said Blake, with a reminiscent laugh. "It was worth the trouble just to see his face."

"It was worth more than that," was the warm response.

"I'm glad you think so," said Blake, taking possession of her hand, "for I am going to ask the highest fee I have ever demanded. I want nothing less than you, Alma."

"I think you have earned your fee," she said simply.

Loud Talking.

"Did you ever notice," he asked, "how foreigners always speak very loudly when talking with other persons of their own country?

"I mean that foreigners travelling about in this country conduct their conversations at the top of their voices. The same is true of them in restaurants, where they discuss the most private matters openly and loudly. They have abundant confidence that no one else will know what they are saying.

"I remember on one occasion being on the street with a young woman who knew Italian much more than I did. We passed several Italians who were walking along, and one of them, turning to his companion, made a remark about the young woman's personal appearance that wasn't exactly flattering.

"From her face I know that she understood. I turned about angrily, but she put her hand on my arm and asked me not to do anything, so we let it go at that."

"Yes," said the other man, "and if you ever have been abroad you will remember that Americans and English there are quite as free in their way of expressing loudly all sorts of opinions. It looks like a standoff to me."—New York Sun.

The Artist's Welcome.

The famous son was coming home to pay his mother a visit. He was a pianist, had been sent abroad by wealthy friends for a four years' course in his chosen art, had thereafter spent a year on the concert stage there and behind a vanguard of newspaper reports of his success abroad, both musically and financially, he was now coming home. When he stepped from the train at Plattsville his mother rushed to him. When she had reached him, however, she suddenly gave a gasp and stood stock still, staring at him. The next moment she burst into sobs and fell on his neck.

"Henry, my poor Henry," the poor woman cried, "they told me you were doing so well over there and makin' money plentiful! My poor, poor boy!"

"What's the matter, mother?" exclaimed the bewildered son. "What makes you doubt what they told you?"

"Oh, Henry," she cried, unappeased, "I kin see how you've suffered! You haven't been able to scrape enough money together to get your hair cut!"—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

A NEIGHBORLY NEIGHBOR.

Who Probably Wishes He Didn't Have Any Neighbors.

Mr. Goodheart (a suburban resident)—Good morning! What can I do for you this bright and beautiful spring morning?

First Neighbor—I noticed you hadn't begun making garden yet, and I thought I'd just step over and borrow your spade.

Mr. Goodheart—Certainly, certainly. Here it is. Good day.

Second Neighbor—How do, Mr. Goodheart? Will you let me have your hoe for a few minutes?

Mr. Goodheart—Y-e-s. Certainly.

Third Neighbor—Good morning. I see Mr. Spinks has your spade, and Mr. Pinks just passed me with your hoe, and as you can't do anything with a rake and hoe to break ground I concluded I might just as well drop in and borrow your rake. Thanks.

Fourth Neighbor—I see you are not making any use of your wheelbarrow, and—

Mr. Goodheart—I will need the wheelbarrow the moment I begin making garden.

Neighbor—Oh, yes, of course! But you can't make garden without a spade and hoe and rake, you know, and I'll rush back with the wheelbarrow quick as I see the spade coming back. Thanks.

Mr. Goodheart—Now don't forget that I shall need this wheelbarrow just as soon as Mr. Spinks comes back with my spade.

Fourth Neighbor—Oh, I'll have plenty of time to get through with the barrow! Spinks told me he'd be busy with your spade for a month.—New York World.

Candid Confession.

"Let me see," said the young man at the church festival, "the sign says, 'Strawberry Shortcake, Sans.' 'Sans' means without, doesn't it, miss?"

"It does," replied the pretty girl at the first booth.

"Well, how does it apply to the strawberry shortcake?"

"Why, it means without strawberries."—Chicago Tribune.

Heard In the Nursery.

First Little Girl—Your papa and mamma are not real parents. They adopted you.

Second Little Girl—Well, that makes it all the more satisfactory. My parents picked me out and yours had to take you just as you came.—Browning's Magazine.

What Might Happen.

"Have you ever thought of what would happen if the government were to own the railways?"

"Yes," answered Mr. Dustin Stax. "The government would find out that it never before realized how critical the American public is."—Washington Star.

The Ancient Sages.

"After all, it's the wise man who can change his opinion."

"But the wisest men simply can't do it."

"Why not?"

"Because they've been dead for years."—Catholic Standard and Times.

Under a Cloud.

Mr. Soaker (who has taken the wrong hat on leaving his club)—Never shaw sush a dark night 'n all m' life!

Her Viewpoint.

Borem (11 p. m.)—Well, I must be going. I assure you, Miss Cutting, the time has passed very pleasantly for me this evening.

Miss Cutting—Yes, and for me it is still more pleasant to realize that it is past.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

His Shortcoming.

Goodley—But, really, you must admit that he's an adept in the art of conversation.

Knox—Yes, but what a pity he isn't more adept in the art of saying something.—Philadelphia Press.

Only Shopping.

She was a very particular miss.
She didn't like that; she didn't like this.
She pulled out the bottom garment first
And over the counter the rest dispersed.
She was only shopping!

She sampled the gloves; she looked at the hose;
She rumpled up all the new spring clothes;
She glanced at the ribbons; she fingered the lace.
On whatever she touched she left her trace.
She was only shopping!

And at last, when the clerks were nearly dead,
She actually bought a small spool of thread
And then in a manner quite grand to see
Said, 'Send it up quickly, please, C. O. D.'
She was only shopping!

As It Happened

By TROY ALLISON.

Copyright, 1908, by C. H. Sutcliffe.

Chesterton, first honor man, captain of the football team and all around favorite, walked down the elm avenue leading to the college, lost in meditation. He never even chose the best spots on the slippery, sleety path, and beyond rubbing his ears and nose occasionally in the most absentminded way he seemed not to know that the winter was getting in its very worst blizzard.

He kicked a piece of ice out of his path viciously, all the fervor of his heart concentrating itself in the wish that it could have been Johnson of the junior class who had obstructed his path in the same manner. The mere thought of it caused him to walk out of his way to find another larger and more kickable obstacle.

The night before at the senior prom Esther Dillon had danced six times with the insufferable Johnson—and had steadfastly pleaded a full card every time Chesterton approached her. Chesterton didn't know what was the matter. Her coolness had been first perceptible on Christmas day, and the thermometer had dropped steadily until it had, he realized, reached absolute freezing point. In his steadily growing desire to see the image of Johnson in every kickable object he finally overreached himself and sat down on the ground with a badly sprained ankle.

"YOU SEE, I'VE SPRAINED MY ANKLE."

Esther Dillon, whose father was a teacher of mathematics and lived within the college grounds, on her way home from an afternoon's shopping came upon him suddenly as he was trying his foot to see if he could manage to hobble to the dormitory.

"You develop new traits daily, Mr. Chesterton," she said in the politely frigid tone she had used for six weeks. "I never dreamed any one could find pleasure in sitting on the ice covered edge of a carriage drive. Does the approaching twilight seem more soulful from such standpoint?"

He stood up hastily on his one sound foot and smiled grimly.

"Standpoint seems an inaccuracy of speech, Miss Esther, and really I have become so acclimated to chilliness in the last few weeks that I didn't notice the temperature of the pavement being anything but normal. Perhaps you wouldn't mind being friendly long enough to help a fellow reach the dormitory. You see, I've sprained my ankle"—

"Oh," she said, quickly sympathetic, "let me run to the gymnasium and send some of the boys! Does it hurt much?"

"Pretty bad, but I don't mind the pain so much if I can manage to hobble on. I was just taking a long breath to shout for one of the fellows, but I would rather have you help me if you don't mind. I'll put my hand on your shoulder to steady myself, and I think I can manage some kind of a halting gait."

The girl in her sympathy forgot the grievance she had against him, and with every limping step Chesterton grew more firmly convinced that being a cripple for life might have its compensations.

"What made you do it?" he asked abruptly. The shoulder he was leaning on twitched violently.

"Do what?" she asked, with perverse feminine ignorance.

"Freeze me, ignore me, cut me, slight me, neglect me"—

"Perhaps if you wait until you reach the library you might consult the dictionary and find a few more transitive verbs," she suggested, with a gurgle of amusement.

Chesterton heard the note of laughter and came down on his lame foot with so buoyant a step that he grimaced with pain.

"Why did you do it, Esther?" he asked pleadingly.

"Why didn't you even thank me the tiniest little bit for the Christmas present I sent you?" she faltered.

Chesterton stopped and, balancing on one foot, faced her in unfeigned astonishment.

"Why—my dear girl, this is the first I have heard of it!"

"Really! Didn't you even get it?" with a joy that scarcely seemed an appropriate show of feeling for the loss of an article that she had spent so much time in selecting. "I'm so glad!" she said impulsively.

He was filled with compunction for having cherished such malicious feelings toward Johnson—Johnson wasn't half a bad fellow. He remembered that he had once liked him immensely.

"That's the reason you were not nice to me at the Chirstmas night reception?" he hazarded hopefully.

"Of course that was the reason. When I thanked you for the roses and you didn't say a word—not even a tiny word about the package I sent you—I thought that—men were so queer," dolefully.

"Of course I seemed a downright brute and barbarian," berating himself manfully. "And I went to that reception with my courage screwed to the highest notch. I wanted to ask you if you wouldn't miss me enough at the end of the term to—er—you know this is my last year, Esther," he finished awkwardly.

"Y-e-s—it's your last year," she repeated softly.

"Esther, suppose that package hadn't gone astray—and I had let you see how overjoyed I was to have you think to send me anything—anything on earth, from a pale blue necktie to a white elephant—anything on earth that you had thought to send of your own accord," magnanimously, "do you think that you would have been nice enough to me to have given me courage to tell you what I wanted to say?" He tried to see her face in the fast gathering darkness.

"It wasn't pale blue nor so large as an elephant," she parried.

"My dear girl, I find I can't possibly walk without supporting myself more." He put his arm across her shoulders and then scowled to see they were nearing the electric light on the driveway.

"I think it was the prettiest poster I ever saw," she said. And Chesterton's heart leaped when she reached up and patted the hand on her shoulder.

"I am coming over the first minute I can hobble with a stick and ask Professor Dillon if he wouldn't like a son-in-law," joyfully."

The innocent Mr. Johnson, who had been utterly condemned and afterward pardoned, came near falling to his former estate by appearing suddenly on the scene.

"Hello, old chap; anything serious? I'll lend a hand," he said with the misplaced cheerfulness of a life saving hero. The girl, surrendering her charge, hurried down a bypath to their cottage.

That night Chesterton, in bath robe and slippers and absolute happiness, put down his pipe to take the note and the package that were handed him.

"Wasn't I stupid?" he read. "I did this package up carefully, the first of all my presents. I put it in the music cabinet for safe keeping and thought I had mailed it. Mother found it this afternoon. I don't know if you would really like to have such an absentminded wife—she might forget to have your dinner on time—but I asked father myself, and he was almost as pleased as"—

Chesterton stood on his feet in his ebullition of spirits and sat down just as suddenly.

"But I don't mind a sprained ankle at all." He stroked the swollen foot contentedly. "It's a blamed good investment."

This Busy Age.

"This is a busy age, sure enough," said a man who prides himself on keeping in touch with old friends. "We get new proofs of it every day. Not only do we find that we ourselves have less and less time to devote to this, that and the other thing, but we have it brought in upon us that everybody is pretty much in the same fix.

"The other morning I had a letter from a chap whom I know pretty well. I say it was a letter. It was and it wasn't, and in that contradiction lies the point of my remark. A bit of good fortune had happened to him. He had been given a position that counted for a lot, and his home paper had printed an item about it. Wanting to tell me of his luck, he had clipped the item from the sheet, pasted it on a piece of paper and forwarded it to me with his initials scrawled across the bottom. Five years ago he would have sat down and written me. Now he uses shears and paste. Oh, it's all right. I got the information, and that's the main thing. But we're all pretty busy, aren't we?" he concluded.—New York Press.

When Turkeys Are Angry.

In countries where flocks of turkeys are raised one can learn very quickly from their gobblings when they have captured a hare. If they meet him standing still or lying down they form in a circle around him and, putting their heads down, repeat their peculiar cries. The hare remains quiet, and it is sometimes possible to take him up, terrorized as he is in the midst of the black circle of gobbling beaks and heads. The language of the turkeys is at that time incontestably significant. It is warlike and similar to that of the males when they are fighting. In the present instance they have joined for war, and they make it on the frightened hare.

All Lives Are Interesting.

Not a blade of grass but has a story to tell, not a heart but has its romance, not a life that does not hide a secret which is either its thorn or its spur. Everywhere grief, hope, comedy, tragedy, even under the petrification of old age, as in the twisted forms of fossils, we may discover the agitations and tortures of youth. This thought is the magic wand of poets and preachers. It strips the scales from our fleshly eyes and gives us a clear view into human life. It opens to the ear a world of unknown melodies and makes us understand the thousand languages of nature.—H. F. Amiel.

Shall Saloons Run Politics or Be Run Out of Politics?

By JOSEPH W. FOLK, Governor of Missouri.

A FEW years ago the saloons seemed to consider themselves ABOVE THE LAW. They defied the authorities of city and state. Was the idea of enforcing the law graciously received by the liquor interests? Did they welcome a reign of law? Not at all. On the contrary, they ATTEMPTED TO DEFY THE ORDERS TO ENFORCE THE LAW until they saw defiance was useless. Then they gave unwilling acquiescence, while VOWING VENGEANCE ON THE OFFICIALS who dared consider that laws were made for them to obey the same as ordinary mortals.

BY THEIR OWN CONDUCT THEY HAVE CREATED A SENTIMENT AGAINST THEM THAT IS NOW ASSUMING CYCLONIC PROPORTIONS. LED ON BY DESIGNING POLITICIANS WHO SEEK TO USE THEM FOR THEIR OWN PURPOSES, THEY HAVE ENTERED THE POLITICAL ARENA WITH THE AVOWED PURPOSE OF DOMINATING THE POLITICS OF THE STATE IF THEY CAN AND THROUGH POLITICS TO CONTROL THE STATE.

They do not dare to openly advocate the repeal of the laws that they are now forced to obey, but they seek to politically annihilate the officials who enforce laws against them and to elect officials who will follow a different course. They are putting it squarely up to the people of the state as to whether the saloons shall be allowed to run the politics of the state or be run out of the politics of the state.

It would seem that they would have sense enough to be quiet, engaged as they are in a business the moral influence of which is NOT GOOD AT BEST, and to accept the reasonable and wholesome regulations of the laws they now so bitterly resent being enforced. They do not seem to look at it that way, however. They have made it a question as to whether they are GREATER THAN THE LAW or the law greater than they.

Cubans Incapable of Self Government.

By P. A. IRWIN of San Francisco.

IT will be a bad day for Cuba and ESPECIALLY FOR AMERICANS WHO HAVE INVESTED in that country when the authority of the United States is withdrawn.

I am just back from Havana, where I have some interests, and while there made it my business to study existing political conditions. There is not an American down there who believes in the ability of the Cubans to run a government of their own in any decent fashion. This is also true of the intelligent and property owning class of natives, but this is not the element that dominates.

IN CUBA THE PROFESSIONAL POLITICIANS RUN THINGS, AND THESE PATRIOTS ARE EAGER FOR THE DAY THAT OUR FLAG SHALL BE LOWERED SO THAT THEY CAN GET UP TO THE PIE COUNTER AND FATTEN OFF THE PUBLIC REVENUES. AS LONG AS OUR AUTHORITY IS PARAMOUNT THEY CAN GET NOT A DOLLAR FROM THE GOVERNMENTAL EXCHEQUER, BUT THE MINUTE WE LEAVE THERE WILL BE OFFICES TO FILL AND FAT SALARIES TO DRAW.

Cuba, I can tell you, is going to give us trouble. The natives are simply not fit for self government, and I predict that we will have to GO BACK THERE IN LESS THAN SIX MONTHS after the Magoon regime comes to an end. I don't think it will be or ought to be a state of this Union, and about the only solution I see is that we shall eventually have to make it a kind of dependency and occupy it in about the same fashion that England occupies Egypt.

High Time to Padlock All Muck Rakers.

By JOSEPH B. FORAKER, United States Senator From Ohio.

IT would be most fortunate if a padlock could be provided for the muck rakers—all of them, high and low, big and little, well intentioned and evil intentioned—for it is HIGH TIME TO QUIT SLANDERING THE AMERICAN PEOPLE. They never less deserved it. They were never more worthy of praise and commendation.

THERE WERE NEVER HIGHER IDEALS AND MORAL STANDARDS AMONG THE BUSINESS MEN OF THE NATION, AND THERE WERE NEVER BETTER METHODS EMPLOYED BY THEM FOR THE CONTROL AND TRANSACTION OF BUSINESS.

In this we should not only find hope and inspiration, but also a command to administer our public affairs on the theory NOT THAT ALL MEN ARE DISHONEST, but that, with the exception of the few, all men are upright, and that as to even the few who may not be upright they are entitled to the presumption that they are and to have a right to be HEARD BEFORE THEY ARE CONDEMNED.

Humanity Gulled by Palmists

By Professor STIRLING of Victoria University, Manchester, England.

LOOK at your palms and you will find certain classical lines. These lines—the so called lines of life, heart and head, and the girdle of Venus, and the bracelets of life around your wrists—what do you suppose they really are? They are nothing more or less than creases or folds produced by the ACTION OF THE MUSCLES.

The line of heart, for instance, is the flexure of the four fingers. The line of life is the result of the action of the thumb. All these lines that have been given astronomical names by palmists are characteristic flexures. You will find the same lines on the palm of the Barbary ape.

Humanity is daily gulled through its EXTRAORDINARY IGNORANCE OF THE ELEMENTARY FACTS OF PHYSIOLOGY.

THE AMERICAN IDEA.

Individualism the Keynote of Our National Success.

Charles L. Edgar and Walton Clark of the National Civic Federation Commission on Municipal Ownership Show Why American Institutions Should Not Be Abandoned at the Demand of Socialists and Municipallzers.

The efforts of the National Civic federation have resulted in a commission of Americans whose first interest in this investigation, as in all else, is to do what they may to preserve and continue the American idea and American institutions, believing that the high state of civilization and prosperity in America justifies the American idea and the American method and places the burden of proof heavily upon those who would say another idea and another method would result in improvement in the condition of the people.

Believing this to be the thought and intent of the membership of the commission and of the committee subordinate to it, we still believe that there are ills in the American body politic that may be remedied or cured. We believe that the remedy should be applied and the cure effected without any unnecessary departure from the American idea and the American system. We believe that the framework upon which may be built purity of administration and the highest possible good of the citizens is in existence with us and that it is not necessary in the effort to cure the ills from which the body politic may be suffering to destroy that body. We submit that, living in a land where peace and prosperity are the common lot, we must be very cautious of change. This does not mean that where abuses are found to exist they should not be promptly and mercilessly eradicated, but it does mean that changes in system should be undertaken only after conclusive proof that such changes will result in bettering the condition of the individual. We had better bear the relatively few ills we have than subject ourselves to unknown conditions that may bring in their train greater ills of which we do not know.

Our investigation has determined with certainty many heretofore mooted questions. It indicates the probably correct answers to other mooted questions. Where the facts are clear and the conclusion evident our task has been to summarize and indicate. Where there is remaining uncertainty as to facts and conclusions are not evident we have made an effort to determine the probabilities. This has resulted in arguments based on such facts as our investigators have recorded and on our own experience as operators and observers.

We believe no intelligent reader of the voluminous record of this commission's work will fail to conclude that it clearly proves municipal ownership to be productive of many and serious ills, with little or no compensating good.

The writers of these chapters, agreeing, we believe, with the other members of the committee of twenty-one, that public service companies should reasonably be regulated and afforded the protection that comes with regulation and appreciating that the committee was not appointed or constituted to consider methods of regulation, nevertheless desire to record their opinion that some form of regulation of private companies should be adopted in each of the United States. What that form should be this commission is not prepared by any investigation or any study it has made to suggest.

Finally, we who stand in opposition to municipal ownership, speaking, we believe, for all individualists, arraign the arrogance of many of its advocates in assuming that they exclusively occupy the field of reform in dealing with the problems concerned and that they are the sole promoters of measures of economic improvement in municipal affairs. We assert that the opponents of municipal ownership and operation, firm and consistent supporters of justice, are the class seeking the public welfare intelligently and in accordance with American principles. On this point we do not yield to any body of men.

We seek, as a first principle, to insure every man his own. In doing so and in endeavoring to protect the public against oppression and error we find it our duty to demonstrate the errors in the schemes of municipalizers and Socialists and to warn against the oppression that they threaten. We are resisting efforts to put burdens on the backs of the American people. We cannot and will not remain silent while the attempt is made to thrust costly and impracticable projects upon customers of public service corporations and upon the public at large.

We know the truth will out. We are confident that ultimately the American people must appreciate at their value the unsoundness of the arguments of the municipal Socialists. We shall aid in hastening the day when our fellow citizens will know through discussion what the public of London have been taught by bitter experience. London has awakened to the perils of municipalization, as is evidenced by its verdict in the recent borough and county elections. In that great city the municipalizers have led their fellow citizens astray, and their dupes, finding it out, have administered to their false guides an overwhelming rebuke.

We individualists are not seeking to lead the people in strange paths. Our aim is to keep them in the paths they have heretofore trod—paths well known, along which the American people have marched to heights of prosperity and civic development not known heretofore to the civilized world. Along these paths have been stumbling blocks. Our opponents are endeavoring to persuade us the sole responsibility for these stumbling blocks rests upon our public service system, to be remedied only by a change of system. This we deny. We are patiently studying the ways of justice. Municipallzers advocate experimenting at enormous cost with public funds, with the principles of liberty and with the institutions of our country. In this we stoutly refuse to take part.

We are conservatives in believing that it is better to adhere to old and tried methods based on our accepted national principles, but radicals in the determination to discover and to sternly rebuke and rectify any injustice which may have been developed by the present system. As it has always been the function and duty of government to insure that individuals shall deal justly with their fellows, it is now the function and duty of government to protect the governed against injustice on the part of these associations of individuals working under the name of public service corporations.

Any government that is too feeble or corrupt to control with justice the conduct of a public service corporation has little prospect of being able itself to supply such public service with efficiency and justice. Our duty is to elect to office men who have the intelligence and integrity to govern efficiently, honestly and justly—men who can and will curb the unjust aggressiveness of the individual or of the voluntary association of individuals and who can and will compel each to bear its share of the burdens of government and give in price, service or otherwise a proper consideration for special privileges enjoyed.

Our nation is what it is industrially and commercially and in world politics because of the American character, developed by the most absolute individualism, and because of the American corporation, developed under a government that governed, but did not trade. Our duty is to conserve the human agencies that have made our country what it is—the adventurous individual and voluntary association—but not to let them be our masters. This is the confession of faith of the antimunicipalizer, the anti-Socialist.

XENIA'S LOSS $90,000.

Depressing Experience of an Ohio City With Municipal Lighting.

In response to an inquiry in regard to the municipal electric light plant Mayor Brennan of Xenia, O., writes as follows:

"The city paid upward of $21,000 for a light plant, and the cost of running the same was at the rate of $103 per lamp. The plant was badly run, the operating of the same being in the hands of a committee of councilmen who were inexperienced and, of course, drawing no salaries, did not give it the proper attention. All they got out of the sale of the works was $2,500. The city afterward entered into a contract with a private corporation, and the price now paid per lamp is $63."

Another authority states that the amount ultimately invested in the plant was $35,000 and that the loss when it was sold, together with the excess cost of operation over what the lighting would have cost by contract, amounted to more than $90,000; in other words, that that sum represents the cost of the experiment.

Respectfully Submitted.

Recommended to the public utilities commission:

First.—Immediate suppression of the surreptitious subway sucker.

Second.—Municipal ownership of apartment house janitors.

Third.—Make it unconstitutional to play "Arawanna" or "Poor John" between the hours of 12 m. and 12 p. m., inclusive, and vice versa.

Fourth.—Provide subway guards and trolley car conductors with safety razors.

Fifth.—Free and unlimited coinage of lemonade.—New York Mail and Express.

Conserve the Rights of All.

Thus far municipal government in this country has not been a success, and one of the duties, one of the burdens, of the generation now coming on to assume the responsibilities of citizenship is the cleansing of the Augean stables of municipal corruption and the uplifting of the tone of state legislators, so that while the interests of the public shall be sacredly preserved the rights and the reasonable profits of the corporations enjoying public franchises shall be carefully and impartially protected and maintained.—Hon. William H. Taft.

Contract Renewed.

A determined effort was made last spring to launch Patchogue, N. Y., into a municipal waterworks project. A special election held to act in the matter resulted in renewing the contract with the company for twenty years. The village clerk writes that the vote was largely in favor of this action.

Beating the City Plant.

Ruralites have a scheme to beat the municipal plant to a frazzle. There is no charge at Eaton Rapids for porch lights when next to the street. So out go the lights in the house after supper, and the evening paper is read on the porch in the midst of myriads of bugs. But it's cheaper.—Detroit News.

Wise Decision at Sparta, Tenn.

At an election held in Sparta, Tenn., on June 27 upon the question of whether or not the town should issue $40,000 in bonds with which to own and operate a municipal electric light and waterworks plant the proposition was defeated by a vote of 95 to 18.

THE REPUBLICAN

BENJ. H. SINCELL, EDITOR.

THURSDAY, JUNE 18, 1908.

FOR CONGRESS,

GEORGE A. PEARRE,

OF ALLEGANY COUNTY.

MARYLAND has the right idea of the good road question. That state has but recently appropriated six millions of dollars for road improvement. The portion of this sum that falls to Garrett county, the first county of Maryland to the east of West Virginia, is the magnificent total of two hundred and thirty-eight thousand dollars. Do you think that there will be any trouble experienced in Garrett county in getting a good roads convention? If Taylor county had but one-tenth of this sum for use on her roads at this time—think of the result three or four months hence.—Grafton Republican.

THE ACTION of Governor Willson, of Kentucky, in pardoning Caleb Powers and James Howard, both tried three times and convicted as often, as accomplices in the assassination of Governor-elect William Goebel over eight years ago, is an act that every right thinking and unprejudiced man in the country approves. While the accused men were convicted in the lower courts the higher courts, to which the case was carried after each trial, reversed the judgment below on the grounds of the errors committed by reason of political prejudice and the partisanism of the juries that heard and passed on the cases, which were not legal nor in accordance with the laws of justice. The juries were invariably made up of bitter partisans whose prejudices were so strong that a fair trial and an impartial judgment could not be had. The Governor has taken the only logical step that was open to the road of justice.

GIRLS ON THE STREET.

There is a great difference in girls as one sees them on the street. Some are modest and gentle and go along without attracting attention, except what may be awakened by their graceful carriage and pleasant faces. They tell of good homes and thoughtful mothers and gentle breeding They suggest good books, moral ideas and intelligent associates. But there are other kinds of girls, who are careless about their conduct. They are just a little loud, laugh a great deal and chatter noisily. They are rather empty creatures, who read only trashy things and talk the same way, and incline to get reckless in their chatter about their beaux. It is their folly that attracts attention along the streets. Whenever they pass a young man he turns and regards them with a curious grin.

Really, if they were sensible, modest girls, they wouldn't like this. They wouldn't want the loafers along the street to gawk at them and wonder who they are and make some sallow remark to the other fellow. They would want to go along the street leaving a sort of undefined sensation, if any at all, that there goes a lady. These differences the casual observer can easily see, but really the gentle and well-bred are in the majority, while the loud and ill-bred are only exceptions, but there are enough of them to excite a disgust among all true women and a wish among all true men that these girls and young women would so conduct themselves as to reflect honor upon their sex.—Ohio State Journal.

LOCUST GROVE.

Mr. Lloyd Wakefield and Miss Myrtle Windell took a flying trip to Accident on the 5th.

Memorial Service.

The Independent Order of Odd Fellows will conduct a memorial service in the Lutheran church at Red House Sunday, June 21st. Rev. D. W. Cunningham, of Clarksburg, will address the morning meeting and Hon. Philip Willett the afternoon meeting. Special music will be one of the interesting features of the day. All members of the order are invited to be present. Besides the members of the order everybody is invited to come and enjoy the day with us.

COMMITTEE.

America's Biggest Man.

Calumet, Mich., claims to have the biggest man in the United States. He is Louis Mollanen, and though but twenty-two years of age, he weighs 442 pounds but stands 8 feet 5 inches tall. Calumet gazes at him dumb-struck when he returns home from his tours with circuses. Louis is, indeed, quite a boy. He wears a No. 18 shoe and a No. 8g hat, and the cloth required for a suit for him would make two for an ordinary sized man. "Big Louis" has stopped has stopped growing tall of late years, and while he is destined to get more rotund, he hopes that no more inches will be added vertically to his eight feet five.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Young Men's Christian Society.

Subject for next Sunday afternoon's lecture, Mr. Thomas J. Peddicord, lecturer, in the rooms of the Association, Mitchell building, Second street, to which all or cordially invited: Temperence Lesson—Eph 5, 6-21.

Ice House to be Rebuilt.

The ice house at Mountain Lake Park, owned by the Association, which was burned on last Monday night, will be rebuilt immediately, the lumber for the construction of the building having been ordered the day succeeding the fire. To preserve the large quantity of ice left unprotected as a result of the burning of the building, a large quanity of hay and other material has been placed over it. The new building will be erected on the original site and will be rushed to completion as rapidly as possible.

Married at Oakland.

Mr. Cleveland White of the South Side, this city, and Miss Mary Flowers of Morgantown, left Saturday morning on train No. 8, for Oakland, Md., where they were united in marriage. Mr. White is a son of Mr. and Mrs. S. B. White of the South Side, and is employed as a brakeman in the B. & O. yards. Miss Flowers has been making her home with a family in this city for some time. TRUSTEE'S SALE
OF VALUABLE
Real Estate.

Under and by virtue of a decree of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, sitting in Equity, dated the 9th day of June, 1908, and passed in a cause standing as No. 1522 Equity on the docket of said court, the undersigned was appointed Trustee to make sale of the real estate in the proceedings mentioned, and I hereby give notice that on Friday, the 3rd Day of July,

1908, at the hour of 11 o'clock a. m., I will offer at public auction to the highest bidder on the premises, all that parcel or lot of land known and designated as containing fifty acres, situate and being on Cove Hill, in Election District No. 5 of Garrett county, Maryland, and being the home farm of the late Benjamin F. Bowser.

The improvements consist of a Log House containing five rooms, a new Barn 20x35 feet together with other necessary outbuildings.

Upon the property is also a young orchard and about ten acres of the place is under cultivation. There is a large quantity of prop timber and locust posts upon the land.

This property will be sold subject to the pasturage and crop rights for the present year.

TERMS OF SALE, as prescribed by the Decree—One third of the purchase money to be paid in cash on the day of sale; one third in six months and one third in twelve months, the deferred payments to bear interest from the day of sale and to be secured to the satisfaction of the Trustee, or the entire purchase money may be paid in cash, at the option of the purchaser or purchasers.

AMOS BOWSER, Trustee.

TRUSTEE'S SALE
OF
Valuable Farm

Located about one mile Northeast of Friendsville, Garrett County.

By virtue of a Decree of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, passed in a cause in said court wherein Silas Teats is complainant and Allen Teats and others are defendants, being No. 1521 Equity, the undersigned Trustee will, on Saturday, the 18th Day of July,

1908, in front of the Postoffice, in the town of Friendsville, at the hour of 2 o'clock p. m. of said day, offer at public auction to the highest bidder, all that farm located about one mile Northeast of the town of Friendsville, Garrett county, Maryland, which is known as the

and described as follows:

FIRST—All that part of a tract of land called the "Gleanings," lying North of Bear Creek, containing the quantity of fifty acres of land and being the same land which was conveyed to Andrew Jackson Teats by deed from David P. Mays et ux., dated the 27th day of September 1884, and recorded in Liber W. H. T. No. 9, folio 72, etc., one of the Land Records of Garrett county. Part of said fifty acres is cleared and under cultivation;

SECOND—All that other part of a tract of land called the "Gleanings," situated and adjoining the above piece of land, containing the quantity of fifty acres of land and being the same which was conveyed to the said Andrew Jackson Teats by deed from Silas Teats et ux., dated the 1st day of August 1885, and recorded in Liber W. H. T. No. 10, folio 482, etc., one of the Land Records of Garrett county, saving and excepting ten acres of land which was conveyed to the said Andrew Jackson Teats et ux., to Amanda Schroyer by deed dated the 25th day of January, 189 , and duly recorded in Liber E. Z. T. No. 55, folio 662, etc., Land Records of Garrett county. This second piece is also partly cleared and under cultivation and is improved by a good dwelling and outbuildings.

Said property will first be offered separately and if no adequate bids are received it will be offered as a whole, and is a beautiful farm for any one desiring to purchase.

Said property will be sold subject to the dower of the widow of Andrew Jackson Teats, Anastatia Teats.

Terms of sale as prescribed by the Decree: Cash on day of sale or the ratification thereof by the court.

ANDREW S. TEATS, Trustee.

When Cupid Delayed Dinner

By BESSIE R. HOOVER.

Copyright, 1907, by Bessie R. Hoover.

IT was 8 o'clock on a raw morning in early summer, and the teams that were to take them to the lake had not yet arrived.

There were but two men in this chilled company on the church steps, for the superintendent and several of the teachers could not leave their work. The Rev. Albert Pashley was one of the faithful; the other was Ike, the son of Deacon Clutner, a rich dairyman. Ike was allowed a substitute on this momentous day, and, while a hireling slopped milk into the motley dishes of the customers, Ike abandoned himself to the varied pleasures of the Sunday school picnic.

Ike Clutner was a stoop shouldered, amiable fellow with no particular features. He looked singularly out of place in his best clothes minus his milk can and measure.

The first wagon rattled up after an hour of wintry waiting. There had been some mistake about the time—there always is. The Rev. Albert Pashley clambered into the wagon as a matter of course. Phyllis Jones, who had walked in from the country, was al ready in the wagon when Ike Clutner brushing aside the squirming children, forcibly took his seat beside her. Ike did not mean to leave his courting to chance, for holidays were scarce with him. But Mrs. Pashley, the minister's wife, who was going to wait for the last wagon, cried:

"AW, THUNDER!" GRUMBLED IKE.

"We'll need a man in our crowd. Ike, you stay and go with us."

"Aw, thunder!" grumbled Ike under his breath and climbed disconsolately out, and the first load rumbled away.

The second wagon came in half an hour. Ike, fearing that he might be left out entirely if the minister's wife happened to think of any reason for his staying behind, plumped himself down by the driver's side and left the mothers and children to scramble in as best they could.

"Which way?" questioned the driver when they were within a mile of the lake. "Are you goin' to Coggin's gap or to Feather's?"

This caused consternation among the mothers, who all knew that they were going to the "gap," but did not know which one.

"Coggin's," volunteered Ike, with the intuition of a lover.

"Feather's gap," corrected the minister's wife. "I remember now. It's Feather's."

"Aw, thunder!" muttered Ike gloomily to himself.

When the heavily freighted wagon rolled protestingly into the deep beach sand Feather's gap lay wrapped in utter solitude but for the intruding team. The low lying dunes were as guiltless of a footprint as if man had never passed that way. The other wagon had not come to Feather's gap.

"I knew all the time that it was either Feather's or Coggin's," said Mrs. Blish, president of the Ladies' Aid. "Now, driver, take us round to Coggin's."

The driver grudgingly turned his horses, growling about "fool women," when the minister's wife spoke out sharply, "And remember we don't pay you anything extra for this blunder."

"Whoa!" shouted the driver. "Pile out!"

"Pile out!" echoed Mrs. Pashley in a scandalized voice. "We will not! You should have found out where we were going before you started. Drive on immediately."

"It'll be a dollar more," announced the man, with gloomy unconcern.

"It will not be a dollar more," declared Mrs. Pashley angrily. "Climb out, everybody. I shall speak of this to Mr. Pashley."

The picnickers poured quickly into the lake sand. Then the dinner for the whole crowd was clawed from under the driver's seat and dumped in a little pyramid on the ground. The team started off, the man muttering.

The children ran shrieking to the lake. The mothers carried the dinner and placed it in the shade of the willows. But a cry of black ants was raised, and, as the women were already exhausted from wading in the deep sand, Mrs. Pashley ordered Ike to transfer the dinner to a place of safety, as if he were the state militia.

"Take the dinner out by the lake—not too near the water," directed Mrs. Pashley, who was going about with a pained, consecrated face as if they had just been shipwrecked on a desert island.

For Ike the forenoon passed gloomily away, but he put in a good day's work waiting on the women.

As dinner time approached they began to expect the other picnickers to look them up, but no one came, so Mrs. Pashley sent Ike to Coggin's gap to ask the minister and his crowd to come to Feather's gap to eat, as that would save carrying the dinner a mile.

Ike struck out through the woods that skirted the bluffs above the sand dunes. When he had gone about half the distance he met Phyllis Jones.

"Hello!" he shouted.

"Where you been?" cried Phyllis.

"Feather's gap."

Though Phyllis had a good disposition and a great capacity for work, nature had not seen fit to bless her with much chin, but she had an honest freckled face, and Ike considered her perfection.

"We supposed you folks had gone to the wrong gap," explained Phyllis, "so the minister told me to go over and tell Mis' Pashley that, as she had the dinner, we'd all come over to Feather's gap to eat—or if she'd ruther come"—

"Mis' Pashley 'd ruther eat where she is, so that's settled," answered Ike easily. Then he proceeded to forget the other picnickers entirely.

"Lookie," he cried, producing a dingy candy heart bearing in bold red letters the suggestive motto, "Be My Honey."

"I mean worse'n that," hinted Ike darkly, slipping the heart into her hand, immediately presenting her with another saccharine sentiment, "Yours For Eternity."

After reading this solemn promise Phyllis fished out a candy heart from her own pocket, which as a thrifty and farsighted young woman she may have secreted for this very emergency, and gave it to Ike, who read with great satisfaction, "I Am Yours."

"When?" he asked briefly.

"Not till after butcherin' time," answered Phyllis promptly and firmly.

"Aw, thunder—stop!" cried Ike, greatly displeased. "Talk sense."

"You don't want me very bad if you can't wait till I'm ready. Pete Jenner 'd wait till doomsday."

"I'll—I'll wait till next grass—if you say so," vowed the distressed dairyman recklessly.

"No, Ike. Butcherin' time's long enough. I'll be ready by then."

"Lookie," cried Ike, "here's a path that leads to the lake. Let's go down."

Following this path, they found a little cove sheltered from the world by high clay ridges that shut them completely from view of either gap. Here they sat hand in hand watching the waves and, growing hungry, lunched on a whole bag of amorous worded sweets that Ike produced from a bulging pocket.

"Maybe we ought to look the others up," suggested Phyllis after a long season of blissful munching.

"Aw, thunder—no!" objected Ike.

"There might be something to do—somewheres," she added vaguely.

"I done it all," Ike assured her.

In the meantime the minister's wife and her satellites waited impatiently for Ike and the other picnickers.

"Let's feed these children and eat ourselves," suggested Mrs. Jenner.

"No," said Mrs. Pashley emphatically. "The others might not like it."

"Mis' Peters would have a fit if we et without her," declared Mrs. Blish. "Let's all go over to Coggin's gap and then send Ike and Brother Pashley back here for the dinner."

"No. If we go, we'll take the dinner with us," said Mrs. Pashley. "Albert's chest isn't strong."

"It's a long walk to tug all these victuals," sighed Mrs. Blish.

"But I guess it's the only thing to do," replied Mrs. Pashley. "Mrs. Jenner, you get the children together and we'll go."

They went through the woods, as Ike had gone, for that was the shortest way.

At last they filed thankfully down the crooked path into Coggin's gap. But the Rev. Mr. Pashley and his half of the crowd were not there.

"Where's Ike?" burst out Mrs. Blish as she sat cumbrously down on the sand to rest in the shade of an ant covered willow.

"And where's Brother Pashley and the rest gone to?" exclaimed Mrs. Jenner.

"Well, they've gone," declared Mrs. Jenner, "and we can't help it. So we'd jest better unjack these victuals double quick."

"No, no; it won't do at all!" cried Mrs. Pashley sharply as several women, anxious to feed the clamoring children, fussed over the baskets.

"Put those covers on again," commanded the minister's wife. "Mr. Pashley and the others will probably come in a few minutes."

But nobody appeared, and they began to think that the crowd must have gone to Feather's gap by the wagon road or the beach and that they had missed them.

It was long past dinner time and the shadows were beginning to lengthen when the woebegone party, still ably commanded by the minister's wife, retraced their steps to Feather's gap.

But not a vestige of the other party or Ike was to be found there.

"Now, if you'll take my advice, Mrs. Pashley, we'll eat a snack," urged Mrs. Jenner as they dumped the dinner in the sand at Feather's gap.

"We'll do no such thing," retorted the minister's wife. "I shan't have it said that I meddled with the dinner."

The children, too tired and hungry to play, dropped languidly on the warm sand or tried to drown their sorrows in copious drafts of warm lake water.

"I'm going home," said Mrs. Jenner firmly, after another bitter season of fruitless waiting. "I shall take the infant class and my five and go. The rest of you can do what you please."

She would have opened her own basket and fed the children, but it contained only sour pickles and cabbage salad, and she dared not thrust such food on the empty stomachs of the infant class, not to mention her own five.

"I thought we'd have a man to help us," fretted the minister's wife, "but, no; I send Ike on an errand, and that's the last of him."

"I should think that Brother Pashley would do something," observed Mrs. Jenner.

Mrs. Pashley let this remark pass in silence. "We will all go home now," she announced in a tired voice. "That's all we can do. Each one carry something." And again they were marshaled along, but this time it was toward home.

They had planned to walk back, for the Sunday school could not afford to ride both ways. Drearily they snailed along. A mile passed by, and its weary length seemed stretched to half a dozen.

As these picnic toilers rounded a bend in the road that now led through treeless, open fields they beheld as in a vision a dispirited company halted by the dusty roadside for a rest in the hot sun.

It was the Rev. Albert Pashley, the formidable Mrs. Peters, several other matrons and a dozen or more glum children, all sitting dejectedly on the grass dangling their tired feet in a dry ditch.

The Rev. Albert arose as spokesman for this disgruntled assembly. "Where have you been?" he inquired ungraciously of his wife, as if she and her crowd were the offending ones.

"Looking and waiting for you—all day long," replied Mrs. Pashley coldly.

"Where's Phyllis Jones?" asked Mrs. Peters, coming forward. "We sent her to tell you that we'd come to Feather's gap and eat dinner with you, but she didn't come back. So we went over there, but you was gone. Then we went back to Coggin's again, and finally we started home."

"We ain't none of us saw Phyllis," returned Mrs. Jenner. "But where's Ike Clutner?"

"None of us has seen him," answered the minister.

"The only thing to do now is jest to unpack these victuals double quick," began Mrs. Jenner.

"Land sakes!" broke in Mrs. Peters shrilly. "Ain't you folks et yet?"

"No, ma'am," answered Mrs. Blish feebly.

"Well, of all fool things!" commented Mrs. Peters. "Totin' all that truck all day long and not eatin' your share!"

"I'm surprised, Mrs. Pashley," said

ORDERED THE FOOD DUMPED ON THE GROUND.

the minister, "that you didn't take the initiative here. At least you could have fed these little ones"—

"That's what I said all the time," interrupted Mrs. Jenner.

"It has been ten hours since I myself ate," he concluded solemnly, referring to his watch.

"Why, I thought—it would be nicer to eat together," began Mrs. Pashley, but nobody seemed to hear her.

For Mrs. Peters ordered all the food dumped on the ground by the roadside.

The ravenous children squatted quickly before the delayed dinner. The older people lowered themselves to the ground awkwardly, but gratefully. Then the Rev. Albert asked the shortest picnic blessing on record, and the meal began by the dusty roadside.

At last around a bend in the road, hand in hand, came Ike and Phyllis. Ike's pockets were bulging with stones and his face wore a satisfied grin. Phyllis showed a nervous tendency to giggle.

"You're great folks!" cried Mrs. Peters. "Where've you been?"

"Back aplece," replied Ike boldly.

"We sort of lost track of time," confessed Phyllis guiltily.

"We've most of us been there ourselves," the Rev. Albert remarked genially, with an added unction in his voice in view of the possible wedding fee.

"Aw, thunder!" grunted the red faced Ike, who didn't know what else to say.

America Is the Best Field For American Writers.

By DAVID GRAHAM PHILLIPS, Novelist.

IT is altogether a mistake to suppose that the public and the publishers do not want originality. The latter would succeed just as well as it did in Shakespeare's day. The trouble is that our writers are TOO BUSY STUDYING THE LITERARY STYLE OF EUROPE. They are ambitious to incorporate in their work the verbal symmetries of the French writers, and they fail to recognize the superabundance of material that awaits their choosing right here.

NEVER BEFORE IN THE WORLD'S HISTORY HAS THERE BEEN SO FERTILE A SOIL FOR GENIUS AS LIES READY FOR THE LITERARY PLOW IN AMERICA TODAY. IT IS HERE THAT THE STRUGGLE FOR EXISTENCE IS BEING WAGED MOST FIERCELY, WITH TITANIC FORCES ARRAYED ON EVERY SIDE, THAT PARTAKES OF ALL THE GLORIES THAT WOULD FURNISH FORTH A WORLD EPIC AT A TOUCH FROM THE WAND OF SOME FEARLESS FARSEEING GENIUS. NEW YORK IS THE CENTER OF IT ALL, MORE INTENSELY TYPICAL OF AMERICA THAN PARIS IS OF FRANCE OR LONDON IS OF ENGLAND.

In our short stories, in the articles that go to make up our magazines and newspapers, we have A SHREWDER, A MORE HUMOROUS STYLE AND CONTENT to show than the dull and hopeless material that makes up the ordinary English magazine. By contrast it may be that our books do not stand out as well as do the books of England. But the birth of the new spirit that is showing itself in the short story is AN EVIDENCE OF THE TENDENCY HERE TO BETTER THINGS, and he would be a blind prophet who fails to see that this tendency will come ere long to its full fruition in the novel, will come just as soon as the genius arises who is able to master it and make it his own individual creation for posterity.

European Workmen Better Protected Than Ours.

By HENRY R. SEAGER, Professor of Political Economy, Columbia University.

IN THE FIELD OF SOCIAL LEGISLATION THE UNITED STATES IS BEHIND THE MORE PROGRESSIVE COUNTRIES OF EUROPE. THE ENDS TO BE AIMED AT IN ANY PROGRAMME ARE, FIRST, TO PROTECT WAGE EARNERS IN THE CONTINUED ENJOYMENT OF STANDARDS OF LIVING TO WHICH THEY ARE ALREADY ACCUSTOMED AND, SECOND, TO ASSIST THEM TO ATTAIN TO HIGHER STANDARDS OF LIVING.

The principal contingencies which threaten standards of living already acquired are INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENTS, ILLNESS, INVALIDITY AND OLD AGE, PREMATURE DEATH AND UNEMPLOYMENT. These contingencies are not in practice adequately provided against by wage earners themselves. In consequence the losses they entail, in the absence of any SPECIAL PROVISION against them, fall with crushing force on the FAMILIES which suffer from them and only too often reduce such families from a position of independence and self respect to one of humiliation and inefficiency.

The following REMEDIES for the evils resulting from this situation are suggested: Adequate indemnification must be sought along the line of workmen's compensation for industrial accidents at the expense of the employer (the British system) or of compulsory accident insurance (the German system). The former seems to accord better with American ideas and traditions.

Provision against illness not directly traceable to the employment must be sought either in COMPULSORY ILLNESS INSURANCE OR IN SUBSIDIES AND STATE DIRECTED SICK INSURANCE CLUBS. Trades unions may assume the function of such clubs in organized trades. The latter seems better suited to present American conditions than compulsory illness insurance.

Provisions against invalidity and old age may be through COMPULSORY OLD AGE INSURANCE OR THROUGH STATE OLD AGE PENSIONS. The latter, though more costly, are believed to be better suited to American conditions. Premature death may be provided against by an extension of the machinery for caring for the victims of industrial accidents and of illness.

The most promising plan for providing against the evil of unemployment appears to be through subsidizing and supervising trades unions which pay OUT OF WORK BENEFITS to stimulate this side of their activity. PUBLIC EMPLOYMENT BUREAUS AND INDUSTRIAL COLONIES FOR THE UNEMPLOYED may also help to alleviate the evil.

Study How to Use Money, Not How to Make It.

By Former Ambassador JOSEPH H. CHOATE, President of the New York State Charities Aid Association.

IT used to be said when I was a boy that the true rule was for a person TO DEVOTE ONE-TENTH OF HIS INCOME TO CHARITY, and that if he did not do so the other nine-tenths would somehow or other not be properly taken care of.

I WONDER WHETHER WE HAVE ALL LIVED UP TO THAT RULE. I AM AFRAID WE HAVE NOT, AND I AM AFRAID THE FINANCIAL CONVULSIONS WHICH HAVE FALLEN ON US DURING THE PRESENT YEAR ARE PARTLY DUE TO THE VIOLATION OF THAT RULE BY THE WHOLE COMMUNITY.

If all the people we know who make up the 80,000,000 in the United States in the last ten years had not been so severely bent upon MAKING money, but had been seriously studying how best they might USE some of it and how they might put that 10 per cent to charitable uses, I DOUBT VERY MUCH WHETHER THESE CALAMITIES WHICH HAVE VISITED US WOULD HAVE COME WITH THEIR FULL FORCE.

Enlarging Your Business

If you are in business and you want to make more money you will read every word we have to say. Are you spending your money for advertising in haphazard fashion as if intended for charity, or do you advertise for direct results?

Did you ever stop to think how your advertising can be made a source of profit to you, and how its value can be measured in dollars and cents. If you have not, you are throwing money away.

Advertising is a modern business necessity, but must be conducted on business principles. If you are not satisfied with your advertising you should set aside a certain amount of money to be spent annually, and then carefully note the effect it has in increasing your volume of business; whether a 10, 20 or 30 per cent increase. If you watch this gain from year to you will become intensely interested in your advertising, and how you can make it enlarge your business.

If you try this method we believe you will not want to let a single issue of this paper go to press without something from your store.

We will be pleased to have you call on us, and we will take pleasure in explaining our annual contract for so many inches, and how it can be used in whatever amount that seems necessary to you.

If you can sell goods over the counter we can also show you why this paper will best serve your interests when you want to reach the people of this community.

When You Need Printing Done

You want it to be of the very best kind. As you expect your printed matter to make business it is necessary it should do the talking for you. Poor or indifferent printing cannot do this as it lacks the strong points required to gain and hold the interest of the patron.

¶ In this particular line of work we excel, for several reasons, viz: 1st; we have the largest and best variety of up-to-date type to be found in the western part of the state. 2nd; we carry only the very best grades of papers; and 3rd; the know-how with which to create original and attractive tye display.

BOWSER'S TEST FAILS

Wanted to Show Homeless Man He Was Not Cold Hearted.

GOOD START, BUT BAD END.

Wanderer Who Would Not Work Sheltered and Given Food and Wine—Old Philosopher Puts Him Out of the House Finally.

[Copyright, 1908, by T. C. McClure.]

Mr. Bowser was reading and smoking the other evening when the doorbell rang, and as the girl was out Mrs. Bowser answered. A few words passed, and she returned to the sitting room and sat down without explanation.

"When Bridget's beau comes here, he ought to ring the basement bell," Mr. Bowser finally explained.

"He always does."

"Was it some one inquiring for Jones or Green?"

"No, dear."

"Well, why don't you say who it was? He seemed to be appealing for something, and you were curt as you please."

HE SAW A TRAMP KICKED OUT.

"Why, there is no mystery about it. It was a great, big healthy tramp who asked for a dime, and I told him to pass on."

"Ah, I see. A homeless wanderer applies at your door on a night like this, and you not only turn him down, but do it in a way to hurt his feelings."

"The cook fed him yesterday, and he found fault with what she gave him."

"How do you know? You know because she said so. She said so because she was vexed at having to bother with him. You made no investigation to see if her statement was correct."

"I know that all fellows like him ought to be in jail for the winter," replied Mrs. Bowser, with a little show of temper.

"Oh, you do? Because a man has met with misfortune he ought to be dragged off to jail, had he? By thunder, Mrs. Bowser, but if any one had told me ten years ago that you would turn out to be such a hard hearted woman I couldn't have possibly believed it. We have passed through almost a financial panic, winter is with us, and times are hard, and yet you send a man forth into the night to sleep and freeze in a snowdrift. An African savage wouldn't be as inhospitable."

"I had no 10 cents to give him, and I knew you wouldn't bother with him."

"You knew what? Speak for yourself, madam. Had I known who it was I should have given him at least a quarter. That's the difference between us. I presume he inquired for me, and you told him I wasn't in. He probably turned around at the gate and looked at the house and said to himself: 'This is the Bowser house, and it is inhabited by the most selfish and cold hearted people in this town. I will warn all other unfortunate people against calling here to be insulted and lied to.'"

"There will be at least three tramps here in the course of the day tomorrow," said Mrs. Bowser, "and I will ask them all to sit down in the parlor and wait for you. I won't tell them how you threw one of the profession over the fence last spring and put his shoulder out of joint."

Wouldn't Hear Excuses.

"Woman, don't try to bluff me! You have done an un-Christian thing. You have turned a man from your door who may be dead of hunger and cold before daylight. Don't seek to excuse your conduct by indulging in sarcasm. I threw a tramp over the fence because he sassed me. This one simply appealed to you, and you practically told him to go away and die in the snow. By jiminy, but a woman that will do such a thing as that would put poison in her husband's coffee!"

"Mr. Bowser, aren't you making a great fuss over a tramp who is getting along in his way as well as you are? He looked fat and healthy, and his breath had the odor of gin."

"You say that to bolster up your case, but it won't do, woman—it won't do. He has gone away from here feeling that this house is occupied by savages. I propose to disabuse his mind on that score. I am going out on the streets and hunt for him. If I can find him I shall bring him back with me and seek to cheer him up a bit."

"Very well," was the reply, and Mr. Bowser put on his hat and overcoat and started out. He hadn't far to go. Just as he reached the corner he saw a tramp kicked out of the drug store, and, approaching him, he queried:

"Did you call at a house down the street here about half an hour ago and ask for 10 cents?"

"I did that," was the reply.

"And was it a woman that came to the door?"

"It was, and she told me to go to. She is a woman without a heart, sir."

"She is my wife, but perfectly heartless. I want you to go back with me and have something to eat, and I will promise you a quarter when you are ready to come away."

"Is it a job you are putting up on me?" asked the tramp as he regarded Mr. Bowser with suspicion.

"Not at all. I am a man that wouldn't turn a dog from his door on a winter's night. You need not be afraid."

The tramp thought it too good to be true, but went along, and Mr. Bowser led him down to the table and said:

"I'll put food before you, and I want to see you eat all you can. I presume you have not had a full meal in two or three days."

"Not in three days, sir. If you please, sir, have you got a drop of claret about? I always take a drop before my dinner if it's possible. It's by the doctor's orders, sir."

Mr. Bowser looked at him and hesitated, but finally placed a full bottle on the table and turned to the refrigerator for cold victuals. When he had turned back, just half the contents of the bottle had vanished.

Entertains the Tramp.

"Say, now, but this is boss!" chuckled the tramp as the victuals came on. "Any danger of that cold hearted wife of yours coming down and disturbing the picnic?"

"None whatever."

"Then you run your own house. That's what every man should do, but when I saw her at the door I surely thought she was the boss of things. Um! Say, old man, don't hurry me. Lemme eat as long as I want to. Hope you don't object if I take a little of this claret with my meal? It's the doctor's orders."

"You are what you call a professional tramp, aren't you?" asked Mr. Bowser as he sat down.

"I am that and right at the head of the class. Yes, sir; been in the purfesh for fifteen years."

"And something ails you that you can't work?"

"Something does, sir. I've a dislike to it."

"You mean that you won't work if you can help it?"

The man gave Mr. Bowser a long wink and then laid his finger alongside his nose and whispered in confidence:

"This is the thing to work at. Say, boss, jine de gang and be one of us. You'd be bully at workin' a racket. Wid dat phiz of yours you could make 'em believe dat you had seven different sorts of mortal diseases."

"Look here, sir," replied Mr. Bowser, who knew that Mrs. Bowser was at the head of the stairs and catching every word, "I don't think you are quite the man I took you for. I thought you were some one who had met with hard luck."

"Say, dat's one on Lucky Bill—ha, ha, ha! Luck? Did any tramp ever have a softer snap than I've got right here? I meets the soulless lady at de door, and she tells me to go to. Her husband comes out on de street and finds me and says to come back. He sets out de wine and de grub and talks like a brother to me. When dis bottle is finished he'll set another down, and when I'm ready to go dere's a quarter and a heaven bless ye waitin' for me."

"Look here, you old loafer, I want you to get out of this!" exclaimed Mr. Bowser as he started up.

"What! Goin' back on a pal, old cock! Yer can't, yer know. Youse is no cold hearted son of a gun. Youse hain't like de cold faced lady at de front door."

Mr. Bowser grabbed him by the collar and pulled him over backward, and then he dragged him out into the hall to the door. The tramp fought as well as he could, but he was in the grasp of a cyclone. He was hurled through the door, and then Mr. Bowser lifted him on high and drove him head first into a snowdrift and left nothing but his legs sticking out. Mrs. Bowser hadn't a word to say as the sympathizer came puffing into the sitting room. He waited for her to make some observation, and as she didn't he struck a pose and exclaimed:

"Telephone your lawyer! Telephone him the first thing in the morning! Get him over here. Settle the amount of the alimony and then go to your mother's, for you have driven me to the dead line at last!" M. QUAD.

Representative Burton Places Ohio Man in Nomination.

SPLENDID RECORD IN REVIEW

In Urging Claims of the Secretary of War as Party's Leader, His Long and Useful Public Service Is Set Forth.

Chicago.—In the Republican national convention Representative Theodore E. Burton placed in nomination for the presidency, William H. Taft of Ohio. Mr. Burton said:

This convention enters upon the grave responsibility of selecting a presidential candidate with the serene assurance that the Republican party will continue to rule this people. It is especially appropriate that this gathering should be held in this marvelous city of Chicago. Here it was that the righteous uprising against slavery and Bourbonism, sprung from the nation's conscience, raised its first triumphant voice when Abraham Lincoln was nominated. And here, again, with notes of thunderous acclaim, enraptured throngs greeted the naming of Garfield, of Blaine, of Harrison, and of Roosevelt.

Again Ohio presents a candidate to the national Republican convention. In seven stubbornly contested presidential campaigns, sons of her sacred soil have led the embattled Republican hosts to victory. The Buckeye state has assuredly contributed her share of statesmen and generals for the upbuilding of the nation. But that of which we are prouder still is her stalwart citizenship—the mightiest bulwark of the republic in every commonwealth—made up of America's free yeomen, ever ready to respond to the tocsin of alarm in days of peril, or to crush corruption whenever it raises its menacing head. From this citizenship Ohio, in the supreme emergency of the civil war, sent forth more than 200,000 soldiers for our country's defense, a formidable array easily surpassing in numbers the world-conquering legions of imperial Caesar, and even larger than any army ever mustered by Britain for the tented field.

We welcome the friendly rivalry of candidates from other states—from the great Empire state, the Keystone state, Indiana, Illinois, and Wisconsin, forming with Ohio a broad expanse extending in unbroken sweep from old ocean to the uppermost bound of the greatest of inland seas. Each of these presents a leader among leaders whose achievements and renown are not confined to the narrow limits of a single commonwealth. To-day with fervid earnestness we wage a contest for the prize. To-morrow, united for the fray and quickened by a common fiery zeal, the champions of all the candidates will go forth with mounting enthusiasm to vanquish the foe.

The most perplexing questions of to-day arise from the bountiful development of our material wealth. Such a development can not occur without the creation of inequalities and dangers to the social fabric. I most strenuously deny that the American business man or the American citizen cherishes lower standards than the citizens of any other country. The American people are by no means depraved. But by reason of their busy absorption in varied pursuits and of the glamour which attends success in great undertakings, questionable methods have been able to engraft themselves upon the business of the country. Rich rewards have too frequently been gained by some who are none too scrupulous. Monopoly, dishonesty and fraud have assumed a prominence which calls for the earnest attention and condemnation of every man who truly loves the republic.

Against all these abuses and in the work for restoring old ideals of honesty and equality, as well as for higher standards of civic duty, one man has stood pre-eminent, and that man is Theodore Roosevelt. Against corruption in every form he has set his face with grim determination, prompt and fearless in action and with that intelligent leadership which has assured the establishment of a better era in which the strong and the weak alike must submit themselves to the impartial execution of the law. The story of his achievements will make up one of the brightest pages in the history of this or any age and will prove that to-day, as in any critical hour of social unrest or of danger, the man will appear who can grapple with the emergency.

Who so fit to take up the tasks which this wondrous generation demands should be wisely and impartially performed as his great war secretary? Since the day when, in Benjamin Harrison's administration, these two first met—the one as solicitor general, the other as a member of the civil service commission—they have been bound together by like ideals and aims, by close ties of friendship, and by the exchange of mutual counsel, each with his own individuality and characteristics keeping constantly in view the ennobling vision of a better and a greater America. Since the day when, less than 30 years of age, Mr. Taft denounced, with burning words, a member of his profession who had been guilty of flagrantly vicious practices and had demoralized the community, he has ever been associated with the cause of true reform—with that reform which will not content itself with academic dissertation or hollow words. He has been imbued with the spirit of action. His advocacy of sounder conditions has never arisen from a desire for the exploitation of himself.

No one has ever yet assumed the presidential chair who had received a more ideal preparation for the duties of that great office. As judge in state and federal courts, as solicitor general, as governor of the Philippines, as secretary of war, which has included the work of colonial secretary and director of national public works, he has received his training and has always shown himself master of the situation and competent to make more honorable and beloved the American name. There have been no years of inaction in his career. He has been continuously engaged in weighty tasks and each successive service has been characterized by an increasing influence upon most vital questions.

In our domestic affairs, in whatever position he has held, he has displayed the rare union of a judicial temperament with an unsurpassed gift for administrative management. Although of an aggressive personality, he possesses an infinite good nature, a charm of manner and a poise which have made him a model for exalted station. In the final analysis even the highest officials must be judged as men, and under this criterion Secretary Taft is now and will ever be known for his broad sympathies with every grade of humanity and as one invariably actuated by that democratic spirit which should characterize a progressive American. And yet no one can for a moment hesitate to recognize his severity in dealing with wrong-doing. While no honest enterprise need fear him, no dishonest scheme could hope to hide its face from the light or to escape punishment.

More than any other of our public men he has had to do with our outlying dependencies and colonial relations. It was he who took in charge the prosecution of that colossal enterprise on the isthmus, the canal uniting the lesser and the greater ocean, and under his directing hand the completion of this most stupendous of public works is no longer a vague and distant hope, but an imminent reality. With his ever-ready skill as a pacificator, he restored tranquillity in the fertile island of Cuba, so often distracted by civil strife. In the far-off Philippines, under a blazing tropical sky, he found a people of many races and tribes, degraded by centuries of misrule and oppression; and there too he not only established the rule of law and local control in place of confusion and bloody strife, but showed the way to self-government, and a new recognition of the rights of man.

In the larger sphere of world politics, we are entering into new and closer bonds with all the nations of the earth. Who is better qualified than he to lead America to her true position in this later day when the boundaries established in the centuries past are becoming less distinct and kingdoms and races are beginning to realize that they have all one common destiny?

Secretary Taft has exceptional familiarity with conditions in the distant orient—in Japan, in China. We may rest assured that our traditional friendship with Japan will continue. Moreover, the future promises that the slumbering millions of China will awake from the lethargy of ages, and she then will realize that the morning dawn of fresher life and wider outlook comes to her across the broad Pacific from free America, her truest friend and helper. We covet no portion of her territory. We desire from her, as from all nations, increased good will and that mutual respect which knows neither bluster nor cringing on either side. Thus in this new era of larger relations, Secretary Taft, with his comprehension of national and international subjects, would furnish a certainty of peace and sustained prestige. Under him, at home and everywhere, this mighty people would have an assured confidence in the secure development and progress of the country and would rest safe in the reliance that a chief executive was at the helm who, in peace or in war, would guide the destinies of the nation with a strong hand and with a gentle, patriotic heart.

And so to-day, in the presence of more than ten thousand, and with the inspiring thought of the well-nigh ten thousand times ten thousand who dwell within our borders, I nominate for the presidency that perfect type of American manhood, that peerless representative of the noblest ideals in our national life, William H. Taft, of Ohio.

Address of Senator Burrows at Republican Convention.

PROGRESS UNDER PARTY RULE

Temporary Chairman Declares That Tariff Will Be Revised—Legislation Enacted to Prevent Recurrence of Financial Panics.

Chicago, June 16.—Senator Burrows of Michigan, the temporary chairman of the Republican national convention, on assuming the chair delivered a speech sounding the keynote of the gathering. After a few brief opening remarks, he reviewed the history of the party and the country, showing the wonderful progress and development during the Republican administration of public affairs.

The work of the nine executive departments, the pension bureau and the army was touched upon in turn and the successful and efficient management pointed out. The management of our outlying possessions was also dwelt upon by the chairman.

On the subject of tariff revision, Senator Burrows said: "The Republican party stands for a revision and readjustment of our customs laws as changed industrial conditions at home and abroad may have made necessary, keeping steadily in view the cardinal principles of protection to American industries and American labor. As evidence of its good faith in this regard, the national house of representatives, clothed under the constitution with exclusive jurisdiction to 'originate all bills for raising revenue,' on the 20th of April just past, by formal resolution, authorized and directed its committee on ways and means, the organ of the house having jurisdiction of the question, 'to sit during the recess of congress and to gather such information, through governmental agents and otherwise, as it may see fit, looking toward the preparation of a bill for the revision of the tariff.'

"Supplementing this action on the part of the house of representatives, and co-operating with it, the senate, in the exercise of its constitutional prerogative to 'propose or concur with amendments as on other bills,' on the 16th of May passed the following resolution:

"'Resolved, that the committee on finance are authorized, in connection with investigations heretofore ordered by the senate, with the view of promptly securing the information necessary for an intelligent revision of the customs laws of the United States, to call to their assistance experts in the executive departments of the government and to employ such other assistants as they shall require; and they are especially directed to report what further legislation is necessary to secure equitable treatment for the agricultural and other products of the United States in foreign countries, and they shall also, in the consideration of changes of rates, secure proof of the relative cost of production in this and in principal competing foreign countries of the various articles affected by the tariff upon which changes in rates of duty are desirable.'

"These public declarations by congress, upon the eve of the election, give the most solemn assurance possible that the work will be speedily undertaken and pressed to an early consummation.

"In this connection it can be safely promised that whatever revision or readjustment takes place under the control of the Republican party, it will give just and adequate protection to American industries and American labor and defend the American market against the unjust and unequal aggressions from whatever quarter they may come."

Speaking of the late financial panic, Chairman Burrows said: "The recent panic called the attention of congress to the necessity of further legislation, and a measure has been passed providing for an emergency currency of $500,000,000 to be issued under certain conditions and limitations, an authorization, it is believed, which will prevent the recurrence of any such disaster as befell the country last fall. The secretary of the treasury has already taken the necessary steps to give effect to this legislation, and banking associations are already forming to avail themselves of the benefits of this act. It is doubtful if the provisions of this act will ever be invoked, as the ability to supply $500,000,000 additional currency whenever needed will of itself have a tendency to make its issuance unnecessary."

The appointment of the monetary commission, which it was hoped would formulate a system that will meet every legitimate business, was also mentioned.

In conclusion, Senator Burrows said: "The platform will voice the dominant thought of the people, and the candidates nominated must stand upon it firm and erect. They must have the patriotism and sagacity of a Lincoln, the tenacity of a Grant, the wisdom and moderation of McKinley and the courage of a Roosevelt. With such a platform and such candidates the issue can not be in doubt. The Republican party confidently submits its record to the approving judgment of the American people and, upon its renewed declaration of faith, invokes continuance of public favor."

Disappointment.

Agent—Isn't that soubrette I sent you chic?

Manager—I don't see much chick about her. She's a regular old hen.

RECORD OF PARTY

Senator Lodge Eulogizes the Work of Republicans.

LONG LIST OF ACHIEVEMENTS

Battle Cries of Party in Power Declared Always to Have Been the Watchwords of Great Causes—President Roosevelt Praised.

Chicago, June 17.—Senator Lodge of Massachusetts, permanent chairman of the Republican national convention, on taking the chair addressed the delegates substantially as follows:

Gentlemen of the Convention: I thank you most sincerely for the great honor you have done me in choosing me to preside over your deliberations. I have, indeed, heard of conventions where the honor of such a post as that now occupied by me, is dubious, and where, if excitement is present, pleasure is conspicuous by its absence. But to be the presiding officer of a Republican convention is ever a high distinction to which no man can be insensible. Gentlemen of the convention, again I thank you.

I shall not delay or detain you with many words. You resolutions will set forth the principles of the party and declare the policies upon which we shall ask for the support of the people of the United States. With fullness and with eloquence your temporary chairman has already reviewed the history of the party, has given you account of what has been done, and has set forth what we hope and mean to do. My duty is merely to aid you, so far as I can, in the orderly and prompt transaction of the business which has brought us together. That business is momentous—nothing less than to name here the two men who, speaking with the simplicity of truth, will be the next president and vice-president of the United States. In order to win for them, and for our party, an assured as well as a merited victory, we must defeat our opponents, whose exclusion from power is desired by the country and deserved by them.

Achievements of the Party.

No political party in modern times can show such a record of achievement during the last 50 years as the Republican party. Upon that record we can stand and challenge all comers to the lists. The American people must choose next November between us and the Democratic party. With the Democratic party, and with that alone, must the comparison be made. We differ from that party in some important particulars. We both, it is true, have a past and a history, but we treat those possessions very differently. They wish to keep their past a profound secret. We seek by all means to publish ours to the world. If we refer to their history they charge us with calumny. We regard ours, truthful and undistorted, as our greatest glory. To the youth of the country they say: "Judge us solely by our undiscovered future." We say: "Read our record; judge us by our past and our present, and from these learn what we are—what we have been and what we mean to be." Recall the cries which have sounded from the lips of these two parties during the last half century. On the one side: "Slavery, secession, repudiation of the public debt, fiat money, free trade, free silver, the overthrow of the courts and government ownership."

On the Republican side: "Free soil, free men, the union, the payment of the debt, honest money, protection to American industry, the gold standard, the maintenance of law, of order and of the courts and the government regulation of great corporations." The old shibboleths of the Democrats are to-day the epitaphs of policies which are dead and damned. They serve only to remind us of dangers escaped or to warn us of perils to be shunned. The battle cries of the Republicans have been the watchwords of great causes. They tell of victories won and triumphs tasted—they are embodied in the laws and mark the stepping stones by which the republic has risen to ever greater heights of power and prosperity.

The great body of the American people, neither very rich nor very poor, the honest, the thrifty, the hard-working, the men and women who earn and save, have no base envy—no fanatic hatred of wealth, whether individual or corporate, if it has been honestly gained and is wisely and generously employed with a sense of responsibility to the public. But this great body of our people, by habit and instinct alike wisely conservative, these people, who are the bone and sinew of our country and upon whom its fortunes and its safety rest, began to observe, with deep alarm, the recent manifestations of the new economic conditions. More and more they came to believe that these vast fortunes and these huge combinations of capital were formed and built up by tortuous and dishonest means and through a cynical disregard of the very laws which the mass of the people were compelled to obey. They began to fear that political power was being reft from their hands and put into the possession of the money holders, that their dearest rights were in danger, that their hopes of success and advancement were cut off by business systems which they could not understand but by which the individual was sacrificed and held down.

Call to the Government.

To those who looked beneath the surface an ominous unrest was apparent. The violent counsels of violent men, who aimed at the destruction of property and the overthrow of law, began to be heard and hearkened to. The great order-loving, industrious masses of the American people turned away from these advocates of violence, but, at the same time, demanded that their government should give them, in lawful and reasonable ways, the protection to which they were entitled, against the dangers they justly apprehended.

The great duty of fulfilling these righteous demands, like all the great public services of the last half century, was imposed upon the Republican party and they have not flinched from the burden. Under the lead of the president, the Republican party has grappled with the new problems, born of the new conditions. The response of the people to the policies urged by the president, has been so emphatic that it has been made clear, once for all, that the government of the United States is never to be dominated by money and financial interests, and that the political party which permits itself to be ruled by them is thereby doomed to defeat.

Laws Must Be Enforced.

Nothing is more destructive to the respect for law—the chief bulwark of civilized society—than to place laws upon the statute book in order merely to still public clamor and satisfy the people but which it is never intended to enforce. The worst laws imaginable are those which are allowed to rust, unused, because, if enforced, they might interfere with vested abuses or curb the rich and powerful.

The president has enforced the laws as he found them on the statute book. For this performance of his sworn duty, he has been bitterly attacked. It was to be expected. Vested abuses and profitable wrongs cry out loudly when their entrenchments are carried, and some one is sure to be hurt when the bayonets of the law are pushed home. In the great American electorate, money has few votes, but it can command many voices and cause many birds to sing. The result is that the president is the best abused and the most popular man in the United States to-day. He has been more abused than any president except Washington, Lincoln and Grant. He possesses the love and confidence of the American people to a degree never equaled except by Lincoln and Washington. May it not be said, in sober truth, that the fearless performance of a sworn duty is not without its exceeding great reward?

Laws That Have Benefited Country.

But the work has not ceased with the enforcement of existing laws. A Republican congress and a Republican president have placed new laws upon the statute books, designed to carry out the Republican policy of government regulation in a safe, reasonable and effective manner. The Elkins law, aimed at preferential rebates, which have been the curse of our transportation and our business; the railroad rate law, which made the supervision of railroads more effective, and the pure food law, which has been, in the highest degree, beneficent to the masses of our people, are all monuments of the policy and the labors of the Republican party.

The president, who has led his party and the people in this great work, retires, by his own determination, from his high office, on the fourth of March next. His refusal of a renomination, dictated by the loftiest motives and by a noble loyalty to American traditions, is final and irrevocable. That man is no friend to Theodore Roosevelt and does not cherish his name and fame, who now, from any motive, seeks to urge him as a candidate for the great office which he has finally declined. The president has refused what his countrymen would gladly have given him; he says what he means and means what he says, and his party and his country will respect his wishes as they honor his high character and great public service.

Party Pledged to Policies.

But, although the president retires, he leaves his policies behind him. To those policies the Republican party stands pledged. We must carry out as we have begun, regardless alike of the radicals of reaction and the radicals of revolution. We must hold fast to that which is good while we make the advances which the times demand.

We ask for the confidence and support of the American people because we have met the problems of the day and have tried patiently to solve them.

We believe in the maintenance of law and order and in the support of the courts in all their rights and dignity. We believe in equal rights for all men and are opposed to special privileges for any man, or any class of men, high or low, rich or poor. We, who established the gold standard, are pledged to the cause of sound finance. We stand for protection to American industry and American labor, and we will resist all the assaults of free trade under whatever name it comes disguised. We will see to the defense of the country. We mean to have a navy worthy of the American name. We seek peace and friendship with all the nations, but alliance with none. Yet, we have no intention of being a "hermit nation." The great services of the president to the world's peace will be continued by the party which he has led. We are a party fit to rule and govern—to legislate and administer, and not a fortuitous collection of atoms whose only form of thought or motion is to oppose. Above all, we are true to our traditions and to our past. True now, as we were in the days of Lincoln.

In this spirit we must prevail—by this sign we must conquer.

SPEECH OF BORAH

Address Seconding Nomination of William H. Taft.

FAVORITE SON OF COUNTRY

Idaho Senator Says Efficiency of Ohioan Has Been Tested and Proved from Faraway Possessions—Speaks in Name of Great Northwest.

Chicago. — Senator William H. Borah of Idaho, seconded Burton's nomination of Taft for the presidency in a brief speech. He spoke in part as follows:

"Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the Convention: We are met as the representatives of a great political party to select the next president of the United States. If we were simply selecting a candidate our task would still be a serious one, but we are doing something more. With the completed work at Denver already within our prophetic vision we catch the inspiration of the conflict just ahead, feel for a time the thrill of nervous preparation for battle and then read the results of November by the light of that perennial smile which has made Nebraska famous and Democratic defeat a great investment.

"When the Republican party came into power under the inspired leadership of Abraham Lincoln, it consecrated the days of its youth first to the preservation of constitutional government and second to the throwing ajar the 'door of hope' to every man, woman and child beneath the flag. It has never apostatized from the faith of those old heroic days. It has never forfeited its aptitude for achievement nor forgotten its pledge to humanity.

"Issues have changed and questions are entirely different now. But the task is no less, the result equally as momentous, an exalted leadership for the party just as essential as when Lincoln walked with patience and compassion the paths of power and Grant in his imperturbable silence wrestled with the wreckage of reconstruction days. 'Peace has her victories no less renowned than war,' and the men or class of men who are to adjust the equities between the contending forces in the industrial world of to-day—insure to property its rightful protection, and labor its rightful portion of the world's wealth and teach to all obedience to the law—they, too, will have earned the gratitude and the love of their countrymen for all time. There never has been and there never will be a greater problem imposed upon a political party than that of adjusting the machinery of the government so as to control, not destroy but control, the gigantic industrial forces of the land, that capital may have its full security and toil both its freedom and its reward. Each and all should enjoy inviolate their rights under the broad shield of the constitution, and neither rich nor poor should ever under this government appeal in vain to the law for a full protection of his rights, but the Republican party must continue to do as it has done from its birth—take its initiative in governmental action from the viewpoint of the men who dig the nation's glory from the earth or compel her grandeur from the factory and field.

"In the midst of this marvelous era, with these vast duties just ahead, with an aroused public conscience calling for men of capacity and experience, of tried and known courage, calling for a leader true to the great cardinal principles of a people's government, a leader whose heart is in sympathy and intellect in unison with the unchained energies of this republic, a vast majority of our countrymen have turned with enthusiasm and confidence to William H. Taft. Indiana and Illinois, New York, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin are proud of their favorite sons, and well they may be—they are men of remarkable worth and power—they are a part of the intellectual wealth of this nation. But we bring you the favorite son of our common country, the chosen candidate of the voter from every part of the land, one whose force and efficiency in statecraft have been felt, tested and approved from the far-away possessions whose belated people are learning for the first time the duties of citizenship to the Atlantic seaboard teeming with the highest civilization of the world to-day.

"To nominate him is but to record the wishes and obey the commands of the countless thousands who are to-day watching the result of this great gathering, anxious that nothing be done to dampen the ardor or chill the enthusiasm that is turning again to the old party of so many brilliant victories—anxious, not only anxious but determined—that no backward step shall be taken in this great civic struggle now going on under the banner of the Republican party for the full rehabilitation of the individual rights of the common people.

"The great northwest, rich with her imprisoned wealth, with her wondrous combination of undeveloped resources, rich in a citizenship which yet adheres to the old precepts and political principles which have made this the greatest government in the world, cognizant of his experience and ability, believing that he is broad enough and patriotic enough to appreciate the demands of the present and progressive enough and hopeful enough to comprehend our future, believing, too, in his unswerving devotion to those underlying principles of justice and righteousness upon which all governmental action should be based, seconds the nomination of William H. Taft."

NATION MOURNS DEATH OF GROVER CLEVELAND

Last of the Ex-Presidents Answers the Final Call at Princeton, N. J.

HIS DEATH WAS VERY SUDDEN

Condition Recently More Favorable and Announcement of Fatal Termination of Struggle Adds Consternation to Grief.

Princeton, N. J., June 24.—Grover Cleveland, former President of the United States, died suddenly at his home at Westland, here, at 8.40 o'clock this morning. Death was due to heart failure, complicated with other diseases. The passing away of Mr. Cleveland was not immediately announced, but was delayed until an official statement had been prepared by the physicians who had been attending him in the various periods of his illness.

Although Mr. Cleveland had been seriously ill from time to time, the announcement of his death came like a thunderbolt to those who had been watching his illness.

Last night there was a slight flurry among the friends of the Clevelands that something was seriously wrong with the ex-President. This was occasioned by a visit of Drs. Bryant and Lockwood of New York, and Mrs. Cleveland, later in the evening, said that there was no occasion for alarm and that Mr. Cleveland was getting along nicely. This reassurance totally unprepared their friends for the announcement of his death.

Mr. Cleveland died in bed in the second story front room. Those at the bedside when the end came were Mrs. Cleveland and the three physicians. The only other person in the house at the time were a number of servants.

Mrs. Cleveland is prostrated and only a few of the sympathetic neighbors have been able to see her. When the near-by ...ds heard of the ex-President's ... many of the them hurried to Westland to render whatever assistance they could, but Profs. West and Hibbin and the physicians had matters well in hand.

The death of Mr. Cleveland came as a terrible shock to the people of Princeton, who were proud of their fellow-citizen. They have always had a warm spot for both the ex-President and Mrs. Cleveland, because they selected Princeton as their home after they left the White House. His death was not in the least expected by them, and many at first refused to believe the sad news. Flags all over Princeton are at half staff.

The funeral of former President Cleveland will be held Friday at Westland, Mr. Cleveland's residence on Bayard lane, Princeton, and will in deference to Mrs. Cleveland's wishes be private.

Despite the wishes, however, of Mrs. Cleveland the funeral will hardly be as private as she wished. The attendance of President Roosevelt will make it more or less of a public character. The offer of an escort from a regiment made by Governor Fort, was declined. The governor and staff will attend as private citizens.

Mr. Cleveland was seventy-one years old on March 18 last.

GRANTSVILLE.

Mr. Charles Beachy, who was married on May 28th to Miss Ethel McConnell, the pretty and accomplished daughter of the late W. McConnell, the box manufacturer of Wheeling, W. Va., and who were spending a couple weeks of the honeymoon at his home in Grantsville, have now left for other parts. Later they will make their home in Wheeling. The best wishes of the people follow them.

We are glad to note that Mrs. McCoy and two sons, Glen and Arely, are with us again.

Mrs. Charles has also returned and will spend the summer here.

Prof. Bender and other students of the town are now home spending their vacation.

Miss Joe Callaham, who has been spending some time here, has returned to her home in Ohio.

We were sorry indeed to loose Prof. King. But our loss is Oakland's gain.

Miss Nellie Broadwater, who has been spending some time at Warren, Ohio, will soon return home.

The Children's Day service of the Reform church, we are told, was very good and well attended.

Mrs. Frankhouser, of Keyser, was spending a few days with relatives here.

Miss Blanche Miller has gone away for a couple weeks.

Mrs. Keller and son Charles have gone to Cumberland.

Mr. and Mrs. John Meager, of Elk Lick, Pa., were in Grantsville Thursday. Took dinner at the National House, after which they called Mrs. S. J. Beachy and daughter Ella. Mr. and Mrs. Meager attended the General Conference held in Baltimore.

Eclipse of the Sun.

On Sunday, June 28, the moon will pass between the earth and the sun, causing an eclipse, which will be visible throughout the entire United States and also in Central America, Northern South America and South-western Europe, and the extreme west coast of Africa. The eclipse will begin at 9:10 o'clock a. m., Philadelphia time.

"FREE RIGHT OF WAY" THE SLOGAN

Non-Resident Land Owners Should Promptly Come to the Front.

As indicated in our letter last week, the bankers, capitalists, promoters, etc., with whom we have been corresponding, on the subject of financing the hydro-electric plant for the "Youghiogheny Light and Power Co." all make it a sine qua non, or imperative condition, that they "won't touch it" unless the owners of the 100,000 acres of coal and mineral lands, surrounding the plant, that will be doubled and quadrupled in value by our proposed plant, co-operate by conceding "free rights of way," for forty years, (the nominal extent of our charter) to lay water pipes, erect poles for transmission wires, build electric traction railroads, and houses for employees, etc.

They also make the further requirement that each land owner shall contribute sufficient timber for cross ties, along or near the proposed railroads and lateral branches, so for as they extend through or across their respective tracts of land.

If they wisely accede to these moderate demands we shall soon have 10,000 horse power harnessed up near Swallow Falls.

All the local land owners, who have been seen, in the vicinity of Swallow Falls, have cheerfully acceded to these terms, some of them offering, as an extra inducement, to hew the cross-ties and deliver them on the spot as needed.

This letter is respectfully addressed to the "non-resident landowners," to most of whom we have mailed "marked copies" of numerous letters on this subject during the past year.

We hope soon to receive personal letters from each of them, accepting these terms. Soon as we hear from them we will mail printed copies of agreements for them to sign, acknowledge, and return to us.

We will then forward them to our bankers and underwriters who will at once authorize the letting of contracts for the erection and equipment of the plant, which will more than double the value of all the lands, within a radius of at least twenty miles from the plant.

To prove perfect frankness, honesty an unselfishness in our dealings with the land owners, in this vast region of more than 100,000 acres of undeveloped coal, mineral and timber lands, we point with pride to the fact that we have never asked them to give "options" on their lands, which might have been done with a view to securing to ourselves the immense profits, or enhanced value of the lands to be developed and opened up to the markets of the world at our expense.

The further facts should be appreciated, that for more than a year we have been writing up the possibilities of this vast undeveloped region and that our letters have been extensively copied in all of the leading financial, manufacturing and electrical magazines and journals, published throughout the entire country.

Another inducement to landowners generally to deal justly and liberally in the matter of concessions of "free right of way," is that we hereby obligate ourselves, in advance, to grant them reciprocal advantages in the shape of very low rates for the power they will need to propel modern mining machinery and their coal cars, etc., to market, also to supply the electric energy to run factories wherever they may be locate on their lands, as well as cheap electric lights for the same.

Here is another interesting fact that has never been mentioned in print before, viz: The rich alluvial soil of these 100,000 acres of rich mineral lands would make 1,000 farms of 100 acres each, the fertile soil of which will yield crops of various kinds sufficient to repay the cost of clearing and fencing the first year.

These 1,000 farms, if leased or sold on easy terms, would bring into Garrett county, including those brought in by the hydro-electric plant and its attendant traction railroads, factories, mines, etc., 10,000 new miners, mechanics, farmers and laborers.

If anyone doubts the accuracy of this statement let him drive from Oaklaad, Md., down to Swallow Falls via the Cranesville road and return via the "River road," keep his eyes alert, on all sides, and size up the countless beautiful, productive farms that are lying in embryo or absolute waste, then let him come to us and tell us to our face that we are "visionary" if he dares.

En passant, we have no respect whatever for the few cynical and conceited pessimists, who are the bane of every community, and who have sneeringly tried to ridicule and belittle our enumeration, last week, of several enterprises that if life is spared us, we shall never cease fighting for until they are accomplished facts. We shall continue the publication of this series of letters, weekly, until they "bring the answer if it takes all summer." Hoping to hear from each of the "non-resident land-owners" soon, and that they will deal justly, if not generously, with us, we subscribe ourselves, their most humble and obedient servant,

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

The Chautauqua Summer Program made its appearance Tuesday, about two weeks earlier than last year. We understand that Dr. Davis is pleased with the character of the work and the promptness of delivery.

The lectures this week in the Hall of Philosophy by Dr. Kirk are very interesting and instructive. He will speak tonight and Friday night.

Summer residents and visitors are coming in such numbers that it would take too much space to note all, so will give the names of a few only:

Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Speers and two grand daughters are in the Speers cottage on H street.

Mrs. K. C. Hardy has rented and is occupying the Carpenter cottage, having leased her large cottage to Mrs. Davis of Clarksburg.

Mrs. James O. Smith and children, of Washington, D. C., now occupy rooms in the Butler cottage on H street.

Mr. Harry Clayton came to the Park Wednesday. Most of his family are here.

Teachers' Examination.

By advertisement published elsewhere in this paper today County Superintendent Browning gives notice of the annual teachers' examination to be held in Oakland public school building on Thursday and Friday, July 2nd and 3rd, and also examinations for vacancies in the scholarships of St. John's College, Annapolis; Western Maryland College, Westminster, and the Maryland Agricultural College. The annual institute will begin on Monday of next week.

SECRETARY TAFT PASSED THRO OAKLAND FRIDAY

Night on Train No. 1, Bound for His Home at Cincinnati.

PEOPLE AT STATION TO SEE HIM

But They Were Disappointkd As He Had Retired—Given A Housing Reception In Cumberland, However, Where He Was Met By a Large Crowd.

Secretary of War William Howard Taft, of Cincinnati, Ohio, and also Republican Presidential nominee, having been named in the great Chicago convention on last Thursday evening at 6.15 o'clock as the Republican standard bearer, passed through Oakland last Friday evening on train No. 1, bound for his home at Cincinnati, where he went on a business mission.

Few people in Oakland knew that Mr. Taft would pass through here, the first announcement being made through THE REPUBLICAN office late Friday afternoon, consequently there was but a small gathering of people at the station to meet him. These were disappointed in getting even a glimpse of America's big man, as he had retired for the night. At Cumberland, however, where the train arrived about 8.30, Secretary Taft was given a great ovation, in which four large elephants borrowed for the occasion from a show at Cumberland at the time, were conspicuous.

The Cumberland outpouring was the first great demonstration given in honor of the candidate succeeeing his nomination, but at Cincinnati a great reception awaited him. At Cumberland he delivered a brief address to the throng that had gathered to welcome him and the South Cumberland band rendered several patriotic melodies of a lively nature.

Resolutions of Condolence.

Whereas, It has pleased our heavenly Father in His Infinite Wisdom to take from our worthy Brother W. A. Smouse his beloved wife; in manifestation of our grief and fraternal sympathy for our Brother in this his hour of deep sorrow; therefore be it

Resolved, by the members of Youghiogheny Tribe No. 151, Improved Order of Red Men, That we extend to the bereaved Brother and his family our heartfelt sympathy in their hour of affliction and grief and commend them to Him who said: "Call upon me in the day of trouble and I will deliver thee." And be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the bereaved Brother and family, spread upon the minutes of the Lodge and furnished to the county papers for publication.

Desirable Clothing For Boys

Is one of my specialties. I have been very particular in the selection of my line to get only goods of dependable quality.

My suits for LITTLE BOYS 3 to 7 years in Eton, Buster Brown and Sailor styles at $3.00 to $5.00 are hard to beat.

Suits from 8 to 16 year sizes in either plain knee pants or Knickerbocker style at $4.00 to $7.50 I believe to be the best to be had in this range of prices. I also have a lot of cheaper suits if you want them.

Yours Truly. E. A. WEIMER.

DATA OF INTEREST ABOUT CHURCHES

A Few General Notes Concerning Various Denominations of the World.

There are 13,000 Methodists in Korea.

There were nearly 150,000 children in the seventy-ninth annual parade of the Brooklyn Sunday School Union.

The Central Presbyterian Church of Des Moines, the oldest religious organization of that city, has just observed its sixtieth anniversary.

The outdoor meetings in Tent Evangel at New York can now be attended by 2000 persons at once, as the tent has been enlarged.

The Indiana Bureau of Statistics has found 6239 houses of worship in that State, the value of church property being $24,628,001.

A Bible well preserved in wooden covers, dated 1590, has been found built in the wall of an old house at Stutthof, near Danzig, Germany.

The Presbyterian General Assembly of Canada closed its year with a deficit of $11,480, the receipts for the year having fallen off $13,000.

A parliament of religion is to be held this summer at Montclair, N. J., when native speakers from all sections of the globe will be present.

Inside Holy Trinity Church, Dartford, England, is a sun dial that only registers the hours from 2 to 7 p. m. in the summer and not at all in the winter.

The Bishop of London's Evangelistic Council has extended its work into the parks to counteract bad teaching disseminated by Socialists and other radicals.

There are nearly 7300 poor child-cripples in Greater London who are reached at least once each year by the Ragged School Union, a church charitable organization.

When the Presbyterians busied themselves in the Sicilian colony at Detroit the Jesuit Fathers of Sts. Peter and Paul's Church organized a Catholic congregation.

The Holy Well, of St. Anne, at Caversham, England, has been dedicated in perpetuity to the public use, its waters in the Middle Ages being renowned for their healing qualities.

Canon Gadene, now the cure of Raches in Nord and 102 years of age, has lived under seven Popes —Pius VII, Leo XII, Pius VIII, Gregory XVI, Pius IX, Leo XIII and Pius X.

Ten years ago Canon Allen-Edwards in South London started at All-Saints' a 5.30 a. m. service for workingmen, it lasting but 20 minutes, and the church is filled almost every morning.

Dr. Westwater, a famous Presbyterian missionary, has returned to England from Manchuria, where he has spent 25 years breaking down the Chinese prejudice against Western civilization.

The oldest Sunday school in the United Kingdom is that of the Wesleyans, at High Wycombe, it having been established 14 years before Robert Raikes started his celebrated work at Gloucester.

A good share of the "white man's burden" in India during the famine is being borne by the missionaries, among them Rev. J. Fryer, of the Church Missionary Society, who feeds 100 children daily.

For seven years there has been $35,000 waiting to build a parsonago for Rev. Lewis Gilbertson, a minor canon of St. Paul's Cathedral, in London, but no site can be found suitable for such a building.

Bishop Riley, of Western Australia, says that during his first trip into the interior of that country, which lasted a month, he never washed his face because there was no water for that purpose and often none for drinking.

Eleven dollars given 20 years ago started a Baptist orphanage in Brooklyn, and remained in a bank until $10,000 was added as a bequest and now a large 17-room mansion has been acquired for a very reasonable sum to carry out the purposes of the first little gift.

Feet of the Horse.

The usefulness of a horse depends largely upon the the quality of his feet. If they are sound and well taken care of he is able to travel and work well but if they are defective and neglected his usefuleness is impaired and he can not be depended on in any emergency, as he is liable, when his his services are most needed, to become partially if not wholly disabled resulting in serious loss to his owner. But few horses are born with perfect feet, yet the defects by careful treatment are often entirely cured; also many horses with sound hoofs are pactically ruined by the ignorance or carelessness of blacksmiths.

The proper shoeing of horses and the general care of their feet is a matter that should receive the strict attention of every farmer, and yet, as a rule it is wofully neglected. The farmer should have knowledge of the natural formation of a horse's foot, so as to be able to determine whether the animal is being properly shod or not, and while that is being done he should never go away and leave the smith to slight the work to get through it or butcher its feet if he does not understand his business.

While no definite rules for shoeing horses can be given, some general principles are acknowlegded by all competent horseshoers, namely, the heel should never be cut except to remove a ragged point. The same is true of the frog, which is an elastic cushion, intended to reduce the impact of a sudden shock to the foot. The butteris is an instrament that may do an immense amount of damage in the hands of a incapable operator. Much mischief is done by it every day.

When the toe is too long and projects beyond the hoof, it causes stumbling and it should be shortened. A hot iron should never be applied to the foot to ascertain its evenness, as many blacksmiths do merely to save time, when they know it is not right. A seared surface between the hoof and the shoe makes the contact less perfect and the shoe necessarily less rigid than in ought to be.

The outside of the hoof should not be rasped more than is necessary to clinch the nails, as this thins the crust and reduces the strength of the bearing surface of the foot. Weakening and decay are sometimes the result of this practice. Oil applied to the hoofs occasionally during dry weather is beneficial.

Queer Notions About Bees.

The idea that bees know their keepers, says Suburban Life, has led to a foolish custom which prevails in certain parts of Europe. When the keeper dies some one goes to the hives and whispers in each entrance the solemn fact, in order to keep the bees from leaving it; in some instances the hives are even draped in black.

A certain beekeeper died in Austria, and, as the coffin that contained his remains was carried from the house to the hearse, his bees in large numbers clustered on it. Every one present was deeply touched by this mark of their grief, little realizing that it was the fresh varnish on the coffin that had attracted them and not love for their departed keeper.

GHOST STORY

Alleged Ghost Cut All Kinds of Capers at Cumberland.

There is no end to the excitement in the northern section of the city over an alleged haunted house.

The house is located on Pear alley and is occupied by a family named Gurson who keep boarders. The Gurson's have only been in the house about six weeks, during which time Mrs. Gurson says they have nearly been frightened out of their wits.

The Gurson's are Russian Jews, and do not speak English very good, so when a Times representative went to the house this morning to investigate the story, he took an interpreter along with him. None of the men folks were at home when the newspaper man called, but Mrs. Gurson talked freely, yet excitely about the matter.

Mrs. Gurson says that when they first moved into the house she was followed everywhere she went by a black cat. The cat become so troublesome to her that she turned to kick the thing when the cat vanished, and she she has never seen it since. After the disappearance of the cat they commenced to hear loud rappings on the doors as soon as the lights were extinguished at night, since which time the "doings" have been getting worse nightly, until they have no peace, and have been compelled to seek another house.

A night or two ago, while a number of people were in the house, things got lively. The carpets in the rooms would slide from under the feet of the persons in the house, and small pieces of furniture would move about as if they were alive. One of the men boarders got so terribly frightened that he thought he would try an act of kindness on the "spook," so he said:

"If you are a man won't you kindly leave the honse for the sake of the women and children, or if you are a ghost won't you please disappear." He had no sooner gotten the words out of his mouth before according to Mrs. Gurson's story, he was struck such a blow in the face with an old shoe that he was almost felled to the floor.

Mrs. Gurson says that they had a sword standing in the corner of one of the rooms, and one night while things were unusually active in the ghost line, the sword suddenly jumped up into the air and stuck itself into the middle of the floor.

Mrs. Gurson says it is nothing unusual to see a pair of scissors suddenly dart across the room and stick in the wall on the opposite side.

The antics commenced as soon as the lights were put out, and oftimes the lamps are hurled into the beds. The racket that is kept up is something terrible while the show is on.

A neighbor woman says that a family who lived in the house prior to the present occupants of the same stated that often heard very strange things going on in the house and had nothing but bad luck while they lived in it. It is also stated that the house, which is an old one, was at one time owned by a witch and that in some way she became dispossessed of the same and before leaving pronounced a curse on the house.

The performance of the ghost was in full blast Sunday night and last night a large nnmber on people gathered in the house to witness the show, but the ghost did not put in appearance. Mrs. Gurson said that she would be glad to have the newspaper man and any friends whom he cared to bring along to stay in the house any night and witness what was going on. She says the spook remains with them until almost daylight, and then all is quiet until the next night. There is no doubt but that Mrs. Gurson is sincere and really believes that the house is haunted. The affair is creating considerable talk in the neighborhood, and while the people dislike to admit that they believe in ghosts, they admit that there must really be something wrong.

Early Advocate of Forestry.

The Lumber World has called attention to the fact that Rufus King, a United States Senator from New York was the original advocate of improved forestry methods in this country. Away back in 1818 the Honorable Rufus was impressed with the idea that "the timber of the country is becoming scarce and more and more an object of public concern." In an address in the Senate April 3 of that year on navigation act, then pending, he voiced his fears regarding forestry denudation, and in that connection said this among other things: "The forests upon the frontier of the ocean and on the great rivers leading to it are nearly destroyed. In other countries, and even in Russia the improvident waste of their timber, especially in the neighborhood of their great iron works, has become a subject of national solicitude. Masts, spars, pine and oak timber fit for naval purposes and for the other numerous uses for which timber and wood are wanted, were far more abundant and of better quality formerly, and within the memory of men now living, than they are at the present day; and a little more care and economy in the use of our timber, even now, would confer an important benefit on posterity. The probability, however, is, as respects to our valuable timber, we shall not want foreign markets for all we ought to spare." Senator King preceded Forester Pinchot by several years, it is unnecessary to add.—St. Louis Lumberman

Well Dressed Panhandlers.

A well dressed young man was walking dejectedly down Cedar street the other day after his fourth failure to secure a job. It was three weeks since his firm had reduced their office force, and no one seemed to be taking on any extra men he was wondering how much longer he was going to be idle and how he was going to liquidate his board bill.

Just as he reached the corner an old acquaintance, young and well dressed like himself, almost ran into him and immediately began a pitiful tale of being out of a job for weeks and absolutely unable to get anything to do and in an awful funk about his board bill. Although he did not say it in so many words, it was clear that he wanted a loan. His face was the picture of despair,

"Why, I'm out of a job myself, old fellow, and don't know where my next dollar's coming from. I never was in such hard luck."

"So," remarked the other musingly. "Well, say! You're a good friend of mine. Don't give it away and I'll tell you something," and the dejected look disappeared as if by magic. "To start with," pulling a roll of bills out of his pocket, "here's a fiver for luck—as a loan of course"

"Why, I thought you were dead broke and out of a job."

"Well, so I was two or three weeks ago, but now I am working a first class racket and if you will take my tip you will try it yourself. I just go into any nice office and brace any one I have ever spoken to in the last five years and many peoples that I never saw before in my life and tell them the same hard luck story I told you. They look me over if they didn't know me and see by the cut of my clothes that I am no cheap skate and hand out any thing from $1 to $10. Why, strangers are easiers than old friends. I never had so much money in my life. You've got the clothes to fit the part. Just try it for a day or two."—New York Sun.

In Spite of Aunt Merrivale.

By ETHEL DOUGLAS.

Copyrighted, 1908, by M. M. Cunningham.

Nancy started angrily as the porter dropped a suit case into the front seat of her section and Philip Graham followed him to the seat.

"This is ungenerous," she said tensely when the porter had taken himself off. "How did you discover that I was coming?"

"I am afraid that you will not credit my protestations," said Graham soberly, "but I assure you that my surprise equals your own. I was telegraphed for not two hours ago. I had just time to throw a few things into the suit case and run for the train. I was under the impression that you were to remain with your aunt a week and that—last night would make no difference in your plans."

"Last night had nothing to do with it," disclaimed Nancy. "Father wired for me. I am afraid that it is serious, and you elect to follow me and annoy me with your arguments."

"I have already assured you of my entire ignorance of your presence on the flier," said Philip stiffly. "In proof of my good intentions I shall betake myself to the smoker until I am able to arrange an exchange of seats with the conductor."

He raised his hat and stalked forward in the direction of the cafe car, leaving Nancy with her feelings sadly ruffled. Only the night before Graham had proposed to her and had been refused. She was certain that her aunt, Mrs. Merrivale, had managed to get word to Philip that Nancy had been telegraphed for. His presence here was a part of Mrs. Merrivale's match-making plans.

Had she been left to herself Nancy would have accepted Graham; but, being a young person of spirit, she declined to be forced upon Graham or to have him forced upon her. From the beginning Aunt Merrivale's plans had been too obvious.

They were flying through the yard now. She could not leave the train.

GRAHAM PASSED HER ON HIS WAY TO THE DINING CAR.

Of course Philip would be back later to explain that he was unable to effect an exchange into another car. Probably he would spend the evening across the section from her, and, unlike the men, there was no place to which Nancy could retreat.

She was genuinely surprised when presently a strange porter came for the suit case, placing another in the seat in its place. She smiled to herself with satisfaction. It was plain to be seen that she had shown Graham how she had penetrated his plan, and he had acknowledged his defeat. Idly she wondered if he would leave the train at Philadelphia; then mentally she scolded herself for taking any interest in Philip Graham's movements.

They were well past Philadelphia when Graham passed her on his way to the dining car, and Nancy rather admired him for his persistence in remaining away from her. At least he was too clever to betray his disappointment that his ruse had failed.

The night had settled down. Lights were dull, and reading was impossible. Nancy had answered the first call for dinner, and she resigned herself to idling the long hour until the berths were made up. The message calling her home had been vague in the extreme, and in its very vagueness it was the more alarming. Her father might be dying for all she knew, and the thought bore down upon her.

She was peculiarly sensitive to moods, and the atmosphere of the half deserted car was depressing. Through the closed door of the stateroom at her back came the wailing cry of a baby, to which was occasionally added the more lusty note of a growing child. Across the aisle a man played innumerable games of solitaire, the sharp whir of the shuffle punctuating his grunting, half audible comments at the run of bad luck. Just ahead two women were discussing dressmaking in shrill tones which rose above the steady rattle of the train, and here and there some man leaned idly back in his seat and turned his newspaper with a rustle that jarred on nerves already at a tension.

Nancy felt that she must scream. She had slept little the night before after her interview with Philip, and when at last she had been able to doze off she had been aroused to read the telegram calling her home. From then until train time it had been a steady confusion, and the meeting with Philip in the car had added the final touch to her nervous condition.

As he returned from the diner to seek the car ahead she half started from her seat, but sank back in confusion. It would never do to tell Philip that she needed him. He would think that she was seeking to reopen the question of last night, and he would suggest that the need was permanent.

But as the minutes dragged past Nancy's discomfort increased, and at last she signaled the porter and directed him to go after Graham. The porter grinned understandingly as he went forward to the cafe car and presently returned with Graham, whom he presented with the proud air of accomplishment worn by the magician who extracts a rabbit from a hat.

"You are ill?" Philip asked, with grave concern, as he noticed the drawn lips and the feverish sparkle of her eyes.

"Not ill," she explained, "but I shall be presently if I have to sit here and listen to the wailing of those children, with no one to talk to. I thought—perhaps—you wouldn't mind doing a charitable act and talk to me for a little while."

"Philanthropy becomes a pleasure when it assumes so inviting a form," he declared, with a smile, as he sank into the seat beside her.

Graham was a capital conversationalist, and almost before she realized it the porter had begun to take down the berths, and Graham glanced at his watch.

"Don't go yet," pleaded Nancy, and Graham smiled.

"I was going to ask permission to wait until after the next stop," he said. "We can take a little walk on the station platform and get a breath of fresh air before we face the smother of the berths."

"There's the whistle now," said Nancy as she reached for her hat.

The train slowed down, and presently they were pacing up and down the platform. There was a sharpness in the air that was grateful after the overwarmed car, and Nancy was sorry when the warning came to get aboard again.

The porter from Graham's car approached them as Nancy resumed her seat. He handed Graham a telegram.

"I wired your father for more particulars," Philip explained when he had read the message. "Your aunt from San Francisco is visiting your father and wished to see you before she returns to the coast."

"Is that all?" Nancy's face expressed the relief she felt. "Isn't it odd I never thought of that? But I never told you that I was worried about father," she added.

"Not in words," he admitted. "I could see it in your face. And now that your mind is set at rest I shall say good night."

Nancy watched him until he had almost reached the end of the aisle; then she ran after him, catching up with him just as he reached the vestibule.

"Is that all you wanted to say?" she asked as she swayed lightly toward him.

"Not all I wanted to say," he replied, "but all that I was permitted to say."

"The rest is permitted, and the answer is 'Yes' this time," was the impulsive reply. "I'll marry you even if Auntie Merrivale does want me to."

And Graham's eyes smiled comprehendingly as he bent and kissed the rosy lips. He was not appreciative of matchmakers himself.

Colors In Dreams.

Red and yellow are the dream colors if Dr. Havelock Ellis is right. No other hues come to the dreamer of dreams. Simroth has declared that red is the most primitive of colors, and long ago protoplasm from which human beings derived their origin on the new earth probably responded to or was affected by red color waves.

In the depth of the sea the algae, or seaweed, are red. With the savage red is the favorite color, and for a bright piece of red calico African savages gladly would give valuable elephant tusks.

Red strikes the note of intense emotions. It is the color of joy, exultation, jubilation. Savages paint themselves red and rejoice at seeing each other in burning hues. German women of the early ages daubed their bodies with brilliant red and yellow and considered themselves most beauteously adorned.

On sacred festivals in Rome and Greece, Pliny records, red was smeared over the statues of Jupiter and was the color of religious rejoicing. The human eyes, it is said, can distinguish 100,000 different hues or colors and can appreciate and differentiate twenty shades of each hue. In other words, the eye is capable of 2,000,000 color impressions.

His Diamonds and His Paste.

Bob Palmer, the comedian, had been originally a billsticker, a fact pretty generally known among his colleagues of the stage. One evening when dressed for the character of Sir Brilliant Fashion he strutted into the greenroom with buckles sparkling on his shoes and a fine diamond on his finger. A brother actor inquired if his gems were real. "To be sure they are. I wear nothing but diamonds," was the reply, whereupon Bannister remarked, "I congratulate you, Bob, for I can remember when you wore nothing but paste."

Palmer did not take the joke with becoming good humor, and an angry altercation ensued, which was only broken when Mrs. Jordan cried out: "Why don't you stick him against the wall, Bob? Stick him against the wall!"—London Telegraph.

Her New Perspective.

By LULU JOHNSON.

Copyrighted, 1908, by E. C. Parcells.

Aboard the liner the last goodbys were being said. Some of the more cautious among the home stayers had already gathered at the end of the [illegible] to wave farewells cut short on the deck through the fear of being carried off, and others were trooping down the gangplank.

Now and then a couple of cabin stewards rushed up the gangway bearing the steamer trunks and parcels of some belated arrival, and from the pier the sharp exhaust of the donkey engines punctuated the farewells as the busy drums coiled and uncoiled the ropes by which the last of the hold luggage was being rushed to the cavernous depths of the huge ship.

Busy little tugs puffed about the end of the pier to assist in turning the huge bulk of the steamer, and a man in a rowboat paddled about the stern to be on hand in case of an accident.

To Nella Wynn the scene was decidedly novel. Only the day before she had arrived in New York from her inland home for the purpose of embarking, and for the first time she had realized what a steamer really was. Now she could scarcely believe that presently this great black vessel would slip down the bay and so out to the broad ocean beyond the sight of land. For a time she was absorbed in watching the crowds, but the very presence of this crush of humanity presently began to weigh upon her spirits.

It had been hard to raise the funds to send her abroad, so none of the family had been able to accompany her to New York. She had no acquaintances in the city, and she was absolutely alone in this mob of leave takers. There was no one to stand on the edge of the pier and wave farewell, no one to give her a friendly farewell kiss. She was even more alone than the little crowd of returning emigrants huddled on the lower deck forward.

Back in Crossville it had seemed a great thing to be going to Paris to study music. Now that the venture was fairly under way only pride prevented Nella from turning back. The bigness of the city and the vastness of the sea made her feel how small and utterly insignificant she was. She wanted to lay her head on her mother's shoulder and be petted into contentment again.

Quietly she moved from the port to the starboard side of the ship, where she could watch the loading of a cargo steamer from a lighter. She tried to forget that on the port side were men and women who were to be her associates for a few days saying goodby to their friends, while she fought back the tears of lonesomeness.

Then slowly the big ship began to slip out of her berth, the hoarse whistles sounding an alarm to the traffic of the harbor. Now they were in midstream, and one of the tugs had pressed her nose against the towering black side of the ship and begun to pant and labor as slowly the stern was pushed upstream, while the sister tug forced the bow in the direction of the Narrows.

Then the engines took on a more steady beat, and the noise of the shouting on the pier grew fainter until it could no longer be heard. The voyage was begun.

Nella waited on deck until the last faint trace of land disappeared; then she stumbled with tear blinded eyes through the narrow gangways to the little cabin which she occupied alone. She threw herself upon the cushioned seat that formed one side of the narrow compartment and gave herself up to grief.

Even as a child her dream had been a musical career, and she had saved toward this end. Her parents, too, had inched and denied themselves that her ambition might be gratified, and now that she was at last on her way to Paris loneliness beat down ambition and she could only sob miserably as she thought of the loved ones she was leaving behind.

The departure with no kindly word of farewell had been the last drop in her cup of unhappiness, and now she could see the familiar railroad station at Crossville, with its yellow, shedlike structure and unsheltered platform, and her friends standing there to wave the last farewell. It had been so different from the boat a few hours before, and she wished herself back with her parents and the girls and—Harry Temple.

She could still see Temple's hurt look when he received her gentle "No" to his proposal. He had always sought to oppose her career, contending that she would be far happier in her own home than as a choir singer or platform star. She had hated him for his apparent disbelief in her powers, and her refusal had been promptly given. She was sure that if he asked her now she would gladly abandon her career and go back to Crossville with him, but Harry was with the rest of the dear ones nearly a thousand miles away.

There was a gentle tapping on the door, and she arose to admit the stewardess.

"There's a gentleman who would like to see you on deck," she said, with a touch of accent. "He is M. Temple, and he asks that he may have the pleasure of your society."

"Temple!" gasped Nella. "A tall man?"

"With a light mustache and such handsome gray eyes," assented the stewardess, mindful of the generous tip and scenting a romance. "He is on the port side of the upper deck. Permit me to assist mademoiselle with her toilet."

Without waiting for reply the woman bathed the girl's swollen eyelids and removed traces of tears from her cheeks, smoothing the hair and refreshing the crumpled bows on the hat, which had been tossed into the berth with never a thought of the ribbons.

Nella emerged from the gangway to find Temple pacing the deck impatiently. He hurried toward her as she appeared and led her to a cozy corner, where two steamer chairs were placed close together.

"I am content that you are here. That is enough for me," she said shyly. "But how did you ever get here?"

"Next train after you left," was the prompt response. "My chum at college, Jack Harkwright, is representing his father's business in Paris, and when you prepared to come I wrote asking him if he could find a place for me. I got an answer by cable to come at once."

"And you never let me know?" she said reproachfully. Temple smiled.

"I had an idea," he said softly, "that perhaps it would be better to wait until after we had left port. It's lonesome work sailing alone and"—

"You were right," said Nella. "It has shown me many things in a new light. Perhaps if you were to ask a certain question over again"—

"I do ask the question over again," he declared earnestly. "I shall never cease asking that question until your answer is 'Yes.'"

"It is 'Yes' now," she said shyly. "I see life more clearly, and love is better than a career, after all."

"And heaven's blessing on the new perspective," he said fervently as his hand clasped hers in the early dusk that was settling down upon the sea.

When It Hurt.

A German surgeon in the Franco-Prussian war had occasion to lance an abscess for a poor fellow, and, as the sore was obstinate, it became necessary to use the knife twice. The operation was not a very painful one, but the patient declared that it had nearly killed him, and when a third resort to the lancet was proposed he protested that he could never go through the operation alive.

The surgeon promised to make it easy for him and, calling up a few of the loungers, ordered one of them to hold his hands close over the patient's eyes and two others to grasp his hands firmly.

"This arrangement," explained the doctor, "is said to prevent pain in such an operation. Now, lie perfectly quiet, and when I say 'Now!' prepare yourself."

The surgeon at once began quietly with his work and in a short time had completed the operation without the least trouble, the patient lying as quiet as though in sleep.

When all was done the surgeon laid aside the knife and said, "Now!" Such a roar came from the lips of the sick man as seldom is heard from any human being. He struggled to free himself, yelling, "Oh, doctor, you're killing me!"

Shouts of laughter soon drowned his cries, and he was told that the operation had been all over before the signal was given. It was a good joke, but it is doubtful if the poor fellow could ever be made to believe that he did not feel actual pain immediately after that fatal "Now!"

Chinese Eating.

It is probably true that the Chinese use a greater variety of meats than do the people of other countries, although but little land is set apart for grazing or for the cultivation of food for live stock. Beef is not a common meat, principally because of the Buddhistic prejudice against killing any animal and particularly such a useful one. Since hogs can be so economically reared, pork is undoubtedly, after rice, the leading article of food. This is eaten in every form, and one may say that every part of the animal is utilized for food. Horseflesh, venison, antelope and bear are often seen, but in passing through the markets pork, mutton and fowls are the most conspicuous. For fish the Chinese have an omnivorous appetite, nothing from the water, either fresh or salt, being rejected. A few kittens and puppies may be offered for sale in cages. Those which are intended for the table are fed upon grain and clean food, so that if the nature of this food be considered it is far more wholesome than is the unclean hog. To assert that cats and dogs form a staple article of food is pure fiction.—London Standard.

Before Us Lies Financial Reform or Revolution.

By Dr. JOHN F. CROWELL, Assistant Editor of the Wall Street Journal.

THE buccaneers of finance today constitute THE GRAVEST DANGER OF OUR NATIONAL PROGRESS. I am neither Socialist nor anarchist, but I see in present tendencies of corporate greed, if uncurbed, peril to our society. Whether the remedy of growing ills will be AN UPRISING OR THE PEACEFUL RESTORATION OF THE ECONOMIC BALANCE lies entirely with the Harrimans and Goulds. They can read the handwriting on the wall and if wise will look to their estates.

THE LEADERS OF THE GREAT ENTERPRISES TODAY PROBABLY DO NOT ADEQUATELY APPRECIATE THE SMOLDERING FURY OF DISCONTENT WHICH THEIR OWN MANAGEMENT OF BUSINESS HAS STEADILY ENGENDERED. WE ARE EDUCATING OUR CHILDREN IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS TO A POINT WHERE SOCIETY WILL NEITHER TOLERATE NOR ENDURE THE PERPETUATION OF AN ECONOMIC LIE. A LIE MEANS WAR.

The HIGH PRICES of today are a manifestation of that economic lie. We read that the prices of hogs are going down, but pork does not. That is but ONE OF MANY INSTANCES back of which are cupidity and unscrupulous speculation.

This discontent of the masses is not confined to any one section. It is not typical of New York, Chicago or San Francisco. IT IS NATIONAL. The disturbances which culminated in the French revolution were Parisian. That was a tempest in a teapot compared with the FARREACHING, DEEP ROOTED DISCONTENT IN THIS COUNTRY that has sprung from the encroachment of the speculative spirit upon industrial and commercial fields.

THE HOGGISHNESS OF CORPORATE GREED HAS DONE MORE THAN ANYTHING ELSE TO BRING CONDITIONS TO THE DANGER POINT IN AMERICAN SOCIETY. IT IS TIME TO TAKE HEED. THE BANDIT MUST BE PREVENTED FROM GETTING AWAY WITH HIS BOOTY, FOR THE PEOPLE ARE BEGINNING TO REALIZE THE EXTENT TO WHICH THEY HAVE BEEN SWINDLED.

Money Problem Difficult of Solution.

By LESLIE M. SHAW, Former Secretary of the Treasury.

NO DOUBT EXISTS AS TO ANY ONE OF OUR SEVERAL FORMS OF MONEY. THE SOLE WEAKNESS OF THE SYSTEM IS ITS WANT OF RESPONSIVENESS TO THE NEEDS OF COMMERCE INCIDENT TO SEASONS AND TRADE CONDITIONS.

This weakness is no new discovery. It has been recognized for years, and yet nothing has been done, and NOTHING IS LIKELY TO BE DONE until we shall have experienced a few more of these dire calamities. Why this delay? The answer is easy. While ninety-nine out of every hundred recognize the defect, not ten out of one hundred can be made to agree upon a REMEDY. The divergence of opinion among bankers and supposed experts is more marked and irreconcilable, if possible, than among laymen.

NO PLAN HAS YET BEEN SUGGESTED THAT IS NOT FRAUGHT WITH OBJECTIONABLE FEATURES, AND THE BEST WAY TO REACH A CONCLUSION IS TO ELIMINATE THE IMPOSSIBLE AND THE IMPRACTICABLE AND SEE WHAT REMAINS.

All our great commercial competitors have large central banks. We have experimented with institutionss of this kind, but thus far they have failed to satisfy the demands of the people. I wonder if any one has considered THE AMOUNT OF CAPITAL THAT WOULD BE NECESSARY to enable one large central bank to supply the extraordinary needs of 20,000 commercial banks or the extraordinary demands of commerce in forty-six states. The plan which to my mind presents the fewest objections is to allow our national banks to issue A LIMITED VOLUME OF SUPPLEMENTAL CURRENCY, subject to a tax of 5 or 6 per cent during the period of its maintenance. So generally, so well nigh universally solvent are our banking institutions that the government would be taking slight risk to GUARANTEE THE ULTIMATE REDEMPTION of all this supplemental currency, and the proposed tax would many fold cover the risk.

Those who think the government should INSURE deposits can find no objection to such a guarantee, for a bank note is almost identical with a certificate of deposit payable to bearer on demand, and it would never be parted with or paid out by the bank except in exchange for something believed to be equally good.

Such supplemental currency would spring into existence where needed and when needed, and it would be promptly retired by a deposit of a like amount of any form of currency with a subtreasury whenever the rate of interest became normal and the demand therefor ceased. In other words, IT WOULD BE ELASTIC.

The Use of the Balloon In War.

By Lieutenant FRANK P. LAHM, U. S. A., Winner of International Balloon Contest

AN AGREEMENT ENTERED INTO BY THE HAGUE CONFERENCE PROHIBITS THE DROPPING OF SHELLS FROM WAR BALLOONS, SO THE FIELD OF OPERATION IS THAT OF THE SCOUT PURELY.

The chief war advantage of the dirigible or wind opposing balloon over the old spherical or wind driven balloon is that the former, after SPYING OUT AN ENEMY'S DEFENSES AND MOVEMENTS, can put about and return to its own lines with the information gained, while the old style vehicle of the air had to depend on carrier pigeons or make a more or less perilous and uncertain descent and resort to ORDINARY means to send back reports.

The Hague conference failed to protect the AERIAL SPY from land attack. However, the extreme difficulty of finding the range of a balloon sailing over an enemy's guns reduces the danger to a great degree, for THE DIRIGIBLE BALLOON IS PRACTICALLY IMMUNE FROM BIG GUN FIRE, and a rifle ball would be of no consequence to the object itself, though it might be to occupants of the car

MRS. DOLBY FAINTS,

Was Lying on Floor When Deacon Returned From Store.

DOESN'T WORRY HIM ANY.

But When She Gets Back Her Senses and Drags Herself to the Lounge She Hits Mr. D. In Some New Spots. Samuel and the Hogs.

[Copyright, 1908, by T. C. McClure.]

At the supper table the other evening Mrs. Dolby said there wasn't butter enough for breakfast, and when the meal was finished the deacon fixed himself up and went down to the store to get a couple of pounds. Of course he got to talking about the state of the country and remained an hour longer than he had intended to. He had left Mrs. Dolby washing up the dishes and singing to herself, and she had said that she would have some grease ready for his boots on his return.

He arrived to find an empty kitchen, the fire about out and no grease. He was not greatly surprised, however. He lighted the lamp, stirred up the fire and then passed into the sitting room to find Mrs. Dolby lying on the floor on her back with her eyes rolled back in her head. Some husbands would have picked her up and placed her on the lounge at least, but he sat down to the table and picked up a photograph of Niagara falls and began studying it. He had just finished a mental calculation of the number of quarts of water going to waste when Mrs. Dolby fetched a long drawn groan.

"THERE WAS A MAN THERE WITH A GUESSING HOG."

No use.

Three minutes passed, and the groan was longer and more lugubrious.

The deacon paid no attention.

Then Mrs. Dolby sat up and looked around in seeming astonishment and said:

"That you, Samuel? I thought I had died and gone to heaven. I must have been in a faint for the last half hour."

He made no reply, and she struggled up and dragged herself to the lounge and began to snuffle. Three or four minutes passed before she said:

"Samuel, about three minutes after you left I heard a dog howl and knew that something dreadful was going to happen. It happened. Mrs. Britt came in to see if I could give her a little sage. She wanted to make some tea for her little girl. She got the sage, and then she told me all. Yes, Samuel, she told me all. I said to myself that I wouldn't faint away over it, but I don't think she had got to the gate when I reeled and staggered, and my senses left me. The last thing I remember was hoping you'd give me a decent funeral and weep a few tears as I was lowered into my last resting place."

The deacon had read that the falls had worn away one-sixteenth of an inch in the last 500 years and was trying to figure out how many million years it would take to wear the brink back seven feet and it is possible he didn't hear his wife's words. Her eyes overflowed, and she sobbed a few times, then continued:

Samuel and the Hogs.

"She told me all, Samuel, down to the last thing. Two years ago you said one day that you had to go up to Davisburg to see about some hogs. I trusted you, Samuel, and waved you goodby. When you got home, you said you wouldn't buy the hogs because they hadn't got twists in their tails, but now I know the true reason. You never—you never even saw 'em. You went up there to go to a circus, and you got a seat down in front. Mrs. Britt was there and saw you. She saw you grin and laugh, and she saw you wink at one of the female bareback riders. Yes, wink, Samuel—wink at a circus woman! Look me in the face and deny it if you can."

Mr. Dolby didn't look her in the face. On the contrary, he continued to look at the photo and to wonder if he would go to the falls if he had another bridal tour.

"And a year ago," said Mrs. Dolby after trying to wipe her weeping eyes on a piece of string, "you went down to the store one day after a pound of nails. You had a dollar in your pocket. You were gone two hours, and when you came back you didn't have a cent. I believe you told me they had had an earthquake in Italy or something of that sort. It wasn't no earthquake that detained you, Samuel. There was a man there with a guessing hog. It was 10 cents to guess, and the one that guessed the critter's weight was to have a dollar. You paid for nine guesses and didn't come within twenty pounds of it. It was the same as hoss racing or gambling, but you elbowed the crowd back and made nine guesses. Don't deny it, Samuel. Don't add lying to gambling."

The deacon didn't propose to deny it. He was wondering who owned Niagara falls and whether or not there was a mortgage on the property.

Has Been Silent Since.

"And another thing Mrs. Britt told me, Samuel. She didn't tell me to make trouble, for she's not that kind of a woman, but she thought I ought to know the man I was living with. A year or so ago you went huckleberrying over to the big swamp. You started out alone, and I supposed you went alone, but it seems you didn't. You went with others, and among 'em was the widder Snyder. You sorter had charge of her all day. You helped her over logs and through brush, and Mrs. Britt says you was frolicky. You didn't say a word about it to me when you came home. You have never said a word since. Did you ever ask me to go huckleberrying with you, Samuel? Did you ever help me over logs and through brush? Did you ever canter and frolic around when we were out walking together? Never, Samuel Dolby! There isn't the least doubt in my mind that if I should die you'd marry the widder Snyder. Dare you hold up your right hand and say you wouldn't?"

The deacon's right hand didn't go up—neither his right nor his left. The photo was so lifelike that he was listening to see if he couldn't catch the roar. He wasn't yet quite sure whether he could or not when Mrs. Dolby observed:

"Until Mrs. Britt came in tonight I never heard about your trouble with the lightning rod man last spring. You had gone down to the store one afternoon to get me a spool of black thread, No. 4, and you found the man talking to Elder Davis and trying to get the job of rodding his barn. You at once butted in and said that lightning rods was a swindle. Pretty soon you and the man was jawing, and you called him a liar. It wasn't a common liar, but you put a swear word before it. Yes, you did, Samuel, because Mrs. Britt was passing at the time and heard it, and Elder Davis' wife has never been the same to me since. She has looked at me with a pitying expression. You swore, Samuel, and you was going to fight, and yet when you came home you looked as humble as a rabbit. It was profanity, and it was hypocrisy, and Mrs. Britt said if you was her husband she'd leave you in a minute. Samuel, do you think I can stand these things? Are you going to keep on being a pirate or are you going to go down on your knees and ask me to forgive you?"

The deacon had laid the photograph down and was looking at the wall paper and wondering who invented it and if it could be used as wire fencing by driving tacks into it. Not a movement betrayed that he had heard a word of Mrs. Dolby's conversation. She waited to see if he would answer, and when he didn't she threw up her arms with a yell and sank back on the lounge. Mr. Dolby didn't even look that way. He went out into the kitchen and shut up the stove for the night and bolted the door and then, returning, slowly wound up the clock and saw that the cat hole in the door was in working order. Then he said:

"It's time to go to bed."

He picked up the lamp and led the way upstairs, and Mrs. Dolby followed him, and halfway up she paused to say:

"We think everything of each other, don't we, Samuel?"

And Mr. Dolby's "Um!" might have meant that they did or they didn't.

THE REPUBLICAN

BENJ. H. SINCELL, EDITOR.

THURSDAY, JUNE 25, 1908.

FOR PRESIDENT,
WILLIAM H. TAFT,
OF OHIO.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT,
JAMES S. SHERMAN,
OF NEW YORK,

FOR CONGRESS,
GEORGE A. PEARRE,
OF ALLEGANY COUNTY.

TAFT VS BRYAN.

In a recent published interview, Major Randolph Barton, of Baltimore, a Democrat of the old school, speaking of the nomination of Secretary Taft for president, expressed what is in everybody's mind when he referred to Mr. Taft's splendid equipment and training for the office. There is a great deal of humbuggery in politics, in political platforms and in political interviews, but it is not difficult to tell the true from the false. "Major Barton's talk rings true," says the Baltimore News, one of the most influential independent Democratic newspapers in the South. Like a great many other Democrats Major Barton doesn't need time for consideration with Mr. Bryan on one side and Mr. Taft on the other—the issue is made up. Many Democratic newspapers are equally outspoken. The Brooklyn Eagle for instance, a newspaper which supports Democratic candidates whenever it can do so without stultifying itself, says:

For Mr. Bryan on no platform whatever will the Eagle be.

For Mr. Bryan under no circumstances whatever will the Eagle be.

For no platform and for no candidate whatever of Mr. Bryan's making or prescription will the Eagle be.

The Eagle neither waited for Chicago to say the foregoing nor is it waiting for Denver to qualify the foregoing.

The Eagle is historically and logically Democratic, wholly anti-Bryan and wholly anti-Populist.

This is to say, in the minds of all but hide-bound partisans Mr. Bryan has come to represent a socialistic program, government paternalism. Voters who like that sort of thing will support Mr. Bryan, but there is no reason why those who do not like it, whether they are Democrats or Republicans, should do so. As Mr. Barton says: "The difference between the policies of the Democratic party and the Republican party have now so completely disappeared that the President as a man is of greater importance than ever. Compared with Mr. Bryan, Secretary Taft is a safe man for the country. He is Bryan's superior in experience in public life, in judicial temperament, and I think, in political sincerity." That is the exact truth as the man in the street sees it. Apparently it is the truth as Mr. Bryan sees it. He is constantly accusing the Republicans of stealing his thunder and of appropriating his issues. In the circumstances, the campaign is bound to hinge largely on the characters of the candidates—Taft vs. Bryan—and on that issue the Republicans are exceedingly fortunate.

NATIONAL PIKE TO HAGERSTOWN

Route Selected for Main State Road Through Western Maryland.

The Hagerstown Globe, Monday night says:

"Information regarded as reliable comes to Hagerstown to the effect that the State Road Commission has determined that Hagerstown shall be on the line of the State road to be made in Washington county. It has been practically determine that part of the State road in this county will extend from the Allegany line to Hagerstown over the National Pike. What course will be taken from Hagerstown to the Frederick county line has no been been fully determined, but the impression prevails that the road will run by Rowland's Mills and thence in a southeasterly direction toward Myersville.

"It can be stated with assurance that the Ringgold-Harper's Ferry route, suggested by the County Commissioners, will not be adopted.

"Those in favor of the road running through the county from east to west, and going through Hagerstown, are rejoicing in the reported decision of the Roads Commission. It is contended that such a road will be of especial benefit to Hagerstown as it will bring hundreds of touring automobilists through this city. These tourists, it is alleged, will drop a great deal of money here with the hotels, garages, restaurants and stores."

SHERIFF BROWN RETURNED

Saturday Morning From Michigan, Bringing With Him George Arnold.

Last Saturday morning Sheriff Austin Brown, who went to Michigan a week previous in order to bring into the jurisdiction of the Maryland courts George Arnold, the self-confessad horse thief who fled from this State a day or two after he and two of the Kisner boys had stolen three horses from Hutton, arrived in Oakland with Arnold and placed him in jail.

On the way in from Michigan Arnold made a full and free confession to Sheriff Brown in which he exposed the entire workings of the gang of which he seemed to be the ringleader, and implicated both the Kisner boys.

Arnold was placed on trial in the Circuit Court here Tuesday morning and made substantially the same confession of guilt as he imparted to the Sheriff and was sentenced by the Court to serve 6 years in the Penitentiary.

The Kisner boys, whose trial took place earlier during the term of Court, were also sentenced by Judge Henderson to serve 3 years in the Penitentiary.

Circus Employe Killed.

Protection Against Loss By Fire.

Is your property insured? If not, could you afford to lose your home or your place of business at this time by fire? If such a misfortune should overtake you are you able to rebuild without borrowing money and putting a mortgage on your premises? If not, then insure your property at once in one of the large and reliable Fire Insurance Companies represented by our Agency, and in case of fire you will be promptly paid the amount of loss sustained under your policy, and it will not be necessary to borrow. Combined assets of Companies represented, more than $85,000,000. Write for information and rates.

OF

Valuable Farm

Located about one mile Northeast of Friendsville, Garrett County.

By virtue of a Decree of the Circuit Court for Garrett county passed in a cause in said court wherein Silas Teats is complainant and Allen Teats and others are defendants, being No. 1521 Equity, the undersigned Trustee will, on Saturday, the 18th Day of July,

1908, in front of the Postoffice, in the town of Friendsville, at the hour of 2 o'clock p. m. of said day, offer at public auction to the highest bidder, all that farm located about one mile Northeast of the town of Friendsville, Garrett county, Maryland, which is known as the

and described as follows:

FIRST—All that part of a tract of land called the "Gleanings," lying North of Bear Creek, containing the quantity of fifty acres of land and being the same land which was conveyed to Andrew Jackson Teats by deed from David P. Mays et ux., dated the 27th day of September 1884, and recorded in Liber W. H. T. No. 9, folio 472, etc., one of the Land Records of Garrett county. Part of said fifty acres is cleared and under cultivation.

SECOND—All that other part of a tract of land called the "Gleanings," situated and adjoining the above piece of land, containing the quantity of fifty acres of land and being the same which was conveyed to the said Andrew Jackson Teats by deed from Silas Teats et ux., dated the 1st day of August 1885, and recorded in Liber W. H. T. No. 10, folio 482, etc., one of the Land Records of Garrett county, saving and excepting ten acres of land which was conveyed to the said Andrew Jackson Teats et ux., to Amand Schroyer by deed dated the 25th day of January, 1899, and duly recorded in Liber E. Z. T. No. 15, folio 662, etc., Land Records of Garrett county. This second piece is also partly cleared and under cultivation and improved by a good dwelling and outbuildings.

Said property will first be offered separately and if no adequate bids are received it will be offered as a whole, and is a beautiful farm for any one desiring to purchase.

Said property will be sold subject to dower of the widow of Andrew Jackson Teats, Anastatia Teats.

Terms of sale as prescribed by the Decree. Cash on day of sale or the ratification thereof by the court.

Howe's Great London Show was in Oakland last Saturday. With it was the usual crowd of sharks, short change men, fakirs, shell game flim flammers and hard cases generally. Saturday afternoon one individual from the vicinity of Deer Park, complained of having been victimized to the tune of $110, which amount he brought to Oakland that morning with the intention of depositing it in one of the banks here. He changed his mind, however, and now he is sorry of the fact and also short of change. A woman was heard to bewail the fact that she lost $40, how or in what manner, she refused to divulge. The best plan is to have only sufficient money when you to the show to pay your way and never try to beat a showman at his own game.

Railroad Men to Meet at Deer Park.

ATTEMPT TO WRECK PASSENGER TRAIN

Ties Placed on Track in Fifty-Eight Cut Discovered in Time.

Last Wednesday night a dastardly attempt was made to wreck passenger train No. 1, the New York-St. Louis flyer, due in Oakland at 10.30 o'clock, at a point about six miles west of Oakland in what is known as Fifty-eight Cut, but fortunately the plans of the would-be wreckers were frustrated by the discovery of the obstruction by the crew of an eastbound freight train.

In order to wreck the train a large number of heavy oak cross ties had been placed on the rails about midway in the cut at which point there is a heavy down grade and where the westbound track is some fifteen feet or more above the opposite track. The discovery was made by the freight train crew a short time before train No. 1 was due at that point and a flagman was sent out to stop the passenger. The obstruction was speedly removed and the train passed safely.

Had the wreckers intentions been carried out the is no doubt that but that there would have been a tremendous loss of life and property, as nothing would have prevented the passenger train from going over onto the eastbound track and completely demolishing it.

As a sequel to the attempted wrecking of the train Baltimore and Ohio secret agents placed under arrest at Terra Alta on Thursday following a man whom they suspected of having knowledge of the occurrence and brought him to Oakland and had him placed in jail. What evidence there is against the man, who says he hails from the northwest, is not known.

KILLED UNCLE.

Because He Was Disharged From Section Gang On Baltimore and Ohio Railroad.

Dominick Sagler, an Italian track foreman employed by the Baltimore & Ohio railroad was stabbed to death by his nephew, Dominick Arabella in front of the Baltimore & Ohio station at Piedment Saturday midnight. The murderer has not yet been apprehended.

Arabella had been working in the gang under his uncle, but was discharged Saturday night. He was drinking and started a quarrel with his uncle, which ended with the stabbing in the back which quickly proved fatal. Sagler was a resident of Bloomington, this county. The murderer has a scar on one cheek. When he escaped he wore a red necktie and dark clothes.

TRUSTEE'S SALE

OF VALUABLE

Real Estate.

Under and by virtue of a decree of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, sitting in Equity, dated the 9th day of June, 1908, and passed in a cause standing as No. 1382 Equity on the docket of said court, the undersigned was appointed Trustee to make sale of the real estate in the proceedings mentioned, and I hereby give notice that on Friday, the 3rd Day of July,

1908, at the hour of 11 o'clock a. m., I will offer at public auction to the highest bidder on the premises, all that parcel or lot of land known and designated as containing fifty acres, situate and being on Cove Hill, in Election District No. 5 of Garrett county, Maryland, and being the home farm of the late Benjamin F. Bowser.

The improvements consist of a Log House containing five rooms, a new Barn 20x35 feet together with other necessary outbuildings.

Upon the property is also a young orchard and about ten acres of the place is under cultivation. There is a large quantity of prop timber and locust posts upon the land.

This property will be sold subject to the pasturage and crop rights for the present year.

TERMS OF SALE, as prescribed by the Decree—One-third of the purchase money to be paid in cash on the day of sale; one-third in six months and one-third in twelve months, the deferred payments to bear interest from the day of sale and to be secured to the satisfaction of the Trustee, or the entire purchase money may be paid in cash, at the option of the purchaser or purchasers.

Montrous' Invention.

By GEORGE ETHELBERT WALSH.

Copyright, 1907, by George Ethelbert Walsh.

MONTROUS was more seedy in appearance than usual as he listlessly dropped into the chair. The day was hot, and the stuffy little restaurant made his head ache.

When he looked up to give his order the new waitress smiled and in reply to his question said:

"Patsy's gone, and I've taken her place. I hope I'll suit you."

Montrous thought the name better than Patsy, and the face and figure fitted it admirably. Tess—Tess Barrington! It sounded good, and the eyes were wondrously liquid and brown

The dinner hour was an oasis in the desert of work and worry. Montrous began to drop in earlier to avoid the noonday rush. Once when the table presided over by Tess was crowded he unwillingly took his place at another. As the days and weeks passed the new waitress looked fagged, in common with the rest.

"When do you take your vacation?" he asked one day.

"I don't think I'll take any," she said, with a sad smile. "It costs too much."

Montrous understood. A vacation without wages would be a joyless affair.

"I suppose you take yours soon?" she murmured.

"No; not this year," he blurted out. "I can't—not until my patent comes out."

This was the first time he had spoken to a stranger about his patent, and he wondered at his words. But he continued:

"You see, I'm poor and must make this patent go. It's a great one, but they don't see it that way, or want to buy it outright for a mere song. But I'll starve before they get it that way."

The subtle power which had induced him to reveal this much of his inner life to Tess could not be explained. He was no psychologist. He had no time to take an inventory of his emotions. A week passed without further reference to his work. Then one day she asked half apologetically:

"Can I see the patent?"

"Sure! But it may not interest you. It's all about—about making tin cans."

He laughed at the crude description and then added:

"It's a machine that will save thousands—millions—to manufacturers of tin cans. I'll bring it around if you'll let me."

Montrous made the patent an excuse for calling often.

"One concern offered me five hundred for it," he exclaimed scornfully. "Think of it! Five hundred for two years' work!"

In the middle of the summer he beamed into the restaurant on a very hot day and whispered softly:

"What do you think, Tess? I've got a raise. The great Consolidated Tin Can company offered me $1,500 today for the patent!"

She was tired with the day's unremitting work, and the lines on her face were drawn, but she brightened up at the sight of his happiness and said:

"I HOPE I'LL SUIT YOU."

"You'll take it?"

He looked hurt, the smile fading from his features.

"Tess!"

There were surprise and indignation in the single word. Tess flushed and stammered quickly:

"Oh, I didn't mean that. I was so tired that the thought of $1,500 seemed like—like"—

For the first time he noted her drawn face. His own immediately changed to sympathetic appreciation of her viewpoint.

"It does seem like a good deal," he said slowly. "It would give—give you now, for instance, a nice long vacation, and you need it."

"I wasn't thinking of that," she stammered hurriedly.

For a week Montrous was moody and depressed. He took no apparent interest in his dinner. Tess gently rallied him and even changed his orders to suit her idea of what he needed. His face grew pale and drawn. Finally Tess said sharply to him one day:

"You need a rest—a change."

"Do I? And you, what about you? You're all played out, Tess, and you must take a vacation."

"Oh, I can stand it until"—

"Until you collapse!" he blurted out angrily.

Montrous did not appear at the restaurant for three days. Then on the fourth he entered, with a new, quiet, determined expression on his face.

"Tess, I want to see you tonight," he said briefly. "It—it's about the patent and—and—our—your vacation."

When he entered her bare, plain hall room that evening, the old depression had worn off. Her eyes were aglow with a new passion. Without circumlocution he plunged to the heart of his subject.

"Tess, I've sold the patent for a lump sum!"

She glanced up hurriedly, with a frightened expression on her face. The color deserted her lips. Mistaking it for a false alarm, he went on, with a smile on his lips:

"I sold it to the Consolidated Tin Can company for $2,000. I made them raise their bid $500. Isn't that glorious?"

A cry escaped her lips, and her eyes filled with anguish. Montrous stared at this exhibition of emotion, unable to explain it.

"And the royalties?" she gasped.

"There will be no royalties."

"But you said there would be a fortune in royalties and that you would never sell it outright."

The light in his eyes made her shiver.

"But, Tess, little girl, don't you see, I might have to wait years for that, and we needed the rest, the change—you and I. And $2,000 is a good sum. It will give us a vacation"—

She placed her hands to her face and was sobbing softly. Montrous approached and tried to speak steadily, but his voice wavered.

"Tess, dear, don't you see that I love you and that we can—can go away for a time? When we are married we"—

She stepped back, still holding her hands before her eyes. The movement brought Montrous to a sudden stiff attitude. The blood left his face. His voice was very faint.

"Tess, you do not love me? You cannot care for me—in this way?"

She made no reply, but continued her sobbing.

"Oh, I'm so sorry," she murmured brokenly. "You must let me think—leave me alone!"

Tess did not appear at the restaurant the next day nor the next. On the third Montrous could stand it no longer. He interviewed the proprietor and learned, to his chagrin, that the new waitress had left.

Tess was out when he called at her boarding house, but he was relieved to find that she had not changed her lodgings and thus escaped him entirely. He was full of good news and anxiously waited her return. She came in late, less fagged than when he met her last, but still with circles under her eyes.

"Tess, I've good tidings," he said impulsively, taking her hand. "Some fairy godmother of mine has interceded for me. The great Tin Can heart has softened. I can hardly believe the news to be true. But I have it in black and white, and I'm forced to accept it."

She flushed prettily, and the return of the old happiness in her eyes transformed her features.

"You don't ask me what it is I have to tell you?" he added in disappointment. "Have you lost all interest in the patent? If so, then my good fortune will not interest you."

"No, no! Tell me!"

"I've made a new contract with the Consolidated Tin Can company," he announced abruptly. "Instead of paying me $2,000 for the patent they will use it in all their factories and pay me royalties. And the most wonderful thing about it is that the proposition came from them. Can you believe it?"

"No!" she answered faintly.

"Do you know what that means to me?" he added. "Why, it will make me rich—rich enough to go on with my work and to take a vacation when I wish. It's a sure income of many thousands, and"—

Then he stopped. The remembrance of their last interview flashed over him. The joy of the present suddenly lost its power. He was conscious of a loss which success could not requite. The sadness in the corners of his eyes gave him an old, wrinkled appearance. He glanced once at her, and then his resolution made him turn away. His hands strayed idly among the papers and magazines on the table. She had brought a bundle of them in with her, and they lay close to his finger tips. While his eyes roamed from one printed word to another the slow abstraction changed to sudden new interest. He picked a paper from the table and studied it closely. The paper was neatly typed, and the words had a familiar look. Increasing surprise and wonder grew in his face, transfixing him so that he was scarcely conscious of her presence.

With uncomprehending eyes she watched the slow change dawning in his face. The awkward silence attracted her attention, and her eyes fell upon the paper in his hands. There was a cry of dismay from her, and with sudden alarm she glided toward him and snatched the fatal document. With cheeks flushed and eyes lustrous with fear she glanced up, hoping fearfully that her secret was still safe. But in that instant she read the meaning of his dull, baffled gaze.

"Tess," he said slowly, "what does this mean?"

He brushed his brow with a trembling hand.

"How did you get this?" he continued thickly. "It's a copy of my agreement with the company. How—where"—

She did not meet his eyes, but wavered uncertainly, holding the paper in her hands. The light of comprehension was slowly dawning on him. Still he was puzzled.

"Tess, you did this! You—you"—

Then the absurdity of it made him hesitate. What influence could a poor, friendless waitress have with one of the wealthiest corporations of the country? Clearly it was a mere coincidence! But it puzzled him, and he looked to her for an explanation.

She stood near him with half averted face. From the clear cut profile, with its delicate outline and suggestive curves of cheek and chin, his eyes wandered back to the table from which he had picked the document. There were other papers loosened from the rubber band—a memorandum, a loose sheet of some printed matter, an unopened letter and a card. The letter and card attracted his gaze. He dwelt upon them for an instant and then started as though touched by a live wire.

"Tess," he murmured abstractedly, picking up the card and letter, "can you explain how you got that paper and this—this"—

"HOW DID YOU GET THIS?"

His voice trailed off, and he added, reading the card:

"Miss Morley."

He turned it over and gazed at the back, then looked at the handwriting on the unopened letter.

"Miss Morley," he read again.

Tess could stand it no longer. She held out a hand for her property. He watched her, a cynical smile slowly framing itself on his lips.

"You're not Tess—Tess Barrington," he went on, returning the card and letter. "It's a little game of deceit you've been playing. Miss Morley! And old John Morley is the president of the Consolidated Tin Can company! It is quite a coincidence!"

His laugh was mirthless and harsh, something like a sneer curling his lips. She winced under it, but a moment later she turned impulsively toward him and explained:

"I did not intend to deceive you!—I was there in the restaurant for—for the experience. I wanted to see for myself how others lived. I did not want to give to charity indiscriminately, and"—

He interrupted sharply:

"Charity! Oh, yes, it was charity to"—

She stopped him with an imperious look. The shame mounted to his forehead.

"No, I didn't mean that," he apologized. "But I must have the contract canceled. I could not accept the royalties on the patent in that way."

She watched him with a dumb look of pain on her face. When she held out her hands, he did not see them. His eyes were bright with a new determination.

"You do not wish to offend me," she began slowly. "I—after all, our friendship and what has happened, should a small thing like this stand between us?"

"It is what has happened between us that makes this impossible, Tess," he replied, smiling as he emphasized the old name which had grown so dear to him. "I knew Tess Barrington. I do not know Miss Morley."

If before there had lurked any hope in his heart, it was now forever suppressed. Tess—the girl he had loved—was no more, and in her place was—He shuddered and turned from her.

"I must go," he murmured gently.

There were pain and irresolution in her face. Then suddenly she took the copy of the contract and tore it in two, casting the two pieces in the open fireplace.

"If this makes the difference," she said firmly, "I shall have the original destroyed like this. It is not worth the loss of such—such friendship as ours. Now I'm Tess again—simply Tess Barrington, the obscure waitress at D.'s. I'm tired, horribly tired, and need a vacation. See the circles under my eyes! Do they not appeal to you? Think what a vacation we could take on $2,000! Wouldn't it be glorious?"

The saucy eyes and smiling face were close to his. He held his breath and clinched his teeth, then slowly shook his head. He replied with evident effort:

"No, no. That does not alter it. The illusion is broken. Tess, poor Tess, is no more!"

She uttered a little cry of dismay, the color fading from her face. Impulsively she stretched forth both hands again. He took them and held them passionately.

"I loved Tess—loved her dearly," he exclaimed between clinched teeth. "She was more to me than my patent, more than all else in life."

"Then I shall always be Tess to you—simply Tess."

Count Your Life By Deeds, Not by Years.

By CLARA BARTON, Founder of the National Red Cross Society.

THE mind is so constructed that we have become firmly convinced that after a certain length of time we cease to be useful, and when our birthday calendar indicates that we have reached or are nearing that time we become lax in our work and finally cease to accomplish, NOT BECAUSE WE FEEL IN REALITY THAT WE ARE NO LONGER USEFUL, but because we are supposed by all laws and dictums to have finished the span of life allotted to work.

Such a grave ERROR! I have noticed it particularly among old soldiers. In attending many reunions of old soldiers I have noticed that nearly the whole of their conversation is upon THE PASSING OF TIME AND UPON THEIR AGES. They seem to think it quite marvelous that they are even ALIVE, let alone having in mind the doing of anything for their fellow creatures. It is not their fault, but the fault of the attitude of the world to the old in years.

WHEN A MAN HAS CEASED TO FEEL HIMSELF USEFUL HE IS NO LONGER USEFUL, BUT I MAINTAIN THAT NO ONE NEED FEEL THAT WAY JUST BECAUSE HE IS FIFTY, SIXTY, SEVENTY, EIGHTY OR EVEN NINETY OR A HUNDRED YEARS OF AGE—THAT IS, ACCORDING TO YEAR STANDARDS. MANY MEN AT EIGHTY ARE AS CAPABLE OF BEING USEFUL TO THE WORLD AS THEY WERE FIFTY YEARS BEFORE, PERHAPS NOT IN THE SAME WAY AND MAYBE IN A MUCH MORE IMPORTANT WAY, FOR LIFE GIVES EXPERIENCE WITH ITS YEARS THAT IS OF SOME ACCOUNT IF MADE USE OF.

Birthday celebrations after one is ten are without any value, and, what is more, I verily believe that they are harmful. LET YOUR LIFE BE COUNTED BY THE MILESTONES OF ACHIEVEMENT AND NOT BY THE TIMEPIECE YEARS. We would all be younger if that were so and would live to be much older than we do at the present time, when the props are pulled from under us by tradition and precedent when the threescore and ten has been reached.

Today I feel as young in my own mind as I did a half century ago, and that's because I HAVE NOT FOLDED MY HANDS AND GIVEN UP WORK and also given up the thought that I was just as useful as I was in other years.

Hard Times Ahead For the Railroads.

By LUCIUS TUTTLE, President of the Boston and Maine Railroad.

WHILE IT IS IMPOSSIBLE TO PREDICT THE EXTENT AND THE TIME DURING WHICH RAILROADS WILL BE AFFECTED BY THE RECENT PANIC, I AM FORCED TO BELIEVE THAT THE WORST HAS NOT YET BEEN EXPERIENCED, AND, TAKING THE EXPERIENCE OF FORMER PANICS AS A GUIDE, I DO NOT LOOK FOR ANY MATERIAL IMPROVEMENT IN THE PRESENT SITUATION FOR SOME MONTHS TO COME, AND I AM FEARFUL THAT THE FALLING OFF IN RAILROAD TRAFFIC IS LIKELY TO BE MORE SERIOUS THAN IT IS AT THE PRESENT MOMENT.

Whenever there is a material decrease in gross earnings of a railroad it finds it impossible, as a rule, to reduce operating expenses SUFFICIENTLY so as to preserve its net without a somewhat corresponding decrease. This is due to the fact that PAYROLL EXPENSES ARE THE LAST THAT CAN BE MATERIALLY REDUCED, and, as wages are much the larger portion of railroad operating expense, decreases in train service and in other forms of outgo cannot be made sufficiently large to offset a decrease in gross until the payroll can be CORRESPONDINGLY decreased.

If there is to be a great falling off in the volume of traffic, the added facilities that have been provided everywhere during the last two or three years will, in my opinion, be ample for the accommodation of the REDUCED volume of traffic, and further enlargements of these facilities CAN BE DISCONTINUED WITHOUT DETRIMENT UNTIL THERE IS A NEW REVIVAL OF BUSINESS.

Our Relations With Germany.

By CHARLEMAGNE TOWER, American Ambassador to Germany.

THE LONG STANDING GOOD RELATIONS BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND GERMANY HAVE BECOME CLOSER, IF POSSIBLE, DURING THE PAST YEAR AS A RESULT OF THE EFFORTS MADE BY BOTH GOVERNMENTS. IT IS SCARCELY POSSIBLE TO EXPECT ANYTHING ELSE BETWEEN TWO NATIONS THAT ARE BLOOD RELATIONS AND THAT HAVE SO MANY INTERESTS IN COMMON.

The understanding reached between the American tariff commission and representatives of the German government has resulted in an agreement which will facilitate commerce, and it is to be hoped that the trade relations of the two nations will EXPAND AND STRENGTHEN on the basis of this agreement.

The exchange of German and American professors, an outcome of the genial idea conceived by Emperor William, has had A STIMULATING AND FRUITFUL EFFECT IN THE SPHERES OF CULTURE AND SCIENCE and has brought the learned men and the students of Germany and the United States into closer touch. The influence of these exchange professors HAS NOT BEEN CONFINED TO THE LECTURE HALLS. It has expanded to the entire people, and the educated classes of both countries have been brought into more intimate relations. As a result there has grown up a BETTER MUTUAL UNDERSTANDING of the peculiarities of each people, and the idea of the emperor when he inaugurated this movement THUS HAS BEEN FULFILLED.

Enlarging Your Business

If you are in business and you want to make more money you will read every word we have to say. Are you spending your money for advertising in haphazard fashion as if intended for charity, or do you advertise for direct results?

Did you ever stop to think how your advertising can be made a source of profit to you, and how its value can be measured in dollars and cents. If you have not, you are throwing money away.

Advertising is a modern business necessity, but must be conducted on business principles. If you are not satisfied with your advertising you should set aside a certain amount of money to be spent annually, and then carefully note the effect it has in increasing your volume of business; whether a 10, 20 or 30 per cent increase. If you watch this gain from year to you will become intensely interested in your advertising, and how you can make it enlarge your business.

If you try this method we believe you will not want to let a single issue of this paper go to press without something from your store.

We will be pleased to have you call on us, and we will take pleasure in explaining our annual contract for so many inches, and how it can be used in whatever amount that seems necessary to you.

If you can sell goods over the counter we can also show you why this paper will best serve your interests when you want to reach the people of this community.

When You Need Printing Done

You want it to be of the very best kind. As you expect your printed matter to make business it is necessary it should do the talking for you. Poor or indifferent printing cannot do this as it lacks the strong points required to gain and hold the interest of the patron.

Two... Hermits.

By BELLE MANIATES.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Homer Sprague.

"Find me," Orville commanded, "the most isolated farmhouse in your district, where I can have comfortable accommodations for the summer and in no way be hampered in the creation of the book that at present exists in embryo within my brain."

After much skirmishing and scouring of the country Murray found what he thought he wanted and wrote his friend to come on.

Orville came by next train. Murray met him at the station in his big red car, and they sped down a broad, dust white highway.

"Looks thickly settled," objected Orville anxiously.

"We have only started on our road to nowhere," laughed Murray. "I'll cure you of your desire for solitude, I think."

Six miles farther he turned into a crossroad with farmhouses few and far between.

"This is better," declared Orville.

"It will keep getting better from your standpoint," retorted Murray.

On they sped until the car swerved and turned into what looked to Orville like an overgrown copse.

"You don't mean this is a road?" he said as the car bumped and protested against the ruts and underbrush.

"No; just a lane, the only house on which is the one where I have engaged

HE PAUSED BEFORE IT FOR SOME TIME.

quarters for you. The Gliddens live there, but rent out their ground, so there will be no 'help' even—just Glidden and his wife; not a rural route delivery to break the monotony. I believe a peddler passes once a year. You can be lost to the world and, like the little girl in the song, have 'nobody nigh to hinder.'"

"Murray, this place was made for me!" ejaculated the young author as the car swooped down upon a white house nestled among the trees.

Murray helped him carry his belongings into the big airy bedroom and then returned to town, with a curious smile lighting his face.

The place proved ideal for Orville's purpose. The farmer and his wife were quiet people, little given to speech. They never disturbed him when he was at work even to the extent of summoning him to a meal. When hunger drove him from his work, no matter what the hour might be, food was prepared without an objection. A beautiful winding river with incurving shores swept through the farm, and here at eve Dick Orville was wont to repair for inspiration. Under these blissful conditions his ideas developed and unfolded charmingly. Then there came the inevitable ending.

"I am sorry," faltered his landlady one morning, "but Hiram went to the postoffice today, and he found a letter from a young lady in the city. She is an artist and wants to come here to paint and to be alone."

"Well, write to her that she can't come," replied Orville quickly. "I'll pay you double"—

"It's too late," said Mrs. Glidden. "You see, the letter was written a week ago. We don't get our mail only once in awhile. She said if she didn't hear to the contrary she'd come today. But I'll try and find her another place near here. The Allens take boarders. I may have to keep her overnight if she comes. Would you like to hear her letter?"

Before he could politely decline this proffer Mrs. Glidden began to read the letter, which was girlishly written. She said that she longed for a place where she could be quiet, some place that was remote from neighbors, where she could paint and dream at will; that a friend in passing the Glidden farm had thought it would be just the kind of place she craved and had written her about it.

Some of Orville's irritation vanished upon hearing the letter. There was a note of appeal in it, a reflection of his own mood, that touched him.

"She evidently craves solitude as much as I do and so she will avoid me," he thought.

"We might try it, Mrs. Glidden," he proposed, "and if I find her presence interrupts my work in any way we can ask Mrs. Allen to take her in. They have other boarders, and I imagine she wouldn't get the quiet there that she so evidently wants. I'll tell you what I'll do. I'll move my writing table and books and things down to the little cabin on the river bank and do my work there."

He proceeded to carry out this plan and remained in his new quarters the rest of the day. It was dusk when he came to the farmhouse for something to eat.

"She's upstairs," volunteered Mrs. Glidden. "She's awfully young and pretty. I told her I had a gentleman boarder who came here to be alone, and she said she wouldn't disturb you in the least."

But Orville wasn't interested in hearing of the newcomer. His mind was intent on a complicated situation in his book, and he paid no heed to what his landlady was saying.

Three days and nights intervened without an encounter of the two would be hermits. Once Orville came upon an easel down in the orchard. He paused before it for some time, lost in admiration of the talent displayed. Then he walked on to the river. That night he was unable to write. Memories he was striving to stifle were awakened by the bit of landscape he had viewed.

The next morning as he was seated at his writing table in the cabin making heroic efforts to concentrate his thoughts on his work, he heard the sound as of some one running. He went to the door and saw a young girl carrying a tin pail filled with artist's materials running toward the cabin in great alarm.

"Oh," she gasped, with a half sob, "save me. He'll follow me in here!"

In an instant Orville's strong right arm was about her shivering form.

"Kathie! Would I let any one or anything harm you?"

She lifted a white face.

"Oh, Dick! You? Why—you are not Mrs. Glidden's boarder—the one I've been hiding from?"

"Yes; but tell me, what frightened you?"

"The bull! He chased me down here through the meadows."

Orville placed her in a chair and stepped outside. In a moment he returned with the pail of paints and brushes.

"It's all right, Kathie," he said reassuringly; "the pail, supposed to contain nourishment, was the attraction. The gentle creature I found sniffing suspiciously and disapprovingly at your paints was a young, hornless thing commonly known as a mulley cow."

Kathie's eyes were downcast. The silence that ensued was profound and eloquent. Then she looked up and met his steady gaze with a half smile.

"Dick," she said faintly, "did Tom Murray by any chance know you were here?"

"Tom Murray! Why, he found me this place. I wrote him to look me up a farmhouse where I could be quite alone and write. Why?"

"I saw him the other day and told him I wanted a farmhouse where I could be quite alone and paint. Dick!"

"Dear, Tom was far wiser than we. Shall we profit by his vision and let his plan work out as he intended? Can't we forgive and forget, Kathie?"

Later, when Mrs. Glidden saw her two boarders coming slowly up from the fields she sagely remarked to her spouse:

"Well, pa, that's a man and a woman the world over!"

Her Exalted Position.

"Ye needn't think because ye see me goin' an' comin' be th' back door iv Mr. Malcolm Goldborough's mansion that Oi'm wan iv th' common servants iv th' house," said the haughty customer to the uncivil butcher.

"Oh," ejaculated the fat little man, abruptly turning obsequious, "are—are you a family connection of the great Goldborough's, ma'am?"

"Oi'm more than a mere connection, sir."

"Pardon me," added the butcher, gazing patronizingly at this personage, "you're one of the family that's been abroad and whom I haven't had the pleasure of meeting before perhaps?"

"Ye'll have t' go higher than thot."

"Not Mr. Malcolm's new wife?" gasped the fat little man. "I didn't have a suspicion that he"—

"Higher, mon. Oi'm higher."

"Higher?" uttered the perfectly bewildered butcher.

"Yis. Oi'm th' cook!"—Bohemian.

Drug Store For Horses.

"I came across a queer little drug store the other day," said the city salesman. "It makes a specialty of veterinarian prescriptions. According to the proprietor's own account, they don't sell very much in that store except horse medicine. They sell more of that than any other drug store in town. The neighborhood abounds in stables and animals' hospitals, and most of the drugs used in doctoring sick horses are bought at that store. Of course the place is fitted up with the usual drug store paraphernalia. There is a soda water fountain, a cigar stand, postage stamps can be purchased there and drafts and doses for human beings will be compounded upon request, but those familiar and supposedly primary functions of a drug store are in this case a superfluity, because about all that druggist does is to put up cures for equine ailments."—New York Press.

REPUBLICAN CONVENTION

Story of the Great Gathering Told by a Master Pen.

Incidents and Sidelights—Picture of the Nomination of Secretary Taft—The Old Politician Talks of Politics of Yesterday and To-Day.

By WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE

Chicago.—A national convention is all over but the shouting, when the presidential nomination is made. It is for that that the delegates assemble. High-browed men wrangle over party platform planks, and fight it out among themselves as to who shall be forced to accept the vice-presidential place, but in all of those things the general public has but little inter est. The visitors in the galleries are there only to see the hero crowned, and once the ceremony is over, and the shouting has worn itself out, their interest in the convention rapidly dies away—the show is over.

Frank H. Hitchcock Brought in the Delegates with Ease.

Thursday was a hot day, and the perspiration that the thousands shed would have floated all four of the president's battleships, and the real trouble of the convention—in a day of trouble—began after the invocation had been spoken, after Senator Hopkins had given a visible demonstration of the platform, which no one heard and no one seemed to care to hear, and after Congressman Cooper, on behalf of the minority of the committee on resolutions, began scolding the convention.

His speech, of course, did not convince. It was a protest, rather than an argument, and anyway the convention would not have changed that platform, which it believed to be inspired from Washington, if the minority had offered the Ten Commandments. But Cooper scolded, and when the authorized representative from the railroad engineers and firemen and trainmen appeared and warned the convention that the railroad employes of the country were dissatisfied with the anti-injunction planks, that made no difference, either.

Gabriel's trumpet would have been laid on the table for the regular order by the convention. Its face was set. It was under orders, and nothing could move it. So it moved majestically along. It adopted the platform, formally voting down, by overwhelming majorities, planks advocating publicity in campaign contributions recommended by the president in his messages, valuation of railroads, recommended by the president in his messages, and the election of senators by the people.

A Roosevelt Convention.

For that convention was for Roosevelt policies only when it had them in the regular order and the authenticated form. The Roosevelt policies, as such, did not interest the convention, for it was under orders and took only the real milk of the word as it came through the committee, and it believed, and probably with some justification, in the fact that Roosevelt did not care to have his policies come into the convention by way of Wisconsin.

So it voted for the program and went on to the next order. And the next order was the nomination of a president. And that is a serious business.

It is curious to know just how forms and conventions and precedents are worshiped without sense or reason by apparently clear-headed men. But there sat 1,000 delegates and 10,000 spectators and listened to five mortal hours of utterly useless, entirely meaningless and absolutely vacuous speeches. These speeches were made putting men in nomination for the presidency who had no more chance to be nominated than they had of picking out a harp check and joining the heavenly choir. Boutell of Illinois began it—naming Cannon.

Senator Burrows Told of the Glory of the G. O. P.

The crowd stood for him with some patience, though no one listened to him.

Gov. Hanly of Indiana, an unusually able governor, and an otherwise sane man, came a little afterward and got in a row with the convention because it laughed at him and jeered him during the last half of a perfectly unnecessary speech.

He assured the convention that under Fairbanks there would be no "government by impulse," and the crowd knew what he was driving at, and his usefulness as an orator was ended.

New York has a sense of humor, and when the delegation was called for New York the delegates rose laughing and let Gen. Woodford make the shortest and most appropriate speech of the day, nominating Hughes. And when he said that only two men beyond a doubt could carry New York—one being in the White House and the other in the governor's office at Albany—he made the crowd restive and quit just before his credit gave out.

The Clarion Note.

The only real clarion note of the convention was sounded by Knight of California, seconding Taft's nomination. For Knight has a voice, and Mr. Burton of Ohio, who put Taft's name before the convention gracefully, was not heard as well as such a speaker should have been heard. Knox also was tastefully nominated—with proper eclat and without too much wind-jamming.

And if the young football player, Cochem of Wisconsin, who gave the convention La Follette's name, had cut his speech in two, it would have made the hit of the afternoon. But he slid past the crowd's limit, and the smile which captivated every one wore off and he grew angry, and "the subsequent proceedings interested him no more."

It was Mr. McGee—remember the name—who, seconding the nomination of La Follette, started the whoop heard round the world. There seems to be no question that of all the candidates besides Taft, La Follette got the best demonstration.

But after that complications occurred. Some one walked across the gallery back of the speaker's platform with a flag containing Roosevelt's picture, and the applause for La Follette merged into the futile, stupid attempt to stampede the crowd to Roosevelt, and for a quarter of an hour the yelling continued.

Senator Lodge Wielded the Gavel with Satisfaction to All.

It was quieted as the roll call on president began and continued down to Iowa. There a silence fell, and continued until Taft was nominated.

Now written down here in a thousand words, this seems like the story of a stirring episode. Yet it covers events that lasted from 10 o'clock until 5:30. There was some formal cheering of something like two and six-elevenths seconds for each of the allies, and this is the best part of it all—those who had sought the nomination the hardest, Cannon and Knox and Fairbanks, got no more than Foraker, who took what he could pick up. There were no differences between the $75 picture fireworks and the ten-cent roman candle—they all fizzled and went out in gloom.

Abner Handy Talks.

But to go back to some of the earlier days of the convention, some of the days before the fireworks were all exploded, the days when only the fuses were sizzling. It was on Sunday, I think, that I met my friend Handy—Abner Handy from the Ninth Kansas district. Mr. Handy, who has been out of politics in Kansas since 1902, was unable to get to the convention before Sunday on account of floods in the Kaw bottoms, and until his arrival the pre-convention milling had been rather tame. But the arrival of Mr. Handy in his Prince Albert coat and black slouch hat, with his massive head of hair protruding fiercely, and his little slits of eyes keenly measuring up the situation—Mr. Handy is an expert on "the situation"—added new life to the crowd in the Annex, and one may say that the convention began with his arrival.

"It has been 12 years since I attended a Republican convention," said Mr. Handy, as he lolled in a red plush divan in alimony alley and spat through his teeth at the onyx mopboard, "and I meet a great many new faces. I first saw Fairbanks in the St. Louis convention, and I have just been talking to one of his managers—one of the new men in Indiana politics—born since I left the state—a Mr. Ade—George they call him. Clever young man, apparently. He tells me there is a strong undercurrent for Fairbanks, and wanted me to help him bale it up so that there would be some surface indications.

"But the situation," said Mr. Handy, as he pulled at his mustache and put his hat over his eyes, "does not seem to be working out that way, though. Fairbanks is a man than whom no other in all this great galaxy of sister states is more fitted geographically and logically to lead our great party.

"I speak," went on Mr. Handy, after reflecting and chewing viciously at his cigar, "I speak in no uncertain tones in this matter; he is a leader without fear and without reproach, and with him as our standard bearer in this great contest the eagles of victory would perch upon our triumphant guidons."

Is Now for Taft.

I can say for Mr. Handy to-day that he is an ardent supporter of the secretary of war for president, and proposes to take the stump for him in his district. After the nomination Mr. Handy said to me:

"You know that I was for Roosevelt, of course. I was for him when he was just a kid in the police commission in New York. What's more, if we could have put him on the ticket this year he would make Garrison county solid for the whole ticket. But then, you know, he's impulsive and erratic, and we've got to get down to business."

No Politics, All Reform.

It was on Monday that I met my friend from the Ninth district again. He was in the Pompeian room of the Annex when I found him.

"The only true thing," he said, as he waved proudly for the boy and ordered a split of water—"the only true thing about this convention is that nothing is true."

As he sipped the fuzzy water and recalled his promise to Mrs. Handy before he left home, Abner added reflectively: "The trouble with this convention is there is no politics in it. There are no politicians here. I've looked at this man Hitchcock—nothing but a card index, that's all there is to him. And I've looked over Vorys—he won't do; he's perfectly frank. Haven't heard him called a liar since I've been here. No man gets far in politics until his enemies call him a liar.

"Say," added the colonel, as he leaned across the mosaic on the table top, "say—now honest—why did your paper cut the 'Hon.' off in front of my name? I like it. Tell them to put it on. I was around when the New York delegation held a meeting to-day, and say! They don't know any more politics than a rabbit. They decided to do nothing. Imagine a convention where the New York delegation is such a four spot that they have to debate three days to decide whether they will take the vice-president! And, what's more, imagine a convention where the most serious item of interest is the nominee for vice-president! And now the New York delegation is going to have its palm read to find out whether it will take Hughes for vice-president or rally around Jim Sherman, the people's choice, or commit hara-kiri with Tim Woodruff."

Mr. Handy reflected for a time and sighed. "It's h——l'—it's certainly h——l'—but what else could you expect of a convention where people all paid their railroad fare. You reformers will get this country sewed up in a sack so that there won't be any politics any more. They'll nominate the delegates by direct primaries, instruct them on the chief planks of the platform—and where will the palladium of our liberties be then?"

There is something in Abner Handy's view of it. The alternate from the Ninth Kansas district has been drifting around to-day looking for the old familiar faces, and he finds they are not here. There aren't a dozen bronze buttons in all the throng.

Congressman Burton Painted a Glowing Picture of the War Secretary.

Young men with stiff straw hats and boyish faces are dominating the crowd.

"What can you expect," asked the colonel, earnestly, as he drifted out of the Taft headquarters, "of a gang like that? No whispering—no one coming out of the consultation room like a man from a dentist's office—with his teeth in his hands—a sadder and wiser man; nothing but idle speculation about the vice-presidency."

Sighs for the Old Days.

The colonel waved for the waiter and sighed and shook his head and said: "A promise is a promise—when your wife issues the door keys—yes, another bottle of those liquid hairpins."

Then he resumed his lamentations: "I saw some forlorn fellows solemnly hayfooting it down Michigan avenue this morning. They had a band and were in a procession. Was it a funeral? It was not. Was it the doomed man walking to the gallows with a firm step after eating a hearty breakfast of bacon and eggs? Not at all! Was it a delegation of flood sufferers or a chain gang? No, but it looked like the melancholia ward of an asylum out for a morning's airing—and it was the Knox Marching Club!

JAMES S. SHERMAN.

"They are here. The band is here. They have to do something—so they flit through the hotels like lost spirits and recall the dear dead days when there was politics in this man's town, and a railroad attorney with a book of transportation was a bigger man than old Grant. And that's what your reform has done. Put a lot of Willies in serge suits—'nine ninety-eight, marked down from fourteen fifty'—into control of the destinies of our great republic.

"What has become of our common heritage?" exclaimed Mr. Handy, waving his glass wildly. "Where is our manifest destiny? Who's gone and stolen the pride pointer and the alarm-viewer? Is it in the platform? No, you reformers are making terms with Gompers; and Taft's 'liberal views,' as they call them, are going to prevail over the fine conservative views of our peerless leader, our grand old man, freedom's champion, the defender of the faith of the fathers, the man who—the man who—the man who"—reiterated Mr. Handy—"the man who—I refer to Hon. J. G. Cannon of Danville, Ill.

"Where's your keynote speech in this convention? I'll tell you; it's fastened in Burrows' time lock. Who is going to sound a clarion note here to-day? There will be no clarion note. The name of the gallant Blaine will not be heard in the hall. The party that saved the country, that broke the shackles on 4,000,000 slaves, the party that preserved the Union, is represented here by the allies, and they are tossed around like a lot of last year's alfalfa. They came here asking for the presidency; they were willing to compromise on the vice-presidency and sprung the name of Jim Sherman.

"It reminds me of the time Col. Anadoneran J. Balderson of our town started out to be minister to England under Cleveland's first administration. He found that job gone, and compromised by applying for assistant secretary of state. Failing in that, he asked for United States marshal. Failing in that, he asked for the postoffice at home, and then, failing in that, straightened himself up and said: 'Thank heaven, we have a Democratic governor in Kansas, and he will not turn me down.'

"He came home three months later with a pair of Gov. Glick's old trousers, and to that end has your reform brought those who for 40 years have been fighting the party's battles."

Mr. Handy rose proudly and said: "Reform—reform—what crimes are committed in thy name!"

The Big Crowd's Tribute.

What a curious thing is a big crowd of civilized men and women gathered for some formal occasion. Yesterday afternoon the sibilant lisp of the great crowd in the Coliseum fell like a great wave on the shores of the place, in idle conversation as the proceedings of the convention droned on. The committee on credentials made its report, and the great crowd lapped it up as the sea laps up the sand—impersonally, uninterested, utterly idle. There was no fight, and evidently the crowd knew there would be no fight.

The regular order proceeded, and Senator Lodge was installed as permanent chairman, and the great crowd—the great buff sea, rocked idly to look at him. He began to speak with some fervor, and little ripples of applause played across the tide. His earnestness deepened the billows slightly.

And the waves lulled and were quiet. And then, not while he was at a climax, but as the man before them was reaching deeper and deeper into the soul of the place and the occasion, the sibilant lisp of the crowd hushed, and in the great silence the man spoke, simply and strongly and without oratorical flourish or emphasis. "He has enforced the laws as he found them, and so he is the best abused and most popular man in America."

It was not much of a tribute. But a wave of sincere feeling swept over the quiet tide of humanity. It was not a strong wave—not much stronger than the first wave that came rolling in. But another wave followed it, and another higher and stronger came after it. The speaker, who did not realize what was about to come, put out his hand to beg silence, but a huge wave of applause came over him, and he ducked and backed off good-naturedly and let the wind of emotion play as it would across the restless sea before him.

At Flood Tide.

In another minute, perhaps two, Senator Lodge rose again to face the rising tide, but it rolled in on him with a great roar, and men knew that the storm of applause had come which Theodore Roosevelt's work as an American citizen had conjured. So they let it rage, and for nearly an hour the waves of that storm broke and roared in that place.

Then the crowd, in that hour of joy, gathered individuals in and they ceased to be individuals and became the crowd. At times the delegates were swept off their feet. State after state rose, like black billows on the face of the waters, and cheered and waved pennants and sank to equilibrium only to ruffle up again and cheer with the crowd. No state was able to keep its mooring. And in the tumult and the shouting there were no reactionaries. New York was as boisterous as Wisconsin, and Kansas joined Pennsylvania.

"Roosevelt, Roosevelt, four years more," they roared, and the cry skimmed over the waves of applause like a gull, and like a gull it was evanescent. It signified nothing. And then slowly, when the deep answered deep, the calm came and the speaker went on with his speaking.

It was all so simply and so naturally done, all so evidently sincere, without claque or prearrangement, that there was in its undercurrent an element of sadness. For it seemed a good-by rather than a bait to Theodore Roosevelt, and those who have feared him feared him no more, and those who have trusted him were happy, but rather sad than joyful.

Once the big show—the presidential nomination—was over, the remainder of the work of the convention, the selection of a running mate for Secretary Taft, was completed in short order on Friday morning when Hon. James S. Sherman of New York was named for second place on the ticket.

MANY RAILROAD WRECKS.

Baltimore and Ohio Meets Up With a Bunch of Bad Luck.

The past week has been one of misfortune and loss to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, wreck following, wreck one delay after another until neary all the trains have been knocked out.

The series of wrecks was inaugurated on last Friday night when an eastbound freight train became derailed at Empire, one mile west of Bloomington, in which ten or a dozen cars were derailed and both tracks torn out.

Saturday morning at 10 o'clock a second wreck occurred at the same spot, tying up the road for more than six hours, which was followed on Saturday night and again on Sunday night with wrecks and derailments identical with the Saturday morning smash-up.

Monday afternoon locomotive 1892, drawing an eastbound freight train, was derailed at Rinard, eight miles west of Oakland. The engine turned turtle and the engineer was caught beneath the wreckage. He escaped, however, with a very badly bruised and sprained ankle. The fireman escaped injury by jumping from the engine as it was going over.

THE DEATH RECORD.

MRS. JENNIE BENDER.

Died, at her home near Accident, on Monday, June 22nd, after a lingering illness of tuberculosis, Mrs. Jennie Bender, aged 33 years. The deceased was the wife of Daniel J. Bender and was married to him 14 years ago. She was the daughter of William Custer. The funeral took place from the Speicher church, on Tuesday, and was conducted by Rev. Johnston, of the U. B. church, assisted by Rev. Gideon Miller, of the Mennonite church. Mrs. Bender was a Christian lady and was highly esteemed for her kindly spirit and noble character. The funeral was largely attended by sympathetic relatives and friends.

WILLIAM H. HOYE.

William H. Hoye, a member of the pioneer family of Hoyes, among the first as well as the best citizens of Garrett county, died at his home very suddenly and unexpectedly on last Thursday afternoon at his home near Hoyes. The deceased was born on the Mattingly farm, where his death also occurred, sixty five years ago. He was married to Miss Louisa Sturtzman, of Somerset county, Pa., to whom five children, three sons and two daughters were born. The sons are Charles E., now a resident of the Philippines; Robert and Paul, both at home; the daughters are Josephine, wife of Prof. Armstrong, who also resides in the Philippines, and Helen, at home. Mr. Hoye's death came without warning, his body being discovered lying on the porch of his residence by Mrs. Hoye a few moments after she had left him apprently in his usual health. His funeral took place on Saturday morning at 11 o'clock from the home, the interment in the Judge Friend cemetery near Sang Run.

A TIMELY WARMING

To the Purblind, Non-Resident Land Owners.

Last week we respectfully addressed ourselves especially to the few non-resident land owners who have attempted to blockade the wheels of modern progress, in the vicinity of Swallow Falls,

To be frank, from what we have heard about them, and their insulting refusals to reply to our civil and polite personal letters, which were written to them months ago on this subject, we had little hopes of convincing them of the folly of their ways and bringing them up to the stool of repentance, at all.

An active and widely varied business experienced, of nearly sixty years, has taught us many useful lessons, one of which is, "always try mild means first." This we have already done; another lesson is, "when you run up against a surly dog in the manger," who "won't eat hay nor let anybody else eat hay" you might as well throw diplomacy to the dogs and seize him by the throat and choke him into submission, metaphorically speaking.

We took the pains last week, and several weeks previously, to mail "marked copies" of our arguments on this subject, to each one of these would be "Princes of Monaco" who are attempting to establish a veritable "Monte Carlo" in the vicinity of Swallow Falls.

Thus far they have treated our offers of "reciprocal advantages," in exchange for right of way through their lands, for our harmless but indispensable enterprises in their vicinity, with silent contempt.

We now warn them in advance that we are not going to tolerate any insulting nonsense on this subject, nor crawl up to them on our knees, begging them for the privilege of doubling and quadrupling the value of their lands, at our own expense. On the contrary we shall go ahead in spite of them and build our plant, lay water pipes to our impulse wheels, erect poles to transmit electric energy wherever needed, build traction railroad wherever the demands of the "soverniegn people" require that they shall be built, as work of public necessity, then if these purblind obstructionists prefer law to compromise, on our liberal terms, let them jump onto us with the law and we will cheerfully submit to the decisions of our Maryland Courts and the verdicts of Garrett county juries of condemnation.

We have taken legal advice on this subject, and have no fears for the result of a legal battle royal, with fixed bayonets, against them.

The question of their liability for damages will surely come up if these obstructionists persist in delaying the development of these absolutely indispensable works of public necessity.

Before declaring open war we will hold up to their gaze a few more phenomenal enterprises, which have never been published before, and which they are now holding back by their nefariously insane opposition, in the hope that they may yet see the errors of their ways and tell us so before it is too late.

We will begin where we left off two weeks ago, at No. 7, and continue the same subject with some hitherto unpublished data.

No. 8. Along the banks of the upper Youghiogheny and its score of tributaries, there lies dormant billions of tons of rich iron ore waiting for railroads to convey it to Pittsburg, or for blast furnaces, rolling mills, steel mills, and other factories, right at our hydro-electric plant, which will rival Pittsburg itself, in the cheapness of these products.

No. 9. In the same neglected region of fabulous wealth in embryo, we can point out billions of tons of the most beautiful lime and building stone, which will bear transportation (when we get electric railroads) to cities 1,000 miles distant.

In addition to the building stone these same quarries, ranging from 50 to 80 feet thick, will supply crude limestone sufficient to flux all the blast furnaces in Pittsburg, and burned, building and agricultural lime sufficient to supply the surrounding country for at least 100 miles in every direction.

When we consider the billions of tons of lime, iron ore, fire clay, kaolin, glass sand, coal, etc., lying dormant in this wonderful region it is plain to be seen that a single track electric railroad will not be sufficient.

It will require a double track of six miles from Swallow Falls to the B. & O. at Oakland to transport these billions of tons of valuable freight that are seeking an outlet to the south, east, and west, and also another double track of thirty miles to Uniontown, Pa., where they can connect with both steam and electric railroads to Pittsburg.

Soon as the six mile link to Oakland is completed the B. & O. won't be able to furnish freight cars fast enough to supply the demand. Does any sane man suppose that the Maryland Courts, which granted us the Charter for our hydro-electric plant, or the Garrett county juries, who will condemn our right of way, are going to tolerate the blockading of all these immense enterprises by the, would-be, "Princes of Monaco," who are trying to assume the rights of "pre-eminent domain" over the few acres of land, they picked out after denuding all our magnificent forests of timber and thereby reduced their assessable values more than 100 per cent.

We shall teach them that it is impossible for them to set up a veritable "Monte Carlo" in proud old Maryland, "the cradle of civil and religious liberty."

If they attempt to drive us to the wall we will prove to them that they can't even legally set up claims to "riparian rights" on the Upper Youghiogheny, which never was, and never can be made a navigable stream.

Public sentiment, in Garrett county is unanimously, and enthusiastically in favor of the installation of our 10,000 horse power hydro-electric plant, which will supply the energy to drive railroads, and lateral branches, throughout this phenominal region of 100,000 acres of unparalleled mineral wealth, and also supply cheap energy and lights, to the countless number of mines, railroads, quarries, factories, etc., that are bound to come soon as the above named railroads are built.

It is pertinent for us to remind those Pennsylvania "timber fiends," who have denuded all the Garrett county forests, during the past thirty years, and want to lord it over everything else in sight, that they are up against the "Special Agent" for the County Commissioners of both Allegany and Garrett counties, whose duties are defined under written agreements of record, is to ferret out, locate, and report to the Assessors, all unassessed lands and all lands that are assessed at too low a valuation, hence we warm these would be "Princes of Monaco" that if they make us too mad we may get back at them in a way that they never dreamed of before.

GORTNER.

The weather for the past few weeks has been ideal, and a few of the hustling ruralites have had their mowers repaired and are busy making hay.

A number of our young people attended the festival at the Gnagy church last Saturday night.

Miss Myrtle Custer, of Bittinger, is visiting friends here this week.

P. P. Gortner attended the Menonite communion services near Grantsville last Sunday.

J. C. Gortner, of West Virginia, is spending a few days with his friends at this place.

A large crowd of lads and lassie are making preparations to go on a fishing excursion to the Cheat river on the Fourth.

Mrs. S. F. Erwin was calling on Mrs. W. M. Killius Sunday.

Our Sunday school was largely attended last Sunday, and Joshua Brenninger is to be congratulated on his efficient talk in the Sunday school.

D. J. Slabach and family have moved to their new residence on Second street.

Mr. S. S. Beachy, wife and son of Garrett, Kansas, are visiting relatives and friends at this place.

Preaching Sunday at 10.30 a. m., and 7.30 p. m., by Rev. Jacob Snyder, of near Altoona, Pa.

The State Benefitted.

That high license in Baltimore city has benefitted the State of Maryland, is shown in the report for the last quarter of Clerk Adam Deupert, of the Court of Common Pleas. Saturday afternoon he sent a certified check to State Comptroller Hering for $1,127,580.78, representing general license receipts. This is the largest return of cash ever made to the State by any court official in Baltimore city, and it exceeds other returns for licenses by many thousands of dollars.

The Law In Force.

Tuesday night at 12 o'clock the law passed by the legislature requiring telegraph companies to state on dispatches the time of filing, went into effect. Local offices of the telegraph companies have received instructions from headquarters to strictly observe the law. The law does not require that the time of filing be placed on every dispatch handled in Maryland. It applies only to those messages filed in Maryland for delivery to points in this State. A fine of not less then $10 nor more then $200 for each offense is provided for violations.

BONDS FOR MODEL ROADS TO ISSUE.

Maryland Officials Authorize Raising of $5,000,000 By State.

Gov. Crothers attended a meeting of the board of public works at Annapolis, Monday, and after a protracted discussion, the preliminary arrangements for the issue of $5,000,000 of bonds, as authorized by the good roads act passed at the last sesion of the legislature for the construction of State highways was made.

Dr. Joshua W. Herring, comptroller of the State treasury, was authorized to prepare the certificates for the bond issue. The first issue of the bonds will be for $1,000,000. Bids will be invited to be received before noon of Augnst 1, and the board of public works will meet in Annapolis on that day to consider them.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

The ice house being erected on the foundation of the one destroyed by fire a few weeks since, is rapidly nearing completion. It will be the same size, only no so high, but will hold all that will be needed for home consumption.

Messrs. Chas. F. Dawson and John D. Hayden are erecting a booth, on the foundation of the postoffice building which was destroyed by fire last winter, for the sale of confections, souvenirs, stationery, periodicals, newspapers, soft drinks, etc.

Rev. Johnson and Messrs. C. F. Dawson, Gay W. Hayden and George Hipsley, representing the Red Men of Mt. Lake Park, attended the funeral of Joseph H. Lee, son of Geo. R. Lee, of near Swanton, this county, who was killed in a shaft near Pittsburg, Pa., last week. Deceased was 27 years old. The funeral was in charge of the Swanton Red Men, and the interment in the family cemetery about five miles from Swanton Tuesday last.

Rev. J. P. McKee arrived yesterday.

Mrs Grubb and Miss Buckman are in their cottage in the Park.

The bowling alley is in full blast under the management of Mr. Samuel Lee.

Mr. Wm. M. Pepper and some of his assistants in the management of the great camp meeting, are on the ground.

Mrs. J. Grant Hayden, three children and nurse, who have been at "Haydenhurst" for the past month, returned to their home in Westernport, Md., Wednesday afternoon.

SEES HUSBAND DROWN.

Aged Wife, Helpless, Clings to Log, While Husband's Body Floats Away.

From Kenton, Ohio, comes the news of the death of Mr. Anson Clement, known by many Garrett countians, having spent many summers in this section with his aged wife and their daughters.

Last Tuesday afternoon, while Mr. Clement, who was eighty years of age, and his wife aged seventy-five years, were driving along the Scioto river road near Kenton, they ran into a washout in the road on the edge of Painter creek and horse, buggy and occupants were carried into the creek and out into the Scioto river.

Five hours later some boys, who had gone in swimming, rescued Mrs. Clement from a stump in the midst of the swirling flood, but the horse and buggy and the body of Mr. Clement were carried down the river. The body of Mr. Clement was not recovered until Wednesday afternoon, at a point some distance from where the accident took place.

A Birthday Surprise.

On Wednesday, June 24th, the people of near Deep Creek gave a surprise to Mr. John A. Edgar, on the occasion of his sixtieth birthday. When Mr. Edgar came home from his work he found a large table loaded with the good things of this life and decorated with roses. Mr. Edgar was the recipient of many handsome presents. Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. John Weimer, Sr., Miss Hilda Weimer, Mr. John Weimer, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Jessie Weimer, Mrs. Thomas Weimer and three children, Mr. and Mrs. Charley Bowman and five children, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Edgar and child, Mr. Lou. Schmidt and Miss Ruth Brant. A very enjoyable evening was spent together.

Desirable Clothing

For Boys

Is one of my specialties. I have been very particular in the selection of my line to get only goods of dependable quality.

My suits for LITTLE BOYS 3 to 7 years in Eton, Buster Brown and Sailor styles at $3.00 to $5.00 are hard to beat.

Suits from 8 to 16 year sizes in either plain knee pants or Knickerbocker style at $4.00 to $7.50 I believe to be the best to be had in this range of prices. I also have a lot of cheaper suits if you want them.

Yours Truly. E. A. WEIMER.

The Mountain Chautauqua

TWENTY-SIXTH ANNUAL SESSION.

AUGUST 4th to AUGUST 28th, 1908

Dr. W. L. DAVIDSON, Superintendent of Instruction

To those looking for an ideal summer resort where recreation and culture walk hand in hand, we point to Mountain Lake Park, Maryland, seat of the Mountaln Chautauqua. The reputation of this spot is as wide as the nation, for annually thirty states of the Union are represented in its patronage besides many visitors from foreign lands.

High in the mountains it is equally high in its aims and is unquestionably the most superb and sensible summer resort in America. It is beautiful for situation, resting on the crest of the Alleghany Mountains, 2800 feet above sea level. Superb mountain views catch the eye at every point of the compass. The mercury rarely ever clambers above the 80s and the evenings are always cool and delightful. There is tonic in the air. There is complete absence of malaria, insect pests and hay fever.

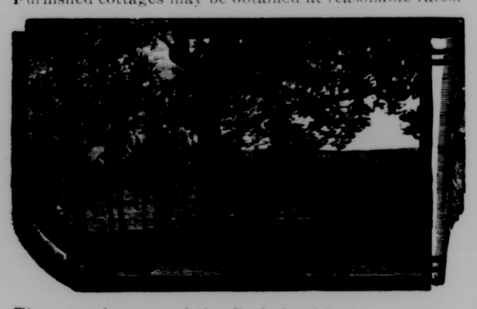
The grounds of Mountain Lake Park include 800 acres and there is ampleness everywhere. More than $350,000 have been invested in permanent improvements which include an electric light plant, water works, 5 commodious hotels and more than 250 cottages, an auditorium seating 2,000 people; a beautiful school hall where class work along many lines is conducted, a Hall of Philosophy seating 300 for some of the smaller gatherings of the Chautauqua and an amphitheatre—one of the finest and most complete on the continent, seating 5,000. A lake of 40 acres well supplied with boats and launches and the best Athletic Field in Western Maryland. These are some of the attractive improvements.

The Chautauqua is undenominational and here people of all creeds and parties mingle thoughtfully and lovingly. The assembly is organized on high grounds and has high aims. It appeals to the thoughtful and seeks to displace some forms of amusement which are unworthy and fraught with danger. You can live at Mountain Lake Park as cheaply as you can live at home and at the same time reap all the rare advantages which the rich program affords.

Board from $5 to $12 per week can be obtained at cottage boarding houses and at attractive hotels. It is a place for thoughtful, earnest people with limited means as well as for the wealthy who have sensible views of life. To those who have high ideals and desire to mix a little intellectual uplift with their summer outing, Mountain Lake Park and its Chautauqua appeals.

It is an absolute paradise for children. You here have the delightful fellowship of the best people and recreation and profit are happily combined.

Furnished cottages may be obtained at reasonable rates.



The general stores of the Park furnish the comforts and necessities of life.

It is not an out-of-the-way place but is situated on the main line of the picturesque B. & O. R. R. with fast trains and sleeping and parlor cars.

The best lectures, concerts and entertainments which genius can devise or money procure are to be heard at the Park during the month of August at insignificant expense. On this platform the best men of the nation and of foreign lands have stood during the past twenty-five years. The program of the coming summer is one of the best which has ever been offered to the patrons of this famous resort.

Try it for one season. It will give you pleasant memories to carry through the year and send you back to your work greatly invigorated.

In the advertisement columns you will find information which may help you mature your summer plans.

For information of every character, as to cottages, boarding houses, programs, schools, etc., address Dr. W. W. Davis, Mountain Lake Park, Maryland.

Chautauqua Department Work

Biblical and Devotional Hour.

For the thoughtful and devout, these nine o'clock hours in the Hall of Philosophy will be held with inspiration and uplift. The Book of Books will be opened wide by those who have given their lives to its reverent study and who have been blessed of God in leading multitudes of men and women to high planes of living. At this service the key-note of the day will be struck. The aim of the Mountain Chautauqua has always been to keep the thought of the spiritual at the very forefront.

Such men as President W. P. THIRKIELD, REV. HILAS H. MILLER, REV. ORA SAMUEL GRAY, REV. WILLIAM SPURGEON of England, DR. D. W. HOWELL, now Field Secretary of the Chautauqua Movement, will have charge of these morning hours. Most of them will have services extending through one week.

Hall of Philosophy Hour.

The 4 o'clock hour in the Hall of Philosophy, has for several seasons, been given to lectures of high literary value The experiment has more than justified the faith of the Superintendent of Instruction in the need and acceptability of such work Last year the Hall was crowded daily with thoughtful people who gave unstinted approval to the work. This year the service has been arranged to take the place of the afternoon lecture which was formerly a part of the regular Chautauqua program, but for the sake of giving a little time for rest and recreation, the transfer was made to the Hall of Philosophy and the hour placed a little later in the cool of the day.

This year at the Hall of Philosophy, special courses covering a week each, will be given by prominent and successful lecturers and entertainers.

MRS. PHILIP SNOWDEN, the greatest woman talker of Great Britain, if not of the world, will give a series of delightful lectures touching on English life, in society and in politics as well as great reforms which are sweeping the United Kingdoms.

MR. CAROLYN GEISEL of the Battle Creek Sanitarium, one of the most gifted and accepted speakers which the Chautauquas have had for many years, will give a series of health talks, which she does in matchless fashion which will be followed by Cooking School with demonstrations in charge of a competent assistant from the famous sanitarium, Miss RUTH RENNY.

A week of readings in which great literary creations will be faultlessly rendered will be in charge of MISS MARY BREVARD ROBERTS, who has achieved phenomenal success. The detailed program will outline her interesting topics.

C. L. S. C. Round Table.

This feature of the work will be given special prominence during our closing week under the direction of REV. D. W. HOWELL who has been identified with Chautauqua work and who has recently given up an important pastorate in New Haven, Conn., to become the Field Secretary of the Chautauqua Movement. The course of Chautauqua study will be fully explained. Literature bearing on the work will be freely distributed. Mr. Howell will give timely and interesting lectures. He is a great enthusiast whom the people will greatly enjoy.

Story Telling Hour.

In charge of MISS LOUISE WOODFORD, who has achieved distinction in her line of work. She has high ideals in her story telling to children of all ages and is a charming companion for boys and girls. Her stories are not read or recited but are delivered in a dramatic and intelligent manner which never fails to leave the intended impression upon the minds of the hearers. As a means of education, development of the imagination, conversational ability the art of story-telling is recognized as of great value. She stays for a week and the boys and girls will greatly enjoy the hour with her in the Hall of Philosophy.

On Saturday, when the week begins, there will be Bible stories, which will be followed on the successive days by Fairy Tales, Nature Stories, Myths, Folk-tales, Fables, closing on Saturday with miscellaneous stories.

School of Music.

JOHANN M. BLOSE, Mus. Doc., Director.

I. THE CHAUTAUQUA CHORUS. Dr. Blose, who so endeared himself with the Chautauquans last summer, needs no special introduction. His work was so manifestly excellent that all readily recognized his superior ability as a Teacher and Director. On the platform the last evening but one of 1907 season, Dr. Davidson said: "I doubt if there is another man who could hold the chorus together as has our good friend, Dr. Blose."

It is his purpose to add as much to the merits of last year's work as possible. He will have an immense collection of program music from masters and modern composers, from which to draw, that nothing may be lacking in material with which to interest the many who will come again for rest, pleasure and profit.

The Chautauqua Chorus will meet daily for rehearsals and instruction in every department of chorus work.

TAKE NOTICE—The chorus work is adsolutely free for all persons who will in return, for the instruction, attend public services and concerts in connection therewith.

2, THE PIANO DEPARTMENT—Emanuel Schmauk, Teacher and Solo Accompanist. Mr. Emanuel Schmauk, Pianist, Organist, professional Accompanist and Teacher, will have charge of the Piano Department of the Music School. As a pianist his style is broad and versatile. For fifteen successive years he has occupied the position of organist-choir master at Holy Trinity Lutheran Church, New York City, one of the prominent eastern churches. He is a distinguished teacher. More than four years of practical experience at the Virgil School of Music in New York has enabled him to become a thorough exponent of the Virgil Clavier Method. At the Summer School, a special course for teachers will be given to prepare them to teach the system intelligently. Application should be made as early as possible. Those desiring to study can address Mr. Schmauk, at Carnegie Hall, New York City, for further information and particulars.

3. THE VIOLIN DEPARTMENT—Mr. Karl M. Blose, Teacher and Concert Violinist. Mr. Blose is well known as an excellent soloist and director of assembly playing. He was pupil under such masters as Luigi Von Kunits, Concert master, Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra; Karl Korbach, Germany, and others for a period of seventeen consecutive years. He will teach the Sevoic system of Technique and Tone, Solo and Orchestral performances.

4. THE VOCAL DEPARTMENT, THEORY AND COMPOSITION.—Dr Blose will have charge of these departments. Persons who desire to give serious attention to the art of Breath Control, Tone Placing and Expression will have a rare opportunity for study and advancement. Musicians who are ambitious and are not afraid of mingling a little work with a summer vacation will be enabled to improve their talents by studying the following branches:

Elementary or advanced Harmony, Counterpoint, Composition or Orchestration.

5. Miss Ethel Leanore Blose, will again be accompanist for the chorus and other special gatherings.

6. FEES AND INCIDENTALS. Dr. Schmauk will have a number of Virgil Claviers on hand which can be rented at a very low rate for the month of August. Sheet Music will be furnished at teachers' rates, in all departments of the School of Music. By special arrangements with the management, these artists have, in order to initiate a new era and inducement in the study of music at The Mountain Chautauqua, cut their prices in half. The Course includes eight private lessons in any department and two class lessons, for which the very moderate fee of $12.00 is asked. Single lessons $2.00.

A word in finale—No teacher can afford not to advance in this day of running to and fro, of rapidly increasing of knowledge and skill in the teaching and studying of music.

COME—We will please and pay you—COME.

Seton Indians.

MISS NINA B. LAMKIN, Head Medicine Woman.

This feature of work which was so popular last year is to be continued and enlarged. The same popular teacher returns, read what she says:

The General Plan of Seton Indian Work for Boys and Girls.

Dear Boys and Girls:

The pleasure and the profits which we hope to bring to you during the Chautauqua Assembly will be many and varied. Every Boy and every Girl from 6 to 16 years old, are invited to join withus in forming an Indian Tribe. Our oragnization into a Seton Indian Tribe will mean election of War Chief, Herald and Council, from among the older boys and girls. A Totem pole will be erected, Indian names chosen, a war-whoop, etc. The work will be arranged for different ages: Those from 6 to 10 years old working together; those 10 to 13 together; those 13 to 16 together.

All that is best and beautiful in the woods about us will be enjoyed. We shall learn to govern ourselves, and to show the people who attend the Chautauqua the principles which we stand for.

The work in Physical Training will consist of: Freehand work, drills with small wands, etc., for the younger Indians; advanced work with hoops for girls, advanced wand work for the boys; Indian club swinging if clubs are available.

The games will be arrranged for the different ages, part for the boys and girls together, others for the boys and girls seperately. We shall play Touch Down, Fox and Hound, Captain Ball, Relay Touch Down, Follow Ball, and a score of others.

The Competitive Races will be for the boys and girls 10 to 16 years old. In these, the boys work together and the girls together. Certain races are arranged for the boys only, others for the girls only. These will include: Foot races of various kinds; hurdle races; skin the snake race; relay races and many others.

Special features will be:
An Indian Deer Hunt.
An Indian Feast.
A Bear Hunt.
Spotting the Rabbit, etc.

Some time will be given to naming the Birds, Trees, Flowers and Animals, and Legends concerning them. These will be some of our pleasures around the Camp Fire.

Coups (eagle feathers) will be gained by those who accomplish certain feats of courage, and medals will be awarded those winning in the competitive races.

All of our work will end with a Grand Pow-wow and Field Day program at the close of the Chautauqua work.

SOME NEW FEATURES.

New drills and games.
Indian Sun Dance.
Indian Corn ceremony.
Trailing Trips using twigs, stones, etc.
New ball games.

NINA LAMKIN,
Head Medicine Woman.

Summer Preparatory School.

Arrangements have been made with Principal Lucius E. Hawley, A. M., of Mr. Hawley's Preparatory School, Ben Avon (Pittsburgh), Pa., with view of establishing at the Park a Summer School both for regular class-room work and for private tutoring, in which all school work accomplished will be made to count directly towards the admission requirements at any college or technical school.

Mr. Hawley will be at the Park early in July, and until then may be addressed at Ben Avon, Pa.

School of Amateur Photography.

A. A. LINE.

The Twenty-fifth Annual Session of Summer School of Amateur Photography will open August 4th and close September 10th.

Mountain Lake Park The Beautiful is one of Nature's own settings on the top of the great Allegheny Mountains. Here the Amateur Photographer may select from the charming scenery the records for a Summer Album.

Photography in its various branches are taught, including Landscape and Portrait Photography, retouching the negative, printing and finishing the pictures, making lantern slides and transparencies.

French Department.

MADEMOISELLE MURINGER, Instructress.

In charge of French Department, Young Woman's Christian Association, Philadelphia, Pa.

The basis as well as the most interesting mode of teaching French, is the natural method. For beginners I use Chardenal's First French Course of the year 1886, merely as a basis, for I begin at once after the third lesson to speak French in classes and in connection with the grammar conversation, wise sayings, proverbs, anecdotes, etc., are given so as to familiarize the pupil's ear to the sound of the French speaking voice.

For the advanced class, Keetel's Analytical and Practical French Grammar is used with conversation, reading, thorough drilling and written and oral exercises, composition games, to learn the familiar names of flowers, etc.

A children's French class will also be organized, where they will be taught: salutations, parts of the body, numbers, rhymes, jingles and little points of etiquette for little folks, etc.

Art Department.

The Art Department will be in charge of Miss White and her asistant, Miss Schreiner. Previous to the opening of the Chautauqua season, Miss White will spend some time in New York city and Philadelphia for the purpose of selecting the newest shapes in China, and to obtain the latest effects and methods of applying designs especially adapted to porcelain, both in the conventional and semi-conventional decoration.

Decorated China will be on exhibition and for sale in Miss White's studio daily, in Room No. 1, Assembly Hall.

Art material and China for decorating on sale. China fired in the "Revelation Kiln in Studio.

Chautauqua Platform

Brief Mention of the Rare Attractions Secured.

LECTURERS.

DR. RUSSELL H. CONWELL, unquestionably the best known and most popular lecturer in America. Nothing further need be said. It is a joy to have him again.

REV. GEO. R. STUART, long associated with Rev. Sam P. Jones in his great work and his legitimate successor. Is as full of humor as the great evangelist with whom he labored. No man is in such demand for Chautauqua work as is Geo. Stuart. He is without a peer in his line.

FREDERICK WARDE, the great American actor now equally great on the platform. In dramatic power we hav never had his equal at Mountain Lake The people will be fascinated with his faultless work.

JAHU D'WITT MILLER

JAHU DEWITT MILLER, an old friend with whom we could not do without. He has been with us eighteen years out of twenty and draws as large an audience as any man who comes to us.

DR. ROBERT S. MACARTHUR, one of the princes of the platform. Forceful, eloquent, dramatic.

DR. RICHARD WILKINSON, one of the most brilliant Southern orators, who gives the greatest lecture on "Robert E. Lee" which the country has heard.

DR. JOHN WESLEY HILL, of Metropolitan Temple, New York, a brilliant orator.

REV. A. WIRT LOWTHER, who has a record for more return calls for lectures than any other man on the platform, which speaks volumes for his efficiency.

REV. H. C. MILLINGTON, a bright and successful pastor, who has won his way on the lecture platform.

PROF. CHAS. H. TYNDALL, with his great scientific lecture, with experiments on "Radium," accompanied by marvelous experiments. One of the great successes of the platform.

PRESIDENT CARL G. DONEY, of the West Virgi Wesleyan University, a very bright and attractive lectur who is doing large educational work in West Virginia to whom we will give a glad welcome.

HARRY SPILLMAN RIGGS, one of the humorous lecturers of the platform. He was with us years ago and returns because he has been asked for by many. It will be a treat again to hear him in that charming little pastoral "Swinging in the Grape-vine Swing."

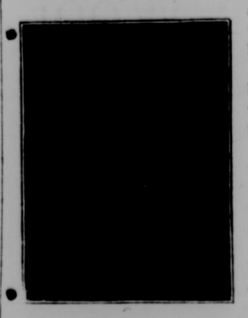
ORA SAMUEL GRAY, a surpassing orator who always satisfies.

President W. P. THIRKIELD, of Howard University, a strong and forceful man.

REV. J. M. M. GRAY, a young man of unusual talent, certain to please.

PROF. HODELL, of Woman's College, Baltimore, in attractive literary studies.

PROF. N. J. CORY, musical lecture interpreted by stereopticon views and a mammoth and specially constructed Victor Talking Machine. He was the success of the year at Chatauqua, N. Y. Cory is without his equal in his special line.



N. J. CORY

REV. R. G. SMITH, a brilliant preacher and lecturer, who is greatly stirring up things in the west.

DR. HENRY R. ROSE, in two brilliant stereopticon lectures of unusual interest, "Parsifal," and the "Greatest of All Americans."

ALEX. CORKEY, with a blend of philosophy and wit characteristic of his race.

PROF. J. E. WOODLAND, a friend of some years back who returns and who is, without any question, the greatest of scientific lecturers, crowding the platform with expensive apparatus and performing hundreds of brilliant and attractive experiments.

R. E. SMITH

MRS. PHILIP SNOWDEN, the most gifted woman of England.

DR. CAROLYN GEISEL, in a series of intensely instructive talks on Health.

REV. D. W. HOWELL, the efficient and successful Field Secretary of the C. L. S. C.

DR. W. L. DAVIDSON, has for twenty years made the program and conducted the platform of the Mountain Chautauqua, will again have complete charge.

READERS

MISS RUTH ARNETT, a brillionl and attra ctive reader.

MISS BERNICE COSTELLO

LA VERNE OGDEN, an inimitable story teller.

LADRU M. LAYTON, an impersonator and humorist who charmingly presents full plays.

HARRY RAYMOND PIERCE and WIFE in clever comedy sketches in costume. A most delightful pair.

H. U. ENGLE, who cleverly presents some interesting sketches.

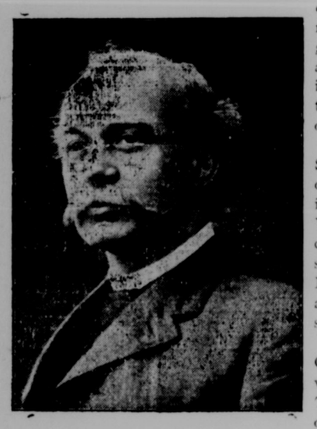
MISS BERNICE COSTELLO in "Koto San," a monologue in which Miss Costello reveals herself to be the most successful Japanese impersonator in this country. She is winning laurels everywhere.

MISS MINNIE MARSHALL: She stands unquestionably among the great lady readers of the country.

MUSIC.

STEVENS' FAMOUS BAND will give two concerts daily and participate in the Excursion day festivities.

JOHANN BLOSE, MUS. D., will have charge of the chorus. He is a director of note and gave most faithful and acceptable service last year and is returned at the request of all who sing.



JOHANN BLOSE

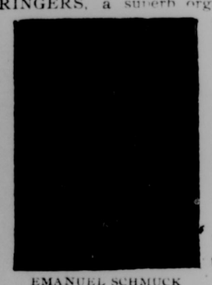
MR. EMANUEL SCHMUCK, a famous organist and musical director of New York, will be the accompanist. He is also a superb cellist and MRS. SCHMUCK is a delightful contralto singer.

SYLVAN GLEE CLUB, a group of ten well known singers. They have been long organized and have done successful work at a number of Chautauquas. They are bright and sunshiny and the coming of such a group of men to the platform will make things exceedingly lively.

WEBER MALE QUARTETTE of Boston, unquestionably best in the United States.

THE FAMOUS LOTUS GLEE CLUB a crack musical organization of New York.

OTTERBEIN MALE QUARTETTE AND HAND BELL RINGERS, a superb organization which is now giving the best of satisfaction. They give a varied and beautiful program.



EMANUEL SCHMUCK

MISS RITA RICH, a mezzo-soprano giving folk-songs in costume.

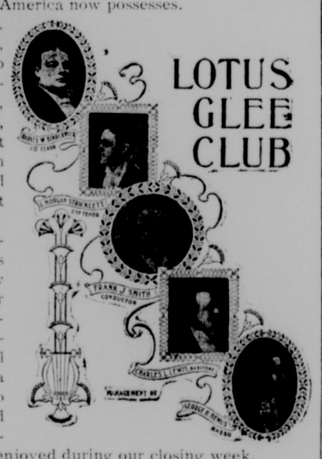
MRS. ZOE PEARL PARK, a great favorite of last year, who returns because her singing was wonderfully appreciated.

MISS GRACE B. DYE, a brilliant young soprano who has a future before her.

MR. JOHN CHESHIRE, the most famous harpist America now possesses.

MRS. EMMA P. DAWDY-SESSOMS, a marvelous contralto

RUBY KATHERINE HARKNESS, a charming soprano, who has had the best of training on both sides of the sea and has made a great name for herself.



CLIFFORD WILEY, for some years the sensation of New York and last year the sensation of London and Paris. Possibly without an equal in this country as a barytone. He is no stranger to us and will be gladly welcomed and greatly enjoyed during our closing week.

THE DAILEY QUARTETTE of mixed voices, a remarkable family. They are immensely popular and have won great name.

MISS HELEN DODGE, a phenomenal young violinist.

ENTERTAINMENTS AND NOVELTIES.

AMERICAN VITAGRAPH, the best moving picture machine ever made. As all know, DR. DAVIDSON selects personally his films from the output of the largest factory in the world. Everything is new and fresh. It will be seen many nights. Nothing that has ever been used before.

YOUNA THE JUGGLER in marvelous and skillful manipulations. This is the acme of perfection. Nothing finer was ever seen. Stage setting is beautiful.

PROF. STRUCK THE FAMOUS MAGICAIN, presenting finest evening of this character that is possible. An evening of deception is greatly appreciated and furnishes relaxation in the midst of the heavier items of the program.

ROSINI THE FAMOUS JUGGLER, who has been so popular at Mountain Lake Park in other years and who is constantly increasing the efficiency of his work, will also be enjoyed for one of the evenings of the Chautauqua.

THE REPUBLICAN

BENJ. H. SINCELL, EDITOR.

THURSDAY, JULY 2, 1908.

FOR PRESIDENT,

WILLIAM H. TAFT,

OF OHIO.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT,

JAMES S. SHERMAN,

OF NEW YORK,

FOR CONGRESS,

GEORGE A. PEARRE,

OF ALLEGANY COUNTY.

FOR A SAFE AND SANE FOURTH!

The whole country has been aroused in recent years over the question of the use of dangerous explosives on the Fourth of July, and among thoughtful persons there is a demand for the stopping of the practice. While no very serious results have been experienced in the immediate vicinity of Oakland as a result of the usually loud and at times boisterous celebration of the Nation's birthday, it is not within the ken of any one to say when a fatal accident may take place.

As a further argument for enforcement of the law against the use of dangerons explosives we point to the terrible effects which have been experienced in other parts of the country. Two years ago, on the Fourth of July, one hundred and sixty persons were killed and over five thousand maimed. Of these, probably seventy-five died of tetanus or lock-jaw, thirty-eight were killed by gunshot wounds, fourteen by stray bullets, eighteen, mostly very small children, were burned to death, eighteen were killed by the explosion of powder, dynamite and torpedoes, three by giant firecrackers, and three by cannon. Among the injured, twenty-two became totally blind, seventy-two lost one eye, fifty-six lost arms or legs or hands.

Speaking on this subject recently in an editorial headed, "Must the Slaughter Go On," an exchange said:

"The Fourth of July outbreak has never been creditable to American common sense and good taste. Its perpetuation is an arraignment of our care for human life. We are calmly proceeding to make a holocaust of life because we lack the energy to break a traditionwhich fastened itself upon us decades ago. A bad habit grows more heinous as time passes on; and vice in old age is much more hideous than vice in youth. When we were a younger people and lacked the register of life and death which we now keep, there was some excuse for the inferno which is established in the country every Fourth of July. But the folly of our youth ought to be left behind; there are other and better ways of teaching American boys to remember the declaration of Independence and to love their country than by putting firearms and deadly explosives in their hands. The day might be made to count in a hundred beautiful and patriotic ways without the aid of surgeons and and undertakers and hundreds of desolate or anxious homes. In every community picturesque, interesting, and enjoyable celebrations might be arranged, giving the largest share to the children. Here is a field for community action, not only by civic organizations, but by women's clubs, which can find great opportunities of dealing with historical events in a really significent and beautiful way. Shall we go on with the slaughter of the children?"

THE COLONEL AT THE BAT.

Our great and good friend, Col. Henry Watterson (to whom be peace and joy everlasting!) fills a long column in his excellent periodical, the Louisville Courier-Journal, with a treatise upon the history, mystery, morals, heft, bulk, vistage, prospects and policies of Mr. Taft.

He begins his treatise with the following singular remark:

"Upon a platform of imposture, largely constructed out of timbers stolen, from Mr. Bryan's backyard, the Republicans party has set a man of straw."

Up to the hour of going to press we have read this masterly document no less than 14 times, and with each perusal our admiration for it has grown. It is brilliant with hard and unaccustomed words, and all of them are correctly spelled. Its sentences proceed with the seductive sinuosity of a stream of molasses; it glows and glitters with recondite and exotic metonymies, synecdoches, prospopœias and automomasias; it is in both prose and verse, and has strophes, tropes, arpeggios and a cadenza. It quotes poets, prophets, publicists and philosophers—the Bible, the Rig-Veda, the State Papers of Thomas Jefferson, the Book of White and Black Magic and Necromancy and the famous On Styriki Konunga Ok Hoefpinga of the Swedes. It is, in a word, a lasting proof that scholarship is no last art, and that literature did not die with Gogler. But there is one thing that it sadly lacks, and that thing we venture to opine, is a connected or understandable thesis, theorem or idea. The Colonel speaks and his words ravish the ear, bnt we cannot quite make out the drift of his argumunt.

With one hand he writes that Mr. Taft is a lofty and admirable character, and with the other he demands that every honest American vote for Mr. Bryan. In one paragraph he pens an eloquent tribute to Mr. Roosevelt, and in the next he pleads for a war to the death upon all thing Rooseveltian and Teddiferous. At the beginning of a strophe he lays down the preamble that all of Mr. Taft's best theories of government have been filched from the backyard of Mr. Bryan, and at the end of the same strophe he denounces these sublimities as rubbish. He blows hot, cold and lukewarm. He kisses, and yet he smites. He cajoles, and yet he wallops.

We confess that the Colonel's argument gives us pause and leaves us at sea. Is he pleading for Mr. Taft or for Mr. Bryan? Is he in favor of either or both, or against both or either? Is he serious when he praises Bryan and sarcastic when he praises Taft, or serious when he praises Taft and sarcastic when he praises Bryan? If he is a Bryanite, why does he brand as "impostures" the doctrines that Mr. Taft has "stolen" from the Peerless One? And if he is agin' Mr. Bryan, why does he anathematize "the wild beasts of pultocracy" and wax so peevish over "prosperity and a mess of pottage," "the old flag and an appropration," "Satan and his Christian Endeavor Society" and, the "old he-goat, High-Finance Aldrich"?

We trust that Colonel Watterson will issue a revised and dephlogisticated version of his pronunciamento, in words of one syllable, for the instruction of the great masses of the plain people, of whom we are one. We have searched it carefully, from end to end; we have read and re-read it; we haye pondered, meditated, cogitated and digested it—and still it puzzles and maddens us. In its whole vast chain of syllogisms, propositions and soaring syntax—in all its great display of remarks, premises, whereas and therefor-be-it-resolveds—we discern but one clear statement, and that is a brief and incidental reference to the Hayes-Tilden controversy, upon which Colonel Watterson has thought deeply and indignantly, day in and day out, weekdays and Sundays, for the past 30 years.

Can it be that the mint-juleps of Louisville have lost their old virtue? Do they no longer lubricate the cogs and crossheads of the human brain, as was their wont in other and happier days? Do they no longer cool, fertilize and stimulate the human intellect and make it work with mathematical precision? Or is the weather so warm in Old Kaintuck that even the most gigantic minds are wilting? We wonder!

Incidentally, we are curious to know how Mr. Bryan will accept Colonel Watterson's declaration that the gems of statecraft in his backyard are "impostures."

BRYAN IN MARYLAND.

The leaders of the Democratic party in Maryland, who have managed by trick ballots and by judicious distributions of patronage to keep in power, look with sorrow upon their party in the national arena, where it is leaderless and issueless from their standpoint. Of course, Mr. Bryan is the leader of a majority, but he is not the leader of a majority of Democrats of Maryland.

In vain did the late Senator Gorman, the late L. Victor Baughman, the late William Pinkney Whyte, Senator Rayner and other Maryland Democrats who were conspicuous and influential in the national councils of their party labor to inject new life and new issues in the organization, which has rendered valuable services to the nation in the past, but after twelve years, beginning in 1896, the Democratic party stands where it was placed by Bryan and other free-silver fanatics of the West.

Bryan will be nominated for president by the Democratic convention which will meet in Denver next week. Of that there is no doubt. There was some doubt a month or more ago, when efforts were in evidence in New York that there would be furnished opposition and organization against the twice candidate for presideut. Influential financiers allied with the Democratic party set the wheels agoing and then they stopped. They "laid down," just as Republican financiers laid down four years ago after lending encouragement to the movement by New York Democratic financiers to nominate Judge Parker for President, and after holding out promises of strong financial aid.

The nomination of Mr. Bryan may, therefore, be accepted as a foregone conclusion. He will be the paramount issue, the platform of his party in the campaign. What he stands for the party must stand for, whether it wants to or not. Unfortunately for Eastern Democrats, and especially Maryland Democrats, Mr. Bryan stands for things unpalatable to them. As an individual issue Mr. Bryan is not a valuable asset.

A horse that has the reputation of kicking, balking and doing other things is not a marketable animal at an attractive price. Mr. Bryan has been twice defeated. He is today the best advertised man in the United States—advertised as standing for things which the American people do not want.

The Democratic party, therefore, will be sadly handicapped by his candidacy. He cannot expect to win all or even a greater portion of the radical vote, for that vote will be divided, as it was not divided in 1896 and again in 1900, when Mr. Bryan was a candidate. He got the bulk of it at the elections of those years. Maryland's vote for Bryan this time will be less than it ever was.

TAFT'S VIEW OF PRESIDENCY.

Writes for Collier's Weekly His Conception of the High Position.

Secretary William H. Taft has written the following article on his "Conception of the Presidency" for the currentissue of Collier's Weekly:

"In the four years that I have been a member of the cabinet I haye become familiar enough with the responsibilities and burdens of the presidency to know that no man can afford unduly to seek that great office.

"If he is attracted by honor and power alone, without the hope of being useful he is unworthy of the honor and unfit for the use of the power. He must prefer for the sake of his own peace of mind never to be President to being a poor President. Confident that the platform on which he stands is for the best interests of the nation, he is untrue to himself and his supporters if he does not fight valiantly for election after he accepts the leadership, but of course he must draw the line at any compact which will not leave him free of promise and of the control of any faction.

"The President's duties clearly outlined by the constitution have grown broader in their interpretation with the growth of the country. He should be in the prime of years, health and vigor. The capacity for hard work is a better equipment than genius in mastering the essentials of all the departments of the goyernment and undergoing the strain of countless interviews.

"He should look not only to those in office, but to those out of office, in all branches of private activity for information and opinion in order that he may arrive at the truth when he is surrounded by the conflict of interests which come to him with the fair words of the special pleader.

"In many senses, though, the most sought after, he is the loneliest man in the United States. Elected directly by the people their representation head, from them in the sober thought of the majority, he will get his best counsel. Though indifference or pre-occupation with private affairs may keep them from attending primaries or scanning closely the other candidate or measures, they can center on the President as their instrument, the expression of their wishes.

"He should be always near the people in thought and as near them in person as his position will permit. In common with the people, he is human, and he must ask their charity for his mistake. When they have ceased to believe in his sincerity and uprightness of purpose, his is a cheerless task; once convinced that he has divined and is carrying out their purpose, neither elated by an outburst of applause nor diverted by any outburst of censure, he must proceed unwaveringly, always by lawful methods, to the accomplishment of the popular will.

"From Washington he may learn nobility, fortitude and righteousness. Lincoln's life and speeches must be his source of inspiration when he is misunderstood and he has to say to himself 'patience and cheer.'

"It is easier since we had Lincoln than it was before to be a good President. He set a standard.

"It remained for Roosevelt to prove how the people will respond to a strong and true leadership when the hour is on for great reforms. The policies which he inaugurated must be continued and developed. They are right and they are the policies of the people. For that reason his successor may well disregard any charge of lack of originality if he does not make an entirely new program of his own.

"A President at this time has work before him clearly defined. The enforcement of the law equally against high and low, the powerful and the weak should be his first thought. The danger to our country from laxity of favoritism in this is the greatest one we have to face.

"The conserration of our national resources and their development for the use of all along the lines of equal opportunity, too, must command his immediate attention. It should be his aim to give high tone to his administration as President Roosevelt has by surrounding himself with men of prominence, enthusiasm in public interest and of the cleanest and most effective methods."

Old Typewriter Ribbons.

Old and worn typewriter ribbons can be used to a good advantage by making writing ink from them. Remove the ribbon from the spool and place it in a tumbler three-quarters full of water and let soak for twenty-four hours. Remove the ribbon and pour the fluid into a bottle. This ink will be as good any indelible ink that may bepurchased —Popular Mechanics.

TRAINING SCHOOL WORK.

Combined Normals of the County In a Three Weeks' Session Here.

[REPORTED BY MISS M. O'DONNELL.]

THURSDAY MORNING.

School called to order at 9 o'clock by U. G. Palmer; Responsive Reading led by Mr. George Rodeheaver; Singing, "Glad Summer," by school; roll call; Music by Dr. Gibson; Language was next presented by Miss Phoenix, in which a number of teachers took part in the discussion: an able address was next given by C. M. Miller of Swanton, which was greatly enjoyed by all.

RECESS.

Reading, by Miss Phoenix; Section Work by Dr. Gibson and U. G. Palmer.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

School opened at 1.30; roll call; Section Work was again taken up by Dr. Gibson and U. G. Palmer; Number Work by Miss Phoenix.

RECESS.

Chorus Class Work, by Dr. Gibson, in which arrangements were made for the class to render a thirty minute song service at the M. E. church at 7 p. m.

FRIDAY MORNING.

School opened at 9 o'clock; Singing of "It Came Upon the Midnight Clear," and "Sunset Peace," by the school; roll call; an announcement of the death of Grover Cleveland, ex-President of the United States, by Prof. Palmer, who also gave a reading pertaining to Mr. Cleveland's career; Mr. Jasper Frantz then rendered in an able manner the article contained in the recent issue of THE REPUBLICAN concerning our ex-President's life and death; following this Prof. J. C. Beahm made an excellent brief address pertaining to the presentation of a book, "The Life of Meshach Browning," to each of our worthy Instructors, Miss Phoenix and Dr. Gibson, who haye come here from their respective work in Oswego, N. Y., and Baltimore, Md. These books were presented by a number of the students to show only a small part of their appreciation of the work given by these two worthy instructors. Responses were heartily given by Miss Phoenix and Dr. Gibson; Music, by Dr. Gibson.

RECREATION.

An able address was then delivered by Rev. Stromyer, who is in attendance at the District Conference; Number Work and Language by Miss Phoenix.

RECESS.

Section Work, by Dr. Gibson and Prof U. G. Palmer.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON.

Session opened at 1.30 with the roll call; Section Work was again pursued by Dr. Gibson and Prof. U. G. Palmer, the subject of Language Work and Mental Arithmetic being considered.

RECREATION.

Phonics, given by Miss Phoenix, was very interesting; Physical Culture.

RECESS.

Chorus Class Work, by Dr. Gibson.

MONDAY MORNING.

The Garrett County Teachers' Annual Institute, which follows the Summer and Training School, as was announced last week, opened at 9 o'clock, with the hymn "Zion;" after roll call announcements were made by Supt. Browning, who had just returned from the meeting of the State Teachers' Association, which was held at Ocean City. Among his announcements was one which caused much applause—the probability of the Association meeting at Mountain Lake Park next summer.

An address was made by Supt. Davis, of Mountain Lake Park, which was followed by a drill in music by Dr. Gibson; the subject of Reading was taken up by Miss Phoenix, after which she handled Number Work in a very interesting manner; the work was then divided into sections and instructed by Profs. Gibson and Palmer, their subjects being Literature and Mental Arithmetic.

MONDAY AFTERNOON.

Roll call was followed by Literature and Mental Arithmetic; the subject of Primary Language was then taken up in a very interesting manner by Miss Phoenix; this was followed by a very interesting and instructive drill in Physical Culture by Miss Phoenix; Dr. Gibson gave his usual forty-five minutes in Chorus Class Work, in which several of the Oakland residents took an active part.

Monday evening was devoted to a recital at the M. E. church by Miss Phoenix. Her theme was "Love," as found in "The Story of the Wise Man" by Henry Van Dyke, and "Santa Claus' Partner," by Thomas Nelson Page.

Miss Phoenix's rendition of these beautiful gems of literature was perfect, and her voice and manner and interpretation of the authors showed the wide culture she has gained from years of study at Oberlin, Boston and elsewhere. The church was filled by an appreciative audience.

TUESDAY MORNING.

School opened at 9 o'clock with roll call, followed by singing "Our Country's Flag," after which Supt. Browning made several announcements. The subject of School Discipline was then taken up and discussed in a very able manner by Miss Phoenix, Supt. Browning, Profs. Gibson, Loraditch, Beahm and others. This was a most interesting period and much enjoyed by all present.

RECESS.

After intermission the work was divided into sections, Profs. Gibson and Palmer taking up the work of Literature and Arithmetic.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON.

Roll call: Section Work, Literature and Arithmetic by Profs. Gibson and Palmer, the lesson in Literature was taken from Longfellow's beautiful poem "Evangeline." It was made more interesting by a talk from Mr. Robert Gordon, of Cumberland, who told many interesting things concerning the "Evangeline Country." Phonetic Reading was next taken up by Miss Phoenix, followed by a drill in Physical Culture; Chorus Class Work by Prof Gibson, in which many visitors took part.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

Yesterday evening the school in a body, led by Principal Palmer and Superintendent Browning, marched from the school building to Second street fronting THE REPUBLICAN office, where with the scholars, more than a thousand people had gathered. Several patriotic songs were sung, led by Prof. Gibson, and then the assembled crowd was addressed by Prof. Armstrong, of the West Virginia University, who made a strong plea for the public school teacher. On the part of the city he was responded to by Mr. Scott T. Jones, whose address was inspiring and full of words of cheer and good fellowship.

Our readers should keep their weather eye open for fakirs and swindlers, they are numerous and work every scheme catch people. The latest swindle, worked by a sharper in one of the cities recently is an apt illustration of the ability of these dead beat fakirs to catch not only the ignorant but all others who are not constantly on their guard. This swindler walked into a jewelry store and selecting a $125 watch left a check for $600 drawn on an out-of-town bank, with instructions that the watch be regulated and that he would come after it and his change a week later. On returning he was informed that his check was no good. "Well, that is strange," he said, "it's the second time the bank has done that thing on me. But here's the money for your watch," and he counted out $125 in currency and started for the door. "Oh, yes," he said, turning around, "you'd better give me that check." It was willingly handed over to him. On the back was the jeweler's endorsement. With this the man went into a bank, got it cashed and was never heard of afterwards.

DROWNED IN THE FAR WEST.

Arthur Fulk, Recently of Crellin, Has Watery Grave in Oregon.

Arthur Fulk, aged twenty-eight years, unmarried, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Fulk, of Crellin, was drowned in the Umpqua river, in Douglas county, Oregon, on June 20th, about seven o'clock, and up to the latest advices to his parents at Crellin convey the information that his body has not yet been recovered, the opinion being that it was washed beneath a log and was held there.

Young Fulk, in company with his brother and William Feather, left Crellin about six weeks ago for the northwest, their objective point being Montana, but later they went to Oregon, where they were given employment on the log drive down the Umpqua river by Mr. H. J. Freer, of the Kendall Lumber Company, whose mill in the northwest is managed by him. On the way down the stream, which is a rapid one, one of the logs became unmanageable and young Fulk went out to it over the floating timber, when he was seen by his companions to miss his footing and sink, since which time nothing has been seen of his body, although more than a hundred men have been engaged in dragging the river in an effort to locate it.

The point where the young man was drowned is about twelve miles east of Roseburg, the seat of the Kendall mill, and some twenty miles from the mouth of the Umpqua, where it empties into the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. Stephen G. Ashby went to Bond, this county Monday morning, where he will will remain a month in the employ of Messrs. DeBois & Bond Bros., taking the place of Mr. N. U. Bond as superintedent of the mill while that gentleman is on a business trip to Oregon in company with Mr. John E. DuBois, where they own large landed interests.

Miss Helen Jordan and Miss Helen Margaret Morse, of Philadelphia, will arrive for a visit in Garrett county next Monday. Both young ladies reside on N. 41st street, the fashionable sections of West Philadelphia, and are popular in the younger set. This will be Miss Jordan's first visit to the top of the Alleghanies. They will visit Mrs. G. W. Haulenbeek at "Uplands."

George W. Wilson, Burton Wilson, Dr. M. S. Wilson, Simes Cosner and Charles H. Shaffer spent four days of the week beginning June 21st fishing and camping on Shaver's Fork of the Cheat. They report an excellent time having caught about 200 trout, many of large size. Mr. Shaffer passed through Oakland yesterday on his return to Washington to resume his duties in the Patent Office, where he is an assistant examiner.

Our highly esteemed friend Chas. H. Bill, of Grantsville, Md., was a business visitor in Salisbury, Monday. He came over to confer with some of our carpenters, relative to erecting several houses in Grantsville in the near future. He is enthusiastic for the extension of the P. & M. trolley line to Frostburg, Md., via Grantsville, and thinks the people out that way would give free right of way and help to build the road besides. We earnestly hope it may come to pass. —Elk Lick Star.

A barn owned by Uriah Stanton, near Grantsville, Md., was burned to the ground, Tuesday night. The building stood near the Grantsville railroad station and Eli Stanton's mill and in it was a hay-baling machine owned by Jacob Folk, and worth about $400, which also went up in smoke, together with other contents owned by Mr. Stanton. The total loss will probably foot up to $2,500. There was some insurance on the barn, but none on Mr. Folk's hay-baler. The fire is believed to be due to fishermen sleeping in the barn at times, or to an incendiary.—Elk Lick Star.

Rev. J. H. Fitzwater, D. D., secretary of the Woman's Home Missionary and Church Extension Society of the M. E. church, was in Oakland several days last and this week, being a guest while here of Dr. and Mrs. R. B. Ward. On Sunday morning Dr. Fitzwater preached in the M. E. church to a large and appreciative audience. He is a native of Garrett county, having been born and reared here. Mr. William White, one of the pioneers of the Oakland community, is his uncle. On Monday Dr. Fitzwater went down to North Glade country near Swanton to visit relatives.

Sheriff Austin Brown returned to Oakland Sunday night after an absence of nearly a week, bringing with him a prisoner named Howdershell, indicted more than a year age for having stolen chickens and assaulting Sheriff Lee, who attempted to arrest him. Howdershell was located in one of the Elkins hospitals several weeks ago where he was being treated for an injury to his foot, but the authorities of the hospital would not allow him to leave until his wounds were healed. Sheriff Brown, before he could bring his prisoner here, was compelled to go to Charleston to get a requisition from Governor Dawson, which was delivered to him Saturday night, the officer leaving Charleston Sunday morning and arriving here from Elkins Sunday night.

A LARGE BARN BURNED.

Structure on Farm of Cornelius Bowser Near Bittinger, Destroyed.

Last Wednesday afternoon at five o'clock, lightning struck the barn of Mr. Cornelius Bowser, one of Bittinger district's most progressive farmers, set it on fire and completely destroyed it. The building was a comparatively new structure, being 45x75 feet, well built and exceptionally well planned.

In addition to the destruction of the barn a calf, threshing machine, wind mill, harness, eight tons of hay and about sixty bushels of grain, which were in the barn, were also destroyed.

Mr. Bowser carried insurance to the amount of $800 on the building and contents. His loss, in excess of the insurance, will amount to several hundred dollars.

ONE MORE STAR FOR OLD GLORY

Oklahoma's, Added on July 4, Is the Forty-sixth In Old Glory.

THE GRAND OLD FLAG

A Fourth of July Sketch by John Wilbur Witherspoon.
Copyright, 1908, by C. N. Lurie

UNDER the provisions of an old act of congress Oklahoma's star, the forty-sixth, will be added to the American flag this Fourth of July, but on New Year's day some school children in Philadelphia anticipated the official addition of the new star in a very pretty ceremony, as shown by the accompanying illustration. Though Oklahoma was admitted to statehood by the president's proclamation of Nov. 16, 1907, under a law passed in 1818 the new star could not be added until the Fourth of July following. This law has applied to all states added since the year mentioned.

The little old house in which the first "star spangled banner" was made under direction of General Washington and a committee of congress stands at 239 Arch street, Philadelphia. It was there that the little girls and boys celebrated the advent of 1908 by hoisting a flag containing forty-six stars. Thirteen girls clad in colonial costumes of white represented the original states, while a boy dressed up as Uncle Sam and another uniformed like a colonel of the Continental army assisted in the ceremony.

Mrs. Betsy Ross, a pretty widow barely twenty-five years old, an artistic needle worker, made the first official flag in that old house. Just before the flag raising on New Year's day the children participating therein assembled in the old house and enacted a tableau representing the making of the original flag. One little girl skilled in needlework took her seat in a chair placed on the very boards where Betsy Ross' chair stood before the quaint old fireplace.

Around her were the same quaint whitewashed walls that surrounded Betsy Ross in 1777. In her lap she held an American flag with the blue field bare of stars. One by one the thirteen original states, each represented by a little girl, entered the room and presented to the seamstress, little Miss Weisgerber, a star which the girl gravely sewed in place on the blue field.

It is interesting to know that the "flag house" was recently purchased by the American Flag Home and Betsy Ross Memorial association and presented to the city of Philadelphia to be forever preserved as a shrine of American patriotism—the birthplace of the most beautiful national banner that floats in the air, the flag that represents the greatest measure of human liberty ever enjoyed by any people under the stars of heaven.

This old house has had a curious history. The charming Widow Ross conducted a flagmaking establishment therein for a number of years, and her descendants continued the business until the year 1857. Then the house passed into the hands of an old sea captain, who never came around to collect the rent from the Mund family, who occupied it. Perhaps the old salt perished at sea. Anyhow, he disappeared altogether. The Munds lived there more than forty years. They paid taxes on the house instead of rent. Finally, under the law, possession became ownership, and the Memorial association bought the famous house from Charles P. Mund. The money for the purchase was contributed by more than a million persons, many of them school children. The price was $25,100, and most of the money consisted of dimes.

An interesting innovation in American political life which accompanies the admission of Oklahoma to statehood is the conferring of full citizenship upon the Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes—Cherokees, Creeks, Choctaws, Chickasaws and Seminoles. These Indians now may vote, run for township constable or president of the United States and exercise any other function of citizenship which is open to a citizen of any state.

Each of these Indians, man, woman and child, is the owner of a considerable acreage of land in the Indian Territory part of Oklahoma. The lands were allotted to them as tribal citizens.

The War of the Chesapeake.

The war of 1812 sometimes is called the war of the Chesapeake. Several years before war was declared she was on a practice cruise across the Atlantic. She was challenged by a British ship of war and ordered to give up four men who had deserted from the British navy. Captain Barron, her commander, refused. The British vessel opened fire, killing and wounding a number of Americans. After an ineffectual defense the Chesapeake struck her colors to the Briton and delivered up the men wanted. Three of these were American citizens who had been impressed into the British service. It was such infamous acts as these on the part of Great Britain that caused the war of 1812.

Charles Carroll of Carrollton.

When Charles Carroll of Maryland was about to sign the Declaration of Independence he was warned that he was jeopardizing his immense property, and some one else said:

"Oh, King George will never hang Carroll. There are too many of them. His majesty can't identify him."

"True," said Carroll and promptly wrote after his name "of Carrollton."

The Absentminded Man.

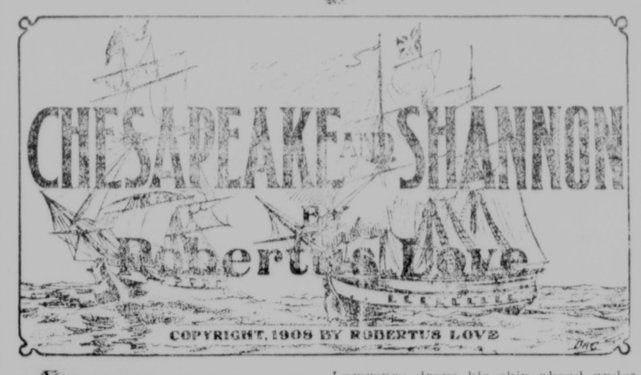
"What day does the Fourth of July come on this year?" asked the absentminded man.

"On Saturday."

"Yes, but what day of the month?"

CHESAPEAKE AND SHANNON

By Robertus Love



JAMES LAWRENCE.

"DON'T give up the ship!"

Every American who has attended a public school or read the merest skeleton of American history is aware that those heroic words were uttered by Captain James Lawrence, commander of the Chesapeake, as he was carried below to die after receiving a mortal wound in his engagement with the British frigate Shannon.

Renewed interest in the Chesapeake-Shannon fight was aroused not long ago when the captured battleflag of the American frigate was pulled out of oblivion by the auctioneer's arm and sold to William Waldorf Astor, who presented the old flag to the British Royal United Service museum.

Early in the year 1813 Master Commandant James Lawrence of the sloop Hornet had engaged and sunk the sloop Peacock of the enemy. Lawrence was in his thirty-second year, with a record of sixteen years in the navy and only six weeks' leave of absence. He was brave and able and intensely patriotic. After his return from the Hornet victory he was promoted to a captaincy and was assigned to command the frigate Chesapeake, then lying in Boston harbor for repairs. Lawrence disliked this assignment and wrote several letters to the secretary of the navy protesting against it, for the Chesapeake was considered an unlucky craft as well as a dishonored one.

Captain Philip B. V. Broke, a most gallant British officer, had commanded the Shannon for nearly seven years. Most of his officers and men had been aboard with him through the greater part of that period. He had brought his ship to a tiptop condition for effective service and had drilled his seamen and gunners so that they were as fine and fit as any men who ever trod deck timbers. On the other hand, Captain Lawrence scarcely knew one of his own seamen by sight. A number of them were foreigners, and others were American riffraff of humanity.

Captain Broke had been blockading Boston harbor with the Shannon and other vessels. In May, 1813, he determined to bring about a single ship combat with the Americans and prove to his country that British sailors still knew how to fight. The Shannon herself gave challenge to combat by standing in the offing across the bay when the sun rose bright and glorious on the morning of the 1st day of June. Bostonians witnessing Lawrence's hasty preparations hustled themselves into private boats to sail out and watch the sea fight. The Chesapeake set sail at noon and stood down the bay, followed at a cautious distance by the pleasure craft. Some of Lawrence's sailors celebrated the occasion of the sailing by getting drunk. Despite mutiny on the part of a portion of his crew the heroic Lawrence drove his ship ahead under full sail straight for the waiting and eager enemy.

Shortly before 6 o'clock in the evening the two ships came together about eighteen miles out at sea. "As the bow of the Chesapeake began to double on the Shannon's quarter," in the words of a naval historian, "the latter opened fire." The Shannon's broadside did terrific execution on the Chesapeake. Captain Lawrence fell, severely wounded in one leg, but propped himself up and remained in command. After securing a more favorable position the Chesapeake returned the broadside compliment. Lawrence soon received a mortal wound and was carried below, protesting.

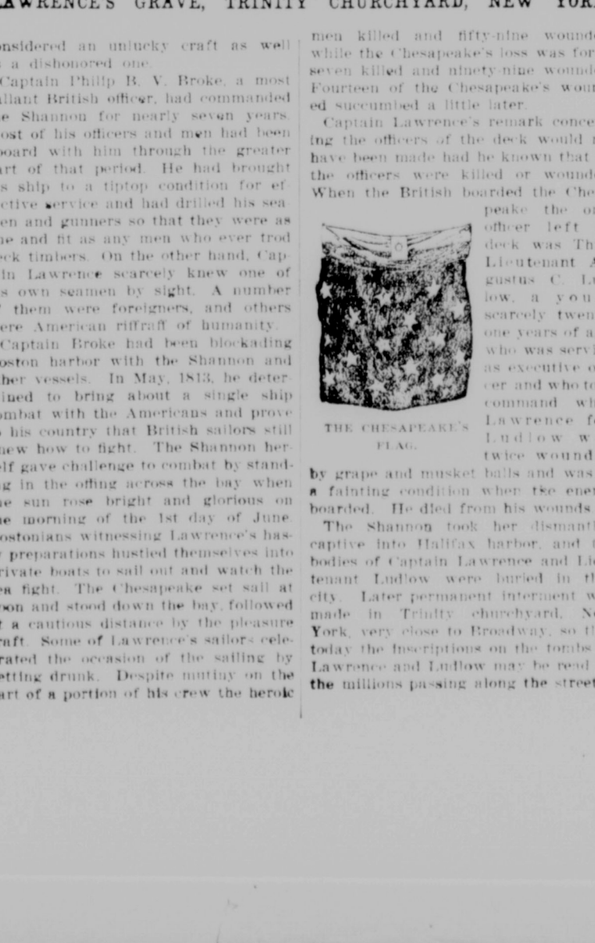
"Keep the guns going! Fight her till she strikes or sinks," he cried. Being informed that the enemy had boarded him on the spar deck, Captain Lawrence cried: "Then the officers of the deck haven't toed the mark! The Shannon was whipped when I left the deck."

A little later he called out those immortal words, "Don't give up the ship!"

Naval fights in those days were brief and bloody. The firing between the Shannon and the Chesapeake lasted just eleven minutes, and four minutes later the British had boarded the American vessel and taken possession. A fifteen minute fight made imperishable history.

Captain Broke, after boarding the Chesapeake, was struck down by a saber and almost killed. He never fully recovered, though he lived until 1841. The Shannon lost twenty-four men killed and fifty-nine wounded, while the Chesapeake's loss was forty-seven killed and ninety-nine wounded. Fourteen of the Chesapeake's wounded succumbed a little later.

Captain Lawrence's remark concerning the officers of the deck would not have been made had he known that all the officers were killed or wounded. When the British boarded the Chesapeake the only officer left on deck was Third Lieutenant Augustus C. Ludlow, a youth scarcely twenty-one years of age, who was serving as executive officer and who took command when Lawrence fell. Ludlow was twice wounded by grape and musket balls and was in a fainting condition when the enemy boarded. He died from his wounds.



LAWRENCE'S GRAVE, TRINITY CHURCHYARD, NEW YORK.

THE CHESAPEAKE'S FLAG.

The Shannon took her dismantled captive into Halifax harbor, and the bodies of Captain Lawrence and Lieutenant Ludlow were buried in that city. Later permanent interment was made in Trinity churchyard, New York, very close to Broadway, so that today the inscriptions on the tombs of Lawrence and Ludlow may be read by the millions passing along the street.

FRANCIS SCOTT KEY'S HOME IN GEORGETOWN

Historic House Where Part of "The Star Spangled Banner" Was Written.

A Fourth of July Sketch by Robert Donnell.
Copyright, 1908, by C. N. Lurie.

OF the shrines to which Americans go in patriotic reverence none is more sacred than the house which was the home of Francis Scott Key, author of "The Star Spangled Banner." For some years funds have been accumulating in the hands of officials of a memorial association the purpose of which is to restore the old "Key mansion" and preserve it to posterity as one of the nation's shrines. The old dwelling stands close to the Potomac river in Washington in that part of the national capital which was called Georgetown until its consolidation with the greater city.

Francis Scott Key lived many years in this quaint old house. It is quite probable that within its walls or in the little annex adjoining, which he occupied as a law office, he wrote a part of his famous song. For many years the popular supposition has been that the poem was written while Key was aboard a British vessel of war in Chesapeake bay. The statement that he was a prisoner of war at the time has been published far and wide. Both these impressions are erroneous. The wording of the poem itself proves that the latter part of it was written at least some months after the event which evoked the glorious national lyric. Furthermore, the third stanza contains conclusive internal evidence that a good lawyer, such as Mr. Key is reputed to have been, did not write that part of the poem, at any rate, while he was in the enemy's custody.

During the conflict known in our history as the war of 1812, the year in which it began, the British ascended the Potomac, occupied the city of Washington, burned the national capitol, destroyed most wantonly many of our priceless documents and public treasures and then retreated down to salt water. That was in the summer of 1814. On their way back to their ships the enemy captured and carried away Dr. William Beans, a prominent citizen of the town of Marlboro, Md. Dr. Beans was held a prisoner on board one of the English vessels in Chesapeake bay.

Near the end of August a citizen of Upper Marlboro, William West, called at the office of Lawyer Key and engaged the attorney to use his efforts for the release of Dr. Beans. Key was a young man of thirty-five, with a lucrative practice and some little local reputation as a writer of verses. It was proposed that Key obtain the sanction of the American government to go out aboard the flagship of the British commander under a flag of truce and intercede for the imprisoned doctor. The lawyer obtained the necessary authority and started on his mission. He got aboard the ship at a critical time. The British were preparing to bombard Fort McHenry. Key succeeded in securing the release of Dr. Beans, but both he and the doctor were held aboard one of the vessels until the bombardment was over lest they reveal the British plans.

Key watched the bombardment from this highly interesting vantage point—

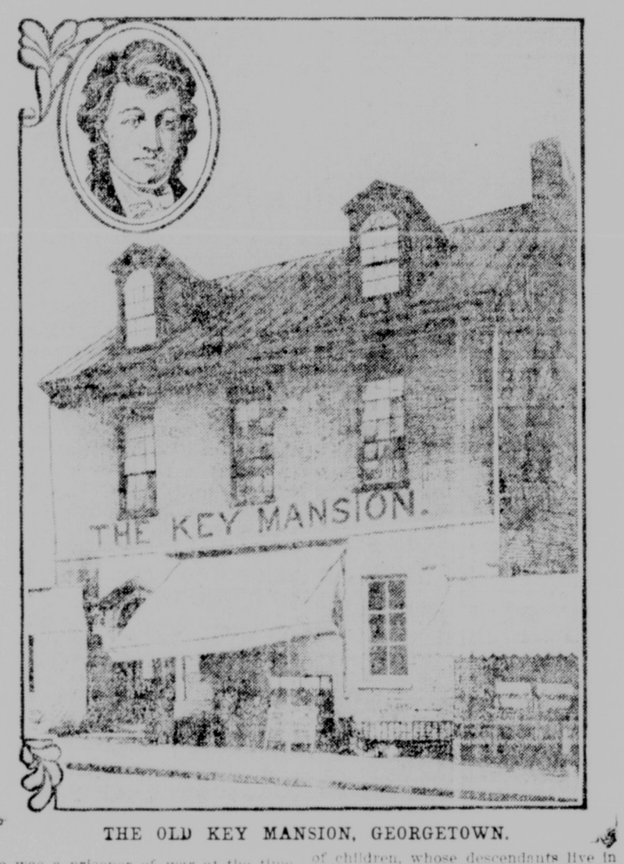
And the rocket's red glare, the bombs bursting in air,
Gave proof through the night that the flag was still there.

Then the poet-lawyer returned to the home which nearly a century later patriotic Americans propose to rescue from the low estate into which it has fallen with the advance of the Capital City. The little law office annex has been used as an Italian fruit and peanut vender's stand, while the end walls of the residence itself have been profaned with large, lurid and ludicrous letters advertising cheap groceries and other articles of trade not commonly regarded as poetic. In the lower front room a cobbler's shop has been installed.

The outer walls are two feet thick. Even the inside partitions carry a width of eighteen inches of brick. In the days when that old house was really a mansion in comparison with the average dwelling of the period families of means built houses to stay built. It is said that there is enough brick in the big chimneys and fireplaces of the Key mansion to construct the walls of an ordinary brick house of the present day. There is still an aspect of old time elegance in the old house despite its outward shabbiness.

Washington antiquarians will point out to the visiting pilgrim the lower window at the front of the house, to the right, through which young Francis Scott Key, Jr., son of the songster, climbed with his fair girl cousin when the devoted pair ran away to be married.

The eloping pair had a large family of children, whose descendants live in Washington and other cities. Francis Scott Key Smith, a grandson, is secretary of the Memorial association which is to restore the "mansion."



THE OLD KEY MANSION, GEORGETOWN.

The Fourth of July For the World Republic.

By J. A. EDGERTON.

A VOICE from the future is calling
The world to diviner estates.
A light on the present is falling
From some fuller splendor that waits—
A light like the glory supernal
O'er God's golden stairway that streamed
When Jacob, with glimpses eternal,
In Bethlehem dreamed.

A promise is heard in the nations,
A prophecy thrills through the earth,
That freedom brings new generations
Of equals and helpers to birth,
That each in the service of others,
By science and wisdom's increase,
Shall learn what it means to be brothers
Through ages of peace.

UNTIL EVERY SHACKLE IS BROKEN.

On all shall a new day be risen,
With justice the sunshine thereof,
And man shall go forth from his prison,
Made free by the angel of Love.
The glow from these dawns unbeholden
Of happier eras to be
Falls most with its refluence golden,
My country, on thee.

By thee Freedom's word was first spoken,
Thy hand wrote the gospel of man.
Until every shackle is broken
Thy place shall be yet in the van.
Go on till in union are blended
All nations and isles of the sea.
Thy mission shall never be ended
Till all men are free.

'TIS LIBERTY'S DAY.

The day of thy glad jubilations,
Of thine and of Liberty's birth,
Shall yet be observed by the nations,
Till heaven shall come on the earth,
Till all men with luminous faces
Shall send up the reverent cry,
'Tis Liberty's day for all races—
The Fourth of July!

KNEE DEEP IN JUNE.

Tell you what I like the best:
'Long about knee deep in June,
'Bout the time strawberries melts
On the vine—some afternoon
Like to jes' git out and rest,
And not work at nothin' else!

Orchard's where I'd ruther be—
Needn't fence it in for me!—
Jes' the whole sky overhead,
And the whole airth underneath—
Sorto' so's a man kin breathe
Like he ort, and kindo' has
Elbow-room to keerlessly
Sprawl out len'thways on the grass,
Where the shadder's thick and soft
As the kivvers on the bed
Mother fixes in the loft
Allus, when they's company!

Jes' a sorto' lazin' there—
S' lazy 'at you peek and peer
Through the wavin' leaves above,
Like a feller 'at's in love
And don'. know it, ner don't keer!
Ever'thing you hear and see
Got some sort of interest:
Maybe find a bluebird's nest
Tuck up there conveenently
For the boys 'at's apt to be
Up some other apple tree!

* * * * * *

Pee-wee's singin', to express
My opinion second-class,
Yit you'll near'em more or less;
Sapsuck's gittin' down to biz,
Weedin' out the lonesomeness;
Mr. Bluejay, full o' sass,
In them base ball clothes o' his,
Sportin' 'round the orchard jes'
Like he owned the premises!
Sun out in the fields kin sizz,
But flat on yer back, I guess,
In the shade's where glory is!
That's jest what I'd like to do
Stiddy fer a year er two.

Plague! ef they ain't sompin' in Work, 'at kind o' goes ag'in
My convictions!—'long about
Here in June especially!
Under some old apple-tree,
Jes' a-restin' through and through,
I could git along without
Nothin' else at all to do
Only jes' a-wishin' you
Was a-gittin' there like me—
And June was eternity!

—James Whitcomb Riley.

The Slaughter of the Trees.

Last year we cut nearly forty billion (40,000,000) feet of lumber, board measure. It may be interesting to know in what proportions the different states furnished this supply. In relative order a partial list is as follows: Washington, Louisiana, Wisconsin, Michigan, Mississippi, Arkansas, Minnesota, Texas, Pennsylvania, Oregon, California, North Caroline—and so down. Today Washington furnishes 11.5 per cent of our lumber and Louisiana 7.4 per cent.

The highest estimate of our remaining hardwood is 400,000,000,000 feet. For lumber, ties, posts, manufactures, fuel, etc., we use 25,000,000,000 feet per annum or more. At that rate it will take us sixteen years to use up all the rest of our hardwood—if we do not burn it and if the demand remains the same! A pleasant prospect is it not?—Everybody's Magazine.

RIUNOUS TO PUBLIC ROADS.

Ex-Governor Frank Brown Says Speed—Mad Autoists Must be Checked.

Ex-Governor Frank Brown, now the owner of a fine French touring car, whose son is also an enthusiastic autoist, has no sympathy for the automobile drivers in the contention that the machines are damaging the roads of the state.

With all the emphasis he could command he declared yesterday that the state should not take any step toward improving the old roads or building new ones until a check had been effectively put upon speed-mad automobile drivers.

"This is so important," he declared, "that the Governor should convene the Legislature for the purpose of providing a means of checking the speed of automobiles in the state before one cent of the $5,000,000 for roads is spent. Otherwise the money might as well be thrown out of the window. I own a machine, but it is not in this country, and I know what damage they do to roads when driven at a high rate of speed. Railroads pay for their right of way. They have to have watchmen, and they go only about 40 or 50 miles an hour, while these automobiles, without due precaution for the public, run helter-skelter, as fast as 60 miles anhour. It is an outrage.

"An international congress will be held in France in October to discuss means of protecting the roads from the terrible wear of these automobiles. The roads of France and other European countries built by the governments have been orn to their rock bedding by automobiles. It is the enormous speed of automobiles that does the damage. Even a carriage run at the speed most of these machines go would wear the surface off of a road and blow the dust to the side. I think owners of automobiles should not be allow d to have machinery that run beyond a reasonable rate. It seems that this is a fair way to enforce the law. Those who want to keep with in the limited speed should not object to having a machine by which they could not violate the law.

"At the present rate automobiles would do more harm than all the benefits good roads could do the landowners. It is a disgrace that any set of persons should so monopolize the roads as they do. People are afraid to use the roads where the automobiles go. Women in carriages have to get out to let the machines go thundering by. The automobile drivers will not let you have half of the road. They want all of it. When they frighten your horse they only laugh at you."

Ex-Governor Brown said that the question of taxing the automobile owners in proportion to the damage they do is one that will come up after the state has succeeded in dealing with the evil of high speed and reckless-driving—Baltimore Sun.

DEER PARK.

The last day of June, 1908, finds your correspondent seated at his desk, thinking of the beautiful month of roses about to pass into oblivion and be succeeded by the most patriotic (to we Americans) month of the year, when the Day of Independence and its precious benefits resulting therefrom will be celebrated throughout the entire land by old and young, and for the moment sectional hatred will be hushed and laid aside—when the deeds of Washington and Lee are recalled to mind in achieving the glorious liberties of our country. But the true and devoted Christian soldier and patriot looks forward to another month and day, even December, with its chilly and surly blasts, and to the day observed in memory of the natiyity of Him who brought love, joy and peace to the world and a freedom that makes His followers, who know His truth, free indeed.

Though we reluctantly part with the month of June, garlanded with her roses, we gladly welcome July for her patriotic inspirations and recollections of the heroic deeds of our forefathers in establishing a government so strong in the affections of the people that fanatical or plutocratic hands cannot change or destroy.

Under the management of Col. Burwell Deer Park Hotel is rapidly filling up and the cottages are being occupied. The genial manager is more than delighted at the prospect of a successful season.

Col. Truesdell, who has done much for the improvement and uplifting of this community, is now enjoying the pure air of the Allegany summit and indulging in deep draughts of Altamont Spring water, which we hope will add many years to his useful and valued life.

Our worthy and enterprising Mayor, W. W. Hennen, and his able assistants have done and are doing much toward improving and beautifying our town, which his predecessors long neglected.

Mr. Grimes and family, of Pittsburg, Pa., are now occupying "Glamorgan," late the summer residence of John W. Williams, of Philadelphia, Pa., from whom they purchased that desirable mountain retreat.

The relatives and friends of the late William H. Hoye, near Hoyes, this county, were painfully grieved to learn by telephone of his sudden and unexpected death, on Thursday evening, June 25th. His only sister, Mrs. Cassiday, of Cumberland, Md., and his cousin, W. H. Hoye, of this place, attended the funeral June 27th, which was also largely attended by other relatives and his many friends.

Mr. Charles A. West died Friday, June 26th, after a lingering illness of some months, leaving a sorrowing widod, three sons and three daughters to mourn his loss.

We are glad to note that Patrick Griffin is recovering from the injuries received some weeks since.

Mr. Andrew Pysell, of near this place, is quite ill and report says his family have but little hope of his recovery.

Mr. and Mrs. L. C. Hendrickson, of Washington, D. C., are rusticating at beautiful Deer Park, and enjoying ozone of this healthy and delightful climate, and spending the summer as usual with their brothers and sisters, Miss E. J. Hoye and brother, Mr. Walter Engle and wife, and Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Thrasher, and alternating as suits their pleasure at this trio of hospitable homes.

It was the pleasure of your correspondent to meet on No. 3 this A. M., Miss Myrtle George, one of Deer Park's fairest daughters and Oakland's Normal School's brightest pupils, and one of Garrett county's precious jewels.

VOLUME 32. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, JULY 9, 1908. NUMBER 19

SOURCE OF WATER SUPPLY NOT ADEQUATE.

Report of Water Engineer Fairlie, of Baltimore, Disheartening.

Mr. Fairlie, of Baltimore, a member of the engineering firm engaged by the Mayor and Town Council to make surveys and submit estimates for the introduction of water and sewerage system for the town, made his report to Council last Monday night, when the regular monthly meeting of that body took place.

It was Mr. Fairlie's intention to secure the supply of water from Trout Run, a stream east of Mountain Lake Park, and from a survey recently made, of sufficient elevation to furnish an adequate pressure in all parts of town, the proposed site of the dam across the stream being about two hundred and sixty feet above the old court house. At the time the stream was inspected by the engineer and members of the Council a supply deemed wholly adequate to furnish water for the town at all seasons of the year was flowing through the channel, but since the prolonged dry spell has been on the bed of the channel is almost dry, or at least the water has diminished to such an extent that Mr. Fairlie is of the opinion that it would be inadvisiable to depend on Trout Run as a source of supply and hence that stream will be no longer considered.

The report of the engineer is indeed a great disappointment to the Council as well as to the people generally of Oakland as the water is of extraordinary purity and its elevation would insure a splendid pressure at all times. In the meantime other probably sources of supply are being looked after by Mr. Fairlie and water in Oakland may yet be introduced.

Attention, Farmers.

Professors Close, Norton and Symons, of College Park, Md., will tour Garrett county in the interests of Horticulture and desire to meet and talk to the farmers at the following places:

Friendsville, Monday evening, July 13th.

Hoyes, Tuesday evening, July 14th.

Bittinger, Wednesday evening, July 15th.

Swanton, Thursday evening, July 16th.

Some obliging farmers should see to it that a place is provided for the meeting at each place and get the farmers and others out to hear the interesting lectures.

The Garrett County Pomona Grange will meet at Swanton on Thursday, 16th inst., in the afternoon for the purpose of installing officers and other business. Come out to the grange and stay for the evening meeting at which the above gentleman will lecture.

PRESIDENTS AND EX-PRESIDENTS.

John Adams Lived 25 Years as An Ex-President.

The lamented death of ex-President Cleveland leaves us entirely without a President with that proud affix to his name for the first time in something more than a century.

Washington wore it only about two years. The shortest time was that of James K. Polk, only from March to June, 1849. He had hardly settled down at his Tennessee home when death came. In the eighteen twenties there were four who claimed the affix: John Adams, Jefferson, Madison and Monroe. This extraordinary quartet was broken on the 4th of July, 1826, by the death of Adams at the age of 91, and Jefferson, aged 83. Mohroe followed July 4, 1831.

Three ex-Presidents died on the great national holiday. What a strange coincidence. Madison followed in 1836 at 85. Five of our presidents attained octogenarian ages or over. The two Adams, Jefferson, Madison and Van Buren in 1862.

In the eighteen forties there were four Presidents with this title: John Q. Adams, Jackson, VanBuren and Tyler. Jackson died in 1845, aged 78, Adams in 1848, aged 80, VanBuren in 1862, at 80. The age of Tyler is not remembered.

The Presidents who have worn the "tag" as it has sometimes been humorously termed, longest were Adams, 25 years; VanBuren, 21 years; J. Q. Adams, 19 years; Madison, 19 years and Jefferson, 17 years. The shortest service by President W. H. Harrison. One month ending on April 4, 1841, by death. The next shortest term was that of Garfield from March 4, 1881, to the following September, and of Gen. Taylor, one year and four months, to the 9th of July, 1850, from sunstroke incurred at the cornerstone planting of the capitol extension.

The oldest President to take the oath of office was Gen. W. H. Harrison at the age of 68 years. The next was James Buchanan at 66. The youngest was our present chief magistrate at 43 years. The next youngest was the great General Grant at 48.

Cleveland was the only man who was elected as an ex-President—in 1892—having been defeated in 1888 by Benjamin Harrison. Since the organization of our government in 1789 there have been seven presidents who served two whole terms. The last of whom was Gen. Grant, eight years as president, and 8 years ex-president, a nice coincidence. He deceased in August, 1885, at 63 years.

We have had in all 25 different presidents during our nation's life. Nine of whom were chosen twice. Our next Presidential election willl be the 31st of the kind in the 119 years or our nationality.

BERNARD GONDER IN BUTTE, MONTANA.

He Writes An Interesting Description of that Part of the Country.

Butte, Mont., June 27, 1908.

To the Editor of The Republican:

DEAR SIR: It is now one year since I left the county seat of old Garrett and within my heart there still lingers that feeling of strong affection for my home town and my many Oakland friends, but one year's existence in this great state of the northwest (Montana) has caused me to have a very strong desire to make it my permanent place of abode.

I am now located in Butte, which is the largest of Montana's cities and also the largest mining town in the world, employing over ten thousand persons in that industry alone, which is principally confined to copper mining although there are a few valuable gold and silver mines. The Anaconda Copper mines are located here, the copper production being about one half of that in the United States. The mines are all shaft mines, some having a depth of nearly three thousand feet. A great number of these mines are located in the heart of the city.

There is virtually nothing here but mining. Nearly all the inhabitants are connected directly or indirectly with the mines. Most western towns devoted to mineral interests are in some degree centers for sheep, cattle or agricultural interests. Butte has none of these interests. Virtually no green thing of any sort grows anywhere in or around Butte. This condition is due in part to the natural dryness of the soil; in part to the altitude, which is about 5600 feet, but chiefly to the fumes of the smelters. Even the trees which once covered the mountains have disappeared leaving everywhere the rough, scarred, barren earth.

The city is the trade and jobbing center for Southern and Western Montana. It has an extensive trolly system, gas and electric light. I know of no place where the laboring men get as good wages as they do here. This is owing to organized labor. All classes of labor are organized in Butte, and they stick together, too. Even the newsboys on the streets have a Union. However, living is very high in Butte. Even though one gets good wages here it is about all he can do to make both ends meet.

Butte is a very lively town. One can find all kinds of amusements here. The streets are crowded with people during all hours of the night.

Across the rugged snow capped mountains, 75 miles due north of Butte, there lies the beautiful capital city (Helena) with her 15,000 inhabitants. Helena is on the main line of the Northern Pacific and Great Northern Railways and is surrounded on all sides by the Rocky Mountains. On the south and west the mountains are within two miles of the city while to the north there is a wide valley between the city and the foot hills and the same conditions exist on the east. The city is protected by severe wind storms and in the winter there is a difference of temperature between the city and the mountains of from 10 to 20 degrees. The country tributary to the city is rich in both mineral and agricultural resources. The mines are principally gold producing while the products of the farms are cereals and the ordinary vegetables. Tributary to the city are large areas devoted to stock raising.

Helena is noted as the richest city per capita not only in Montana but in the entire Rocky mountain country. It is principally a city of homes. Cattlemen, miners and others engaged in industries elsewhere in Montana have their resi- in Helena because of the church, school and social attractions. Helena is the best built city in the state. Its hotels, office buildings, mercantile establishments and private residences being equal to any found in cities of 100,000 in the east. Twelve miles from Helena on the Missouri River is located the plant of the Missouri River Electric Light and Power Co. This company furnishes electric power for operating the street cars and lighting the city of Helena, and for manufacturing purposes. It also transmits electric power to Butte for the mines, a distance of a hundred miles. Four miles from Helena is located the smelter of the American Smelting and Refining Co. Just west of Helena is the famous Broadwater Park at which place can be found the largest Natatorium in the world which many pleasure seekers take advantage of during the summers by bathing in the warm mineral water supplied by large mineral springs nearby.

Following the Northern Pacific Ry., west down the slope of the Rockies from Helena 125 miles, one comes to Missoula. Missoula, known as the "Garden City," lies close to the picturesque Hell Gate Canyon thro which the Hell Gate river winds. Missoula is the centre of distribution for the Bitter Root valley, the valley of the Big Blackfoot river and the Flat Head Indian Reservation.

Nature has been lavish with the distribution of things to man and artists revel in the vicinity of Missoula. High mountains rises on all sides, with broad valleys between. The limits of the city touch the base of Mt. Jumbo about 2,000 feet above the valley. North of Missoula River about a mile on the south side of the river bounding the valley on the west are the Bitter Root mountains, said to be one of the most rugged ranges in the United States. To the north are the Cabinets. In these mountains there are many rich mines. In addition to the mineral wealth these mountains have a heavy covering of timber. The valley about Missoula is as level as a floor. The Bitter Root valley which is near Missoula is known all over the country for its fruits. It is the oldest fruit raising valley in the State. Apples, plums, pears, crabs, strawberries, raspberries and other fruits are shipped by the car load from this valley.

Missoula is the county seat of Missoula county has a population of nearly 14,000 people and is rapidly forging to the front. The Northern Pacific Railway, which maintains its head quarters here also conducts and supports a perfectly equipped hospital and patients are sent here from the Pacific Coast. The Sisters Hospital is also a magnificent institution, having large and beautiful grounds and buildings.

In conclusion would say that it is my belief that the northwest is the coming country. There are lots of splendid openings here for good safe investments for people with money but at present I would not advise anyone to come to this country seeking employment, as work is not so plentiful at this time. However, I am confident that every thing willbe in full swing and times be normal by the time the trees are shedding their foliage in the fall of 1908.

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO CAPITALISTS.

Rare Securities for a Loan of $400,000—Bids Will be Receivdd Up to August 1, 1908.

The incorporators and directors of the Youghiogheny Light and Power Company, and the Oakland, Swallow Falls and Uniontown Electric Railway Company, all of Garrett county, Maryland, will soon execute First Mortgages on their franchises, options, rights of way and all their assets and properties of every description, as security for a loan of $400,000.

Their consulting engineers and experts estimate that this amount of cash will be required to finance their hydro-electric plant, and the first division of their Electric Railway from Oakland to the plant.

About $250,000 will be expended in the erection and equipment of a hydro-electric plant that will be guaranteed to develop at least ten thousand horse power.

About $150,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to build and equip a standard guage electric railway from Oakland to said hydro-electric plant, and pay all contingent expenses, such as paying for right of way and the costs of condemnation proceeding in securing said rights of way, and also in securing deeds for the optioned sites, that are to be leased for one dollar a years to all mills and factories that agree to use their electric power, light and heat, and all other necessary contingent expenses.

A conservative estimate, made by experienced experts, is that the annual income from the businese of the hydro-electric plant alone will be sufficient to pay six per cent interest on a capital stock of four million dollars, if that amount is necessary.

[Private figures sustaining this declaration will be mailed to all applicants for them.]

Capitalists who desire to verify these facts and statements can do so by meeting us at the Commercial Hotel, Oakland, Md., when we will pilot them, as far as they want to go, into this wonderfully rich undeveloped region of 100,000 acres.

Bidders for these first mortgages will please name their lowest rates of interest to be paid on these mortgages, as well as their very lowest commissions for negotiating the loans.

All bids will be opened at our offices, in room No. 14, in the First National Bank Building, Oakland, Md., on the first day of August, 1908, and the lowest bidder will be promptly notified by telegraph to come on and close the deal.

Respectfully,

H. P. TASKER,

General Manager Youghioghenv Light & Power Co., also of the Oakland, Swallow Falls and Uniontown Electric Railway Company.

FRIENDSVILLE AND ACCIDENT WILL REMAIN DRY.

Opinion Filed By Judge A. Hunter Boyd Decided the Matter.

Last Thursday Clerk of the Circuit Court E. Z. Tower was in receipt of the opinion of Chief Judge A. Hunter Boyd in the case of Mitchell Bros., of Friendsville, and F. C. Ries, of Accident, vs. E. Z. Tower, Clerk of the Court, in which the Court decided that the vote in Friendsville whereby the citizens of that town decided that liquor should not be sold within the corporate limits of the town, and upholding the constitutionality of the law passed at the recent session of the Legislature prohibiting the sale of liquor within a certain prescribed distance from any church or school house within the county.

Mitchell Bros., of Friendsville, sought to compel Mr. Tower as Clerk of the Court to issue them a license to sell liquor at Friendsville, declaring in the papers filed in the mandamus case that the vote was illegal, the tickets prepared and used at the election not being in accordance with the law.

Mr. Ries, by mandamus, also sought to compel the Clerk to issue him a licence to retail liquor at Accident, attacking the constitutionality of the law passed last winter prohibiting the sale of liquor within a prescribed distance from any church or school building.

GORTNER.

Mr. and Mrs. Gus Lynn, of Maysville, Va., who were visiting their daughter Mrs. Fred Gortner, last week, returned to their home Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. John Schlossnagle spent several days last week with relatives at Accident.

Miss Nellie Conneway was the guest of her aunt, Mrs. P. P. Gortner, Sunday.

A. T. Baker, who was employed near Brookside for several months, returned to his home last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Noah Beachy and children, of Yoder, Kansas, are visiting reltives in this vicinity.

Grover Lee spent the 4th with his best girl at Maysville, Va.

Henry Yoder is wearing "the smile that wont come off." He says it is a bouncing big boy this time.

Misses Lizzie Opel and Lydia Selders and Conrad Hanft, three of Accident's handsome teachers, were rusticating in this vicinity Sunday.

Sunday school postponed till July 19, at 9.30 a. m. Preaching at 10.30 a. m., and Bible reading at 7.30 p. m., same day.

Desirable Clothing

For Boys

Is one of my specialties. I have been very particular in the selection of my line to get only goods of dependable quality.

My suits for LITTLE BOYS 3 to 7 years in Eton, Buster Brown and Sailor styles at $3.00 to $5.00 are hard to beat.

Suits from 8 to 16 year sizes in either plain knee pants or Knickerbocker style at $4.00 to $7.50 I believe to be the best to be had in this range of prices. I also have a lot of cheaper suits if you want them.

Yours Truly. E. A. WEIMER.

NEXT DOOR TO THE POSTOFFICE OAKLAND, MD

Journey's End

By Forbes Dwight.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

The mad gallop up the bridle path ended at the bridge across the little pond. The girl drew rein close to the stone parapet and, calming her restive steed, whose every nerve seemed a-quiver with the excitement of the wild dash, sat quietly on the saddle staring with pensive eyes at the unruffled water below.

Dean ranged his own horse beside the girl's, smiling as he watched the glowing color in her cheeks. All about them the trees flaunted the gorgeous tints of late autumn—scarlet, ocher and more subdued shades blending into a splendid, farreaching vista. The crisp, clear air stirred the blood like wine.

The girl laughed, a trifle uneasily.

"We shouldn't be doing such things," she said severely.

"Of course not," said Dean, with a chuckle. "We should have maintained a staid pace. We should have contented ourselves at the most with a measured trot. It's tremendously wicked the way we smash all the conventions of this park. We'll have a mounted officer on our trail yet. Pleasant prospect that. A glorious gallop, all the same, wasn't it, and well worth the risk of incurring the displeasure of the law?"

"Yes; it was glorious," the girl admitted. "Still, we shouldn't do it."

"That's where half the fun comes in," said he. "Hang their old park and its rules! Do they think we'll limit

"TAKE ME TO YOUR GENTLE OLD CLERGYMAN."

ourselves to a funereal pace such a day as this and with such a pair of steppers?"

"We really ought to," said she.

Dean laughed. It was a pleasant, almost boyish laugh. His big shoulders were squared defiantly.

"The things one ought to do are generally unpleasant," he observed. "Come on. We'll let them out once more."

The girl shook her head.

"No!. Oh, no!" she demurred.

"Afraid?" he questioned.

She nodded.

"Of the rules they are pleased to hamper us with in this 2 by 4 plot of grass?"

"No; not of that," she replied. "Afraid of you, I think."

"Of me? Oh, pshaw!"

Again his laugh rang out, but the girl turned to him with a sudden seriousness.

"You make me rather afraid of you at times," she said. "You tempt me to do reckless things. I don't know why it should be so, but it is. I would never in the world have thought of riding here with any one else as I have with you just now, and the strange part of it all is that I enjoy it so immensely."

"Enjoy what?"

"Doing the reckless things you inspire."

Dean leaned toward her quickly.

"I wish it were so," he declared. "I wish I really might inspire you to reckless deeds. I wish I might"—

"Now, please," the girl begged, with heightening color.

"Oh, all right!" said he good naturedly. "I know the subject is tabooed. I'll observe the conventions you've imposed upon me and keep my tongue to the funereal pace."

He sat for a time staring silently into the water. At last he straightened himself in the saddle.

"I'd like another gallop," he remarked, "a wilder one, a madder one. I'd like to get out of this little old park and go somewhere where there's a level stretch of road and no hampering rules of pace."

A light came into the girl's eyes. She threw back her head and gathered up the reins.

"So would I," she declared, a trifle breathlessly.

Dean swung about to face her. There was a quiet smile on his lips.

"Come, then," he said simply.

"We really shouldn't," she objected.

"Come," he repeated.

"I'm afraid when you speak in that fashion."

"Come."

He turned the horse from the bridge and headed for the gate at the farther side of the park. The girl followed silently.

"Where are you going?" she asked as he turned through the gate and made for the road that led into the country.

"To a place where we can let them out to our hearts' content," said he.

Up the road through the afternoon sunshine they went at a sober pace, but once the city was fairly behind them Dean quickened the pace. Faster they went and faster until they were teaming along at a mad gait. Across level stretches and over the low hills they sped. The two horses had caught the spirit of the gallop and tore along at their best pace. The girl's cheeks were glowing; Dean's eyes sparkled with the excitement of it.

They paused finally on the crest of a hill. Far behind them lay the city, its position outlined against the sky by a smudge of blue smoke. Ahead of them lay a ragged line of hills, behind which glowed a sky red with the embers of the sunset.

"Well, that was a ride," said Dean, turning to the girl.

"Wasn't it?" she cried. "But we must be starting back. See, the sun has set. It will be quite dark if we don't hurry."

"I wish I might inspire you with a thorough recklessness," he said.

"You have," she said breathlessly.

"Then let's go just one more mile," he urged.

She hesitated.

"Come," she cried at last.

Down the hill they thundered, across a bridge that spanned a little brook and up the rise on the other side. Again they drew rein. The gorgeous twilight colors were fading. Below them lay a little village, its lights already beginning to twinkle in the gloom.

"Enough recklessness?" said he. "Never! This is just the beginning."

"Now I'm afraid of you again," said she.

"Oh, no, you're not afraid of me," he said, with a strange gentleness. "You're afraid of a few old, time worn conventions. You're afraid of all those plans that have been made for your future—afraid to answer your own heart and go against them. You are afraid of yourself—that you may some time do as you want and thwart your mother's scheming for you. But you're not afraid of me."

She began to tremble.

"We must go back," she cried.

"Look," said he. "Do you see that spire with the cross on it? Well, beside that spire is a little rectory, and in the rectory is a gentle old clergyman. He's watching this road down hill even now, Dorothy, he's expecting us."

"Oh!" she cried, turning her face away.

"Shall we disappoint him?" he asked.

There was a long pause; then without looking at him the girl started her horse down the hill. At the foot of it she stopped and resolutely faced Dean. Her cheeks were burning, but her eyes never faltered.

"I am afraid of you," she said, "because you will always have your way with me. You will rule me as you like do with me as you please, even as you have done this afternoon. Yes, I am very much afraid of you—but—but take me to your gentle old clergyman. I am very happy even in my fear."

Maryland Superstitions.

There are superstitions throughout all the counties of Maryland concerning crossroads and running water. Witches are supposed to make their home at the crossing of two roads and to appear there at midnight. One peculiar thing about witches is that they cannot get across running water, and a stream of any sort always acts as a protection to the nightly prowler, who will follow along the bank of a stream in preference to the road. These are some of the things which are more generally believed in the country around Washington and along the Eastern Shore. Some of the articles of the creed of the superstitious in that neighborhood are:

If you sweep your room at night you sweep away your wealth.

Never shake crumbs out of a window after dark. They are supposed to fall into the eyes of the Lord and to disturb the spirits of the dead who wander abroad at night.

Don't wash your hands in water in which eggs have been boiled. You are liable to become covered with warts.—Baltimore Sun.

Precocity and Degeneracy.

Precocity is not always a thing to be desired. Indeed, it may, just as surely as a prematurely ripened fruit indicates decay and early death, mean an early degeneration and loss of mental faculties. By many biologists it is considered an expression of premature senility. As Lombroso has indicated, many of the men of genius were subjects of degeneracy. There is a period of antenatal growth known to scientists as the senile period, embracing the fourth and fifth months of prenatal existence. It has been found that a slight arrest of development at this period is characteristic of the class of beings known as degenerates, and precocity is recognized as one of the expressions of this development defect. Relief de la Bretonne, who composed at fourteen a poem on his first twelve loves, is a remarkable precocity. "A wit of five is a fool of twenty," is an adage founded upon the popular appreciation of this unpleasant truth.—W. A. Newman Dorland in Century.

Labor's Independent Vote to Be Renewed With Vigor This Year.

By SAMUEL COMPERS, President American Federation of Labor.

IN view of the serious crisis which confronts the workers there will be far greater political activity this year than ever before. Our campaign work will still be dependent upon voluntary contributions from friends and sympathizers, but we have no fear whatever of the result, for our cause is just and righteous.

The action of every member of the Sixtieth congress in regard to labor's measures and interests HAS BEEN CAREFULLY NOTED, and this information will be available in every district for campaign purposes.

That the dominant majority in congress was cut from 112 to 56 by labor's efforts in the campaign of 1906 is a fact which has been sedulously ignored. The increases or decreases in pluralities demonstrate beyond doubt the practicability and influence of the American Federation of Labor plan of campaign and should be an incentive to all ardent, active unionists and friends to give RENEWED ACTIVITY to this movement this year, when so much is at stake.

THE COMPARISON OF THE INCREASED AND DECREASED PLURALITIES IS A MOST INTERESTING STUDY. IT WILL BE ESPECIALLY VALUABLE TO THE VOTERS IN THE RESPECTIVE DISTRICTS BECAUSE THEY ARE ABLE TO JUDGE FOR THEMSELVES WHAT WERE THE INFLUENCES WHICH DECIDED THE VOTE IN 1906, AND THEY ALONE CAN CARRY INTO FULL EFFECT THE DETERMINATION OF THE PEOPLE OF THE COUNTRY TO PROTECT AND DEFEND THE NATURAL AND INHERENT RIGHTS OF THE WORKERS.

The policy advocated by the American Federation of Labor was effectively carried out by the state and central bodies in many instances successfully in 1906, and they will be prepared this year to profit by that experience and accomplish still greater results. The practicability of our political movement has demonstrated itself in the action of the Sixtieth congress. Members of that body who prior to the last election imagined that labor measures were something with which to play the game of battledoor and shuttlecock and who were either hostile or indifferent have now realized that even where they were not defeated a stinging rebuke has been administered to them by the enormous reductions in their pluralities.

Their record will be made the basis for future action at the hands of the workers. Already can be seen THE HANDWRITING ON THE WALL, and without fear of contradiction it can be said that labor will guard its interests and make its political power felt to a greater degree in the next congress than in former ones and better results will be obtained.

Party leaders appreciate THE POTENCY OF THE INDEPENDENT VOTING POWER. They fear the growth of this spirit of independent voting more than anything else, as they realize that it means their ultimate destruction as dictators.

THE POLICY OF INDEPENDENT VOTING WILL BE CONTINUED WITH RENEWED VIGOR. IT IS ALREADY DEEPLY IMPRESSED UPON THE MINDS OF THE WORKERS THAT FOR THEM TO BE ABSOLUTELY FREE FROM PARTY DOMINATION AND POLITICAL SLAVERY THEY SHOULD ALWAYS AND EVER BEAR IN MIND THAT "THEY WHO WOULD BE FREE MUST FIRST STRIKE THE BLOW."

Why Immigrants Like America

By Professor EMIL REICH, Historian and Lecturer.

FEW Americans are aware of one of the secret causes of the fact that the Yankees assimilate, without even thinking of it or without troubling much about it, millions of Europeans, not 1 per cent of whom could have been really assimilated in Europe by the English, the Germans or the French.

Millions of Germans become in the United States rabid Yankees in the course of a few months without any Americans so much as asking them to do so, while all the wisdom and power of the Prussian government have these hundred years been unable to assimilate a hundred thousand Poles.

But when the German peasant arrives at New York he has not been there a single hour but that half a dozen people have done him what is to his mind an exquisite and flattering honor. They have "sirred" him. They have said "Yes, sir," or "No, sir." In Europe the honor of being addressed by "sir" has never been done him, although he was always expected to "sir" every better dressed person speaking to him. For years this had rankled in his heavy soul, and now a new flood of sensations shoot to his heart and brain, and in that very moment he is a new man.

THE AMERICANS ARE QUITE UNAWARE THAT THAT MEANINGLESS "SIR" HAS DONE MORE FOR THE ASSIMILATION OF MILLIONS OF EUROPEAN NEWCOMERS THAN HAVE ALL THE PARAGRAPHS OF THE AMERICAN CONSTITUTION.

"Shall I Find the Soul I Loved?"

By ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS, Author.

IF the next life is to give to the fit survivor the realization of denied things, there must be involved to a certain extent the restitution of lost things. No preacher, no teacher, no writer, who ventures to approach the mysteries of the unknown life ever escapes the bombardment of one question, more often repeated, more poignant than all others, "SHALL I FIND THE SOUL I LOVED?"

If it is worth loving and if you are worthy to love it—yes. Since God, who is love, gave you love capacity and since fate, which may or may not be God, starved you with love famine—yes. By every broken heart, by every widowed sob, by every grief too great for tears, by every flower of pure and perfect love broken at its roots in the garden of your trampled being—yes.

I am ready to say without hesitation that for the love worthy the next world must fulfill the obligations of this one and that THE RESTORATION OF OUR SORROWED DEAD is one of the most legal of such obligations.

BOWSER'S NEW CLUB

Becomes Member of Moon Gazers and Writes Ode to That Orb.

HIS WIFE HELPS IN WORK.

Verses, He Thinks, Have Too Much Poetic License, and a Friend Confirms Him In This View—Goes to Bed In Anger.

[Copyright, 1908, by T. C. McClure.]

When the Bowser family had returned to the sitting room after dinner the other evening, Mr. Bowser walked up and down in a restless way for awhile and then entered the library and shut the door. Mrs. Bowser did not disturb him, and it was half an hour before he reappeared and said:

"I forgot to tell you that I have been elected a member of the Moon Gazing club and that I must attend and be initiated tomorrow night."

"And you are going to spend the rest of your evenings this winter gazing at the moon?"

"Not at all. They call it that simply to get an odd name. The club is composed of artists, poets and scholars. It is esteemed a great honor to belong to it. At its last meeting it blackballed two ex-governors and three United States senators. You can judge by that how exclusive the club is."

"Well, I am pleased that you have become a member. I hope they won't make you climb ladders and stand on your head as they did when you were initiated in the Gay Old Boys. You didn't get over your lame back for three weeks."

"WHAT HAS A CLAM TO DO WITH THE MOON, I WANT TO KNOW?"

"There is no such horseplay in this club. Everything is decorum and dignity."

"Then what is it?" she asked as she noticed the sheet of paper and pencil in his hand.

"Well, every new member has to write and read an ode to the moon. I've been trying my hand at it, but don't get along very well. Perhaps you could help me out if you wanted to."

"Certainly I want to. What have you written?"

And with an attitude of guilt and humility Mr. Bowser read as follows:

"O moon, I gaze upon thy face
And feel a holy calm
Come stealing o'er my weary soul—

"And I can't get the next line," he explained. "I have tried about forty different things, but none of 'em fit."

Mrs. Bowser took the paper from his hand and sat for a moment with her eyes rolled up to the ceiling and then got an inspiration and said:

"You want to make that fourth line read, 'As if I were a clam.'"

"By thunder, woman," he exclaimed as he jumped back, and his face grew red, "but I'm not here to be made a fool of! What has a clam to do with the moon, I want to know?"

"Simply that clams always come up out of the sands when the moon shines. They come up and lay around and feel a calm stealing over them. Even if they had nothing to do with the moon you must take poetic license in writing poetry. If you don't you will never produce an ode."

Mr. Bowser glared at her for awhile, but as she didn't even smile and the cat remained quiet he became half convinced and returned to the library to resume the grind. When next he reappeared he tendered the following:

I gaze upon thy silvery brow,
I bathe in thy effulgence.
Come down on earth, O shining orb—

He was stuck, as before. Mrs. Bowser read the three lines over and over again and finally said:

"Here is where you must make use of more poetic license. All the poets in your club will readily understand. You must make that fourth line read, 'And in lager take indulgence.'"

"Never! By the great horn spoon, never! Clams may have something to do with the moon, but lager beer never!"

"But isn't lager beer drank on moonlight nights?"

"Of course, but so is lemon pop. Can you connect lemon pop with the moon?"

Thought the Time Pat.

"By taking poetic license I can. There will doubtless be more or less indulgence in lager beer at your club, and I think the line is pat to the occasion. There must be indulgence to rhyme with effulgence. And what do men indulge in more than lager beer? You can't bring in buttermilk and make it rhyme, can you?"

"Hang the thing!" he answered. "But I wish I had never tackled it. It's got to go through some way, however, and if poetic license, as you call it, won't do I'll take the ax to it."

Mr. Bowser's third retirement to the library, where he was shut out from the strifes and turmoils of the world, lasted for three-quarters of an hour. Mrs. Bowser heard him sitting down and getting up and walking around, and now and then he groaned out like a steer with colic after being all night in a cornfield. He was looking pale and disheveled as he finally came back to say:

"Durn all odes to blazes! I can get three lines every time, but the fourth one beats me. I have a good mind to tell the Moon Gazers to go and gaze and be hanged to them."

"You must not be discouraged, dear. We may find this easier."

And she took the paper and read:

"Before thee, Luna, doth I kneel,
Thy radiance to beg.
Come closer to me, orb of night"—

"Well?" asked Mr. Bowser.

"Well, it's got to be poetic license again. I presume all your club members are men of the world, ain't they?"

"I suppose so."

"And they are familiar with all catchwords?"

"What have catchwords got to do with this ode? Mrs. Bowser, don't you try any little game on me!"

"I'm not going to. I have got to get you this fourth line, and I think I can put in something that will be greeted with applause. Here is the way the verse stands as finished.

And she read:

"Before thee, Luna, doth I kneel,
Thy radiance to beg.
Come closer to me, orb of night,
And let me pull thy leg."

Mr. Bowser jumped two feet high. He turned pale, and he turned red. He opened his mouth, but for a full minute no sound came. Then he trumpeted:

"Woman, do you call that poetic license?"

"I certainly do," she answered. "You have got to find something to rhyme with beg. I can think of nothing but leg or keg. Keg is too suggestive of intoxication. You asked for my help, and I am giving it to you. Try the fourth verse. An ode to the moon should have at least four verses. Perhaps we can get along without poetic license in the fourth."

To Ask Druggist's Opinion.

"Mrs. Bowser," he said in an awful voice as he stood and glared at her, "don't drive a desperate man to the wall!"

"I'm not seeking to."

"I'll go over and submit these verses to the druggist, and if he says you have been making a fool of me then look out. You have never seen the lion in me fully aroused yet."

"But explain to him that we had to take poetic license."

"Oh, you needn't fear that I won't explain! I shall go into the thing to find out all about it."

The druggist happened to have a spare moment when Mr. Bowser entered and after a few general remarks inquired of him:

"Mr. Blank, what is poetic license?"

"Why do you ask?"

"Because I've been elected a member of the Moon Gazing club and must write an ode to the moon."

"Well," said Mr. Blank after a moment, "I should say that poetic license was something like this:

"The moon is full, and so am I,
And so is Mr. Towser,
And the biggest ass in all this town
Is Mr. Samuel Bowser!"

Ten minutes later, after having given his opinion of drug stores, druggists and many other things, Mr. Bowser reached home and sat down upon his front steps. It was a cold night. He shivered, and his teeth clicked together. Flakes of snow crept down his back, and the north wind reddened his ears. But he sat and sat. He sat until he heard Mrs. Bowser go up to bed, and then he rose up and exclaimed, "Durn the Moon Gazers and the moon too!" and then softly entered the house and was hidden from the eyes of the poetic world.

A Trick With Dollars.

By HOWARD FIELDING.

Copyright, 1908, by Howard Fielding.

BAILEY HARROW was a specialist. His employer, John Farnsworth, had accounts in half a dozen banks and notes falling due in twenty others. Like the leaves in Vallombrosa fell John Farnsworth's notes and were caught at the last possible second—or even later—by the whirlwind of finance which kept them from touching the ground. Bailey Harrow rode upon the whirlwind and delighted to guide it in the interests of John Farnsworth.

Bailey may have been about twenty-seven, and he looked like an active little old man, his face deeply lined by wary thinking.

On a certain forenoon Bailey came into Farnsworth's private room.

"Everything's quiet at the Corn," said Bailey, laying a bank book on the desk.

"The Corn" was the abbreviation for the name of a national bank.

The telephone bell rang, and Farnsworth rose hastily from his chair and made a gesture toward the instrument which was on the leaf of his desk. Bailey sat down and after exchanging the customary salutation covered the transmitter with his hand.

"WELL," SAID HE AT LAST, "HERE'S THE JOKER."

"It's Hartzell," said he in a low voice. "Are you here?"

"I'll bet I am," responded Farnsworth and changed places with Bailey.

"Hello, Hartzell! How about it?"

He listened for some seconds, and his face revealed that the communication was important and surprising.

"You sent the check? When? Monday? You must be dreaming. For how much? The full amount? Great Peter! Well, it hasn't shown up. If you really mailed it, it's lost. Stop it at your bank, and for the love of Moses send me another right away. Send it by a boy. Hold on a minute. I'll have Bailey go right down to your place."

Farnsworth hung up the receiver and turned to Bailey.

"You know Hartzell," said he. "He's a slippery proposition, but he can't fool you. He says he sent me a check for $4,700 Monday, and here it is Friday! If this is a fairy story, what's it about? I don't see through it. He can't get out of paying the money. You know what it's for. It's my share of that rakeoff on the Gorham transaction."

"Never heard of it," said Bailey.

"Well, you hear of it now," responded Farnsworth, "and I need the money. You come back with his check, certified. Understand?"

"Sure!" said Bailey and departed.

Farnsworth opened the door of an adjoining room and called to his stenographer, a pretty girl, blue eyed and fair haired, with the look of a thoroughbred, altogether a very superior creature. As for Farnsworth, he was a crude product to begin with, and his individual life had not improved the stuff of which he was made. The contrast affected him unpleasantly in Miss Clarendon's presence.

"Well, Gertie," said he, "did you hear from Bob this morning?"

She made a scarcely perceptible gesture of negation.

"I hope you never will," said Farnsworth. "That boy is strictly no good."

Miss Clarendon made no reply.

The young man referred to as Bob was Farnsworth's nephew and no favorite of his. Bob had been in the west and had not succeeded there. Eventually he had drifted back to Boston and had been employed for some months by Farnsworth, when they had parted, with no good will.

Undoubtedly an element of Farnsworth's dislike of his nephew was the young man's obvious interest in Miss Clarendon, yet the disfavor rested upon other grounds, as Bob had been plainly informed.

"If you were the right sort," Farnsworth had said to him, "I wouldn't stand in your way. I'd help you and be mighty glad to have Gertie in the family. But you're not good enough. You're a loafer. You're too nice to work, and I've got no use for you."

"I'm too nice to do the kind of work that's done in this office," Bob had replied, and the remark slew what was left of amity between them.

Farnsworth knew that his nephew had gone to Pittsfield, and that was all.

Dictation was in progress when there came a quick, light rap at the door, and Bailey Harrow entered, his visage puckered with perplexity as Farnsworth had never before seen it.

"Hartzell's outside," he said. "He's got that check. It's been through the bank."

"You mean to say it was cashed?"

"Yes, sir, it was," said Bailey. "It was cashed at the Corn and was settled through the clearing house by Hartzell's bank."

"How was it drawn—to my order?"

"Yes, sir, and it's got your name on the back of it."

"Forgery!"

"Sure," said Bailey.

Farnsworth paced a turn or two and then addressed Bailey.

"Go out and hold Hartzell a couple of minutes before you let him in. Then go over to Kneeland's detective agency and have him send a good man over."

Bailey vanished, and Farnsworth turned to Miss Clarendon.

"Was Bob in Boston Tuesday?"

She flushed and hesitated, then answered steadily, "Yes."

"In this office?"

"Yes."

"Came early, before I got here?"

"Yes."

"Bob knew that that check was coming from Hartzell. He may have known that it would be mailed on the 15th. Wait!"

He opened the door and looked into the outer office.

"Mr. Hartzell!" he called. "Come in."

A slender, keen eyed man of forty entered.

"When my nephew called on you a month ago about the Gorham deal, did you mention any date when you would probably settle?"

Hartzell stroked his chin.

"I may have mentioned the 15th," said he. "I told you over the phone."

"You told me the 20th," said Farnsworth, "unless I've forgotten. But what did you tell him? That's the point."

"I think I said that Gorham would probably pay on the 15th."

"Very good. Did you call at the Corn on your way up here?"

"Yes; they're looking the matter up."

Farnsworth sat down to the telephone and called up the Corn. There was a brief conversation, at the close of which Farnsworth pulled open a tall drawer in his desk and took out a check book.

"Well," said he at last, "here's the joker. A leaf containing three checks signed in blank has been cut from this book, and I didn't notice it. Shrewd work, Hartzell. You see, that check of yours was too big to be safely handled at your bank, so the rascal deposited it in mine. That gave me a balance of $4,700 more than I knew about, so of course I wouldn't draw against it. Then our thief filled out my blanks to bearer and cashed them at my bank. The way I play this game, Hartzell, any smooth fellow can cash a bearer check of mine at the Corn for a couple of thousand without ever being asked to indorse it. I prefer to make some of my payments that way, and the bank knows it."

"Indeed!" said Hartzell, and he stroked his chin again. "I'm afraid you're stuck, Farnsworth."

He turned to go, and Farnsworth did not detain him. As he passed out James Kneeland, the detective, entered, and he gave the departing form a half glance.

"Do you know Hartzell?" said Farnsworth.

"I met him some years ago," responded the detective thoughtfully.

"Has Bailey told you about this game that's been played on me?"

Kneeland nodded and winked his eyes behind his big round spectacles.

"Now, the point of it," said Farnsworth, "is that Hartzell's letter, with the check, was intercepted and opened in this office."

"If it ever came here," said Kneeland.

"I tell you the thing was done here. Checks have been taken from my book. Who could have done that except some one who knows the ropes here?"

"I could have done it," said Kneeland complacently. "A good many people know where you keep that book."

"But the forged indorsement—how do you account for that?"

"Probably traced. You haven't the check, of course?"

"Yes. Hartzell brought it up from his bank. Here it is."

"Hartzell left it here," said the detective. "Well, that's good evidence."

"Evidence?"

"That he didn't do the trick himself."

"I'll tell you who did do it," said Farnsworth. "My nephew did it. It's no trouble for him to forge my name. Ask this young lady here. Is Bob's writing like mine?"

"Remarkably so," said Miss Clarendon calmly.

"Important coincidence," said Kneeland. "Have you got a specimen of his hand? I am tolerably familiar with yours."

"There's a letter from him somewhere here," said Farnsworth.

Miss Clarendon went into the next room and returned immediately with an open letter.

"Here is a sample of Mr. Robert Farnsworth's writing," said she and gave a page to the detective, who read as follows, Farnsworth reading over his shoulder:

"You know he lent me $200 to settle some matters in the west, and I was paying it back at the rate of $10 every Tuesday. I've kept it up since I've been here, and a fierce strain it has been, for I'm getting only eighteen. The most annoying part of it is that my pay day is Tuesday, and I get my money about 2 o'clock. So in order to keep my word to him I have to telegraph the money, and the expense comes right out of my dinner. I have written to him suggesting that I send the amount by mail, but the old mud turtle hasn't opened his shell. So I keep at it. I wouldn't fail if starvation were twice as inconvenient, for he taunted me with that loan when we parted"—

"Telegraphs you money every Tuesday, eh?" said Kneeland, glancing up. "Do you collect it yourself?"

Farnsworth reddened.

"Yes," said he.

"Mr. Robert Farnsworth was here Tuesday morning," said Miss Clarendon, "on an errand for his employers, but he returned in time to get his wages and send the usual remittance to his uncle."

Kneeland was looking dreamily at Hartzell's check, which was unusually large and of a pale greenish hue.

"Give me your signature," said he suddenly, and Farnsworth wrote it on a bit of paper, using a gold mounted stylographic pen which he always carried in his waistcoat pocket. Kneeland compared the signature and the indorsement on the check.

"This is no forgery," said he. "You wrote it yourself, and you did it with that pen. Hold on," he added, silencing Farnsworth with a gesture. "I have an idea."

He put the check in his pocket and left the office without another word.

Presently a messenger came up from the Corn with Farnsworth's used checks. There were among them three to bearer, drawn in a hand unfamiliar to Farnsworth, but signed by him. The numbers showed that these were the three that were taken from the book, signed in blank. The aggregate of the amounts was $4,680.

It was nearly 3 o'clock when Kneeland returned. Miss Clarendon was taking dictation.

"I've got your man," said the detective.

"Where is he?"

"Outside," responded Kneeland.

"Bring him in!"

The detective went out and returned with Bailey Harrow. He was pale, but steady.

"Mr. Farnsworth," said he, "I did this, but I'm no thief. You'd never lose a cent through me. I needed the money for a few days, but I can make it good. It was a borrow, that's what it was, the same as you did with Hartzell's check in April, the one that was to go to Jordan & Co., and we put it through the bank on our own account and told Jordan we hadn't got it. And there was the Thompson matter"—

"We won't go into that," said Farnsworth hastily. "How was this game worked?"

"Bailey has been in a little deal in mining shares," said Kneeland, "quite in the line of high finance, too, and he thinks it will turn out well.

"He had a partner who is a clerk in the telegraph office—in fact, the very same man who has paid you the remittances from your nephew. Bailey is familiar with the machinery of receiving money by telegraph, and it happened to strike him that the green slip which you have to sign and indorse looked just like one of Jacob Hartzell's checks. I happened to think of that while I was sitting here looking at Hartzell's check and hearing about money by telegraph. So I went straight down to the office, found out which of the clerks Bailey was chummy with and frightened the fellow till his complexion resembled the pale sea green paper that has been mentioned. One of my men is with him now, and he gave up a good bit of the money.

"Bailey took Hartzell's check out of the envelope Tuesday morning, a big envelope that will carry the check without folding. He gave the check to the telegraph clerk, and you, Mr. Farnsworth, indorsed it when you thought you were putting your name on the back of that telegraph blank. Bailey stole your checks out of the book. The clerk filled them in and cashed them. He also deposited Hartzell's $4,700 to your order. Now, what shall we do with the men?"

"AN OFFER OF MARRIAGE FROM AN HONEST MAN."

"No arrests, no arrests!" said Farnsworth. And then, "Bailey, how could you do this thing to me?"

Bailey hung his head.

"I'll answer that question," said Miss Clarendon. "For ten years you have trained this young man in dishonesty. You have done to him what the big tricksters of finance have done to you and to ten thousand other men like you till the whole country is poisoned with it. You have made this boy a thief. You tried to make your nephew another, and you couldn't. I have seen this going on, and my soul has sickened at it. Now I am done with it."

"Hold . . !" cried Farnsworth. "Where are you going?"

"I have an offer of marriage from an honest man," said she. "Singularly enough, his name is Farnsworth. He earns $18 a week, and I can do a little better than that, so I think we shall get along nicely. I am going to Pittsfield."

Our Surplus War Expenses Would Reclaim Every Arid Acre.

By Justice DAVID J. BREWER of the United States Supreme Court.

AT the close of our civil war we owed about three billion dollars. In the twenty-five or thirty years following that we paid two-thirds of that debt. Since then, although during the last ten years we have had unexampled prosperity, we have not paid a dollar, and we owe today, as we did at the end of the Spanish war, a billion dollars.

How is this? I wrote to the chairman of the appropriations committee of the house, and he gave me the table from which I copied these figures.

IN THE LAST TEN YEARS THE TOTAL APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE ARMY WERE $819,000,000. OF COURSE I OMIT GIVING ANYTHING BUT ROUND FIGURES. THIS IS EXCLUSIVE OF PENSIONS. FOR THE PRIOR TEN YEARS THE APPROPRIATIONS WERE ONLY $245,000,000. DURING THE LAST TEN YEARS THE APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE NAVY WERE $807,000,000, THE TEN YEARS PRIOR $262,000,000, OR AN EXCESS IN THE APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE ARMY AND NAVY DURING THE LAST TEN YEARS OVER THE PRIOR TEN YEARS OF $1,119,000,000. THAT IS WHY WE HAVE NOT PAID THE NATIONAL DEBT.

In all sincerity I want to ask you IS THIS NATION ANY BETTER with its magnificent fleet of ironclads and its lar r army than it would have been if it had paid its national debt and d today as the one great nation on the face of the earth not owing a dollar?

It costs to fire a single shell out of one of these twelve inch guns as much as will support an ordinary family for a year, and the trouble with Japan at the close of its war with Russia is that it is hampered with a debt that it can hardly carry. Our great secretary of state at Rio de Janeiro pleaded for peace between the nations on this continent.

You may be able to water stock, but you cannot water a debt, even a national debt. The other day our great president called a conference at Washington of governors to consider what could be done to preserve our national resources from destruction.

THE SURPLUS EXCESS OF OUR MILITARY AND NAVAL EXPENDITURE FOR THE LAST TEN YEARS WOULD HAVE RECLAIMED EVERY ARID ACRE WITHIN THE LIMITS OF THIS COUNTRY; WOULD HAVE GIVEN US MAGNIFICENT CANALS STRETCHING FROM THE NORTH TO THE SOUTH.

How is it we have not, when times of peace came, as promptly as possible paid our debts, as we were instructed by our first president?

Every school in the country has its military company. We are all craving for war, and we cannot be craving for war and not have war. I appeal to a higher court and contend that THE PRINCIPLES OF RIGHT AND JUSTICE ARE ETERNAL AND CAN BE DEPENDED ON. We have recently passed a bill through both houses—resolutions, I think—to restore to the coins "In God We Trust." If we can trust him to see that our dollars are paid, I think we can trust him to make good his declarations in the Bible that RIGHTEOUSNESS WILL EXALT THE NATION. At any rate, let us try it once.

One Evil Result of Federal Guarantee of Bank Deposits.

By JAMES B. FORGAN, President First National Bank of Chicago.

IT must be borne in mind that the guaranteeing of deposits in national banks either by the federal government or by a fund in the government's hands for the purpose would disastrously affect state banks, in which are deposited THE GREAT BULK OF ALL THE SAVINGS of the people.

The federal government cannot assume jurisdiction over the state banks, and it surely may be taken for granted that in justice to them no such law affecting national banks would be passed by congress until a similarly sophistical measure was passed in all the state legislatures ostensibly for the benefit, but, as I believe, TO THE DEMORALIZATION OF THE STATE BANKS, the injury of the public and the undoing of the entire business community.

Anything that can be legally and equitably done to protect depositors, to raise the standard of banks and of men in the banking business, to protect the honest against the dishonest banker and to punish those who are dishonest should be enacted into law, and the laws for such purposes cannot be made too rigid.

BUT TO ATTEMPT TO MAKE ALL BANKS EQUALLY SAFE BY PASSING A LAW THAT WOULD ESTABLISH AN ARTIFICIAL CREDIT FOR THE INCOMPETENT AND DISHONEST, ENABLING THEM TO OFFER ALL SORTS OF SPECIOUS INDUCEMENTS TO THE PUBLIC FOR BUSINESS AND THUS CREATING ILLEGITIMATE AND RUINOUS COMPETITION AGAINST SOUND AND CONSERVATIVE BANKERS, WOULD HAVE IN THE LONG RUN CONTRARY AND DISASTROUS RESULTS. THE PROPOSAL IS ABHORRENT TO BUSINESS SENSE AS WELL AS TO JUSTICE AND EQUITY.

Woman Suffrage Will Come Eventually.

By WILLIAM H. TAFT, Secretary of War.

I BELIEVE that WOMAN SUFFRAGE WILL COME EVENTUALLY. I have visited Colorado, Wyoming and Idaho, states where women are now enfranchised, and, although I have not found any particular impression made by women's votes in those places except in temperance matters, still there is one fundamental principle that applies to the whole thing.

Under a representative form of government the interests of any particular set of people are more likely to be advanced when represented by one of themselves than by one of another class, no matter how altruistic the efforts of the latter may be.

The greatest hindrance to woman suffrage, in my opinion, is THE ATTITUDE OF INDIFFERENCE OF SO MANY WOMEN. If most women do not want suffrage they are not represented by those who seek it.

A CONDITION.

As a general proposition and a seldom broken rule
I have very little patience with the poets of this school,
And the usual easy meter, with a "when" in the refrain,
Almost always gives the writer something of a shooting pain.
Still, a certain sort of verse form is the best to suit the case,
And a sestine would be silly if the theme were commonplace;
Hence I say a simple method, so that simply I may couch
In a prosy way the dullness of when Lizzie* has a grouch.

Know you Lizzie* is the servant; also, be it understood,
Like the often mentioned person who when good was very good.
But whenever something ruffles her a misery profound
Seems to permeate the atmosphere for several feet around,
And she sighs and mumbles sadly, and she wears a worried look,
And it seems no whit unlikely we shall lose a jewel cook;
She is careless with the dishes; she's a slattern and a slouch,
Lizzie's* everything unbeautiful when Lizzie* has a grouch.

Free and independent nation, are you shrinking and afraid?
Is the ruler of your domiciles a dull and foreign maid?
Shall she be the house barometer, unfailing every day?
Shall this be the great domestic question: "Lizzie,* will you stay?"
Shall our hearts be happy only when she makes the great decide
That she'll stay another fortnight and she seems well satisfied?
Maybe so. At any rate, for this no housewife but will vouch
That affairs at home are pretty sad when Lizzie* has a grouch.

*Or Annie or Bridget or Hulda or Mary or Sadie.

—Franklin P. Adams in Puck.

The preacher had sent his colored man of all work, Pete, to a butcher whose name was Paul for beef with the promise that he would pay later. This was late Saturday night, and Pete forgot to report until the next day. As he neared the parsonage, which, by the way, was next door to the church, he heard the minister preaching in his pulpit. Just as Pete arrived in front of the church the minister shouted, quoting from his text, "And what did Paul say?" Pete, intent upon delivering his message, replied with an equally loud shout, "He say you don't get no mo' beef till you pay for dat you done got."

THE REPUBLICAN

BENJ. H. SINCELL, EDITOR.

THURSDAY, JULY 9, 1908.

FOR PRESIDENT,

WILLIAM H. TAFT,

OF OHIO.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT,

JAMES S. SHERMAN,

OF NEW YORK,

FOR CONGRESS,

GEORGE A. PEARRE,

OF ALLEGANY COUNTY.

PLAIN MR. TAFT.

Last Wednesday after a public service of twenty-one years William H. Taft became a private citizen. He resigned the post of Secretary of War to free himself from official cares and responsibilities while making his canvass for election to the presidency. Mr. Taft has richly earned a breathing spell, and the comparative rest he will enjoy in the next eight months will fortify him for the exhausting duties which he will be called upon to perform after March 4, 1909.

Mr. Taft quits public office with a record of exceptionally varied and useful achievement. He has been a judge both on the Ohio bench and on the federal bench, and was for a time one of the leading officers in the federal Department of Justice. He has been a pioneer in adjusting the relations of this country to its dependencies. He introduced stable government in the Philippines and helped to bring order out of confusion in the Isthmian Canal Zone. He restored tranquility in Cuba and has acted in many difficult situations as a negotiator and pacificator. His experience in President Roosevelt's Cabinet has extended far beyond the mere administration of the army. He has been intrusted with many tasks, and in none of them has he failed to comprehend the situation or to master all its difficulties. In the prime of life, instructed in all the details of federal administration and in touch with all the policies, domestic and foreign, which the nation is now so successfully pursuing, Mr. Taft does not have to ask the voters to take on trust his qualifications for Chief Magistracy. He has proved his fitness by the most exacting tests from his official labors while the country makes its choice between him and his opponent, between the progressive and capable party which he leads and the divided and incapable Democracy. By a decisive vote next November the nation will call Mr. Taft back to its service. Meanwhile, it wishes him a pleasant and cheerful vacation.

SAVING THE TIMBER.

Timber thoroughly treated with proper preservatives will last almost indefinitely, but, says Harper's Weekly, up to the present time complicated and expensive plants have been necessary for the work, and wood preservation has often been too expensive an operation to allow treated timber to come into general use.

Methods in wood preservation have undergone a marked change in the last few years, however, and the work which a few years ago was limited to a few experiments carried on in scattered parts of the United States has grown with such rapidity that wood preservation has become a business which figures most prominently in the indistrial life of this country.

Each year railroads are preserving an increasing portion of their crossties, miners their mine props, farmers their fence posts and the men of many other industries are bringing preservaties into play to close the pores and to conserve the timber that they use against the fungi that causes decay.

In nearly all localities in the Rocky Mountain and Pacific States is found an abundant supply of certain kinds of timber that have only a slight commercial importance. Englemann spruce, lodgepole and other kinds of wood pine, aspen and cottonwood are only a partial list of the kinds of wood that are strong enough and abundant enough to win high value for construction purposes, but when exposed to the soil and weather decay so rapidly that they have to be renewed too often to justify their use. There, before they can successfully compete with Douglas fir, Oregon ceader and the woods used so extensively in construction work they must be made to last longer under unfavorable conditions.

After several years study the United States Forest Service has proved that in many cases complicated and expensive plants are not necessary for the proper treatment of many kinds of timber, and that many of the timbers that decay most rapidly in the natural state are among the easiest and cheaper to treat. Many of the species mentioned above offer little resistance to the entrance of the preservative. The principle of the method is to immerse the thoroughly seasoned wood in a hot bath of the liquid, leave it in for a few hours, and than either plunge it into a cold preservative bath or elso run out the hot liquid from the treating tank and fill it up again with liquid of a lower temperature. This requires only the simplest kind of machinery, and the cost of operation is so slight that even cheap timbers, such as fence post and shingles, can be treated by the average farmer of small means.

In order to demonstrate beyond any doubt that the process is adapted to commercial treatment the service has arranged to erect small treating plants, semi-commercial in size, on several of the national forests. Three such plants will be erected next spring and it is expected that they will be in successful operation by early summer. According to the present plans will be erected at some locality on or near the Black Hills National Forest, South Dakota; another on the Holy Cross National Forest, in Colorado, and the third on the Henry's Lake National Forest, near St. Anthony, Idaho.

BRYAN RULES THE CONVENTION.

Denver is in a heyday of delight. It has ideal weather, with snow in the streets, transported from the mountains for the pleasure of the guests of the city. It ha crowds; it has enthusiasm. All these things are accessories to the Democratic convention. The first day's session found the machinery all greased for the workings of the body and the militant factions with their war paint on. The Marylanders—those of the delegation opposed to Bryan—seem to to have the fatuity of fighting against the wind. But there are indications that when the Bryan breeze develops cyclonic proportions the recalcitrants will climb nimbly down from their independence perches.

An assumption of independence or "kicking" by some people is the one guarantee of getting noticed at all. No one would, of course, suspect Marylanders of kicking simply to raise the dust; but the fact is that thereby some of the Baltimore leaders have figured in the first day's dispatches a bit more prominently than they are likely to when the currying process goes a step or two further.

The convention has ginger, and likewise there will be some snappish times, judging from the ominous portents. But Bryan is blissful. He is in the saddle and riding bareback over the Denver course to the delirious delight of his followers. Parker has trailed his banner in the dust, and others are preparing to do likewise. So the cowboy band plays merrily, the trained claquers are drilling their yells for the hour-long acclaim to the man who exemplifies Democracy in his person. Ex-President Cleveland has been given fitting tribute according to the Nebraska idea, rather than that of New York. They who think the world is all sunshine because a ray strays into their lattice window are fully persuaded that harmony is rampant in the convention. It was a beautiful day at Denver and the convention was arrayed simply in a smile—the expansive smile of William Jennings Bryan.

CALL OF THE WILD.

A vacation for pleasure is one thing; a vacation for rest and recuperation is another. The man who is bent on pleasure may be left to his own devices, but the man to whom vacation time is an opportunity to recuperate from killing toil should use discretion. Rest is what he needs, but this rest should not be absolute inaction. Change is a great factor in relaxation and rest. There is an instinctive longing for some hing which the daily life does not furnish. In making this change it often is not wise to choose the strenuous, yet there should be enough of the unusual to take the mind far from the troubles that are left at home. What is the change that appeals most is known to each man himself, but certain it is that a change of some kind is within the reach of most of us. And in deciding let us remember that the right kind of vacation is a godsend, and the wrong kind often worse that none.

Let us also remember that on our part are certain obligations that obtain no less in the wild than in the midst of civilization. We must give the fish and the game a fair chance for life, else we sink to the level of the market hunter.

We must kill no more than we need, else we become butchers rather than sportsmen. We must set no forest fires, else we become guilty of the crime unspeakable. Finally, let us remember that the spiritual men needs nature's cure often quite as much as the physical man. In the Silent Places there is opportunity profitable communion with self and a casting up of accounts. The solitude and the open air and the sunshine teach many a lesson that the city has scant time to listen to; ofttimes the Call of the Wild is a call to higher and better things.

SERIOUS CUTTING AFFRAY AT DODSON

In Which Two Slavs Carve a Fellow Countryman With Knives.

Last Saturday at Dodson, a mining town located on the Potomac River in Election District No. 13, this county, two Slavs, employed as miners by a mining company operating at or near that town, got into a quarrel with a fellow-countryman and assaulted him with knives, cutting him very badly and it is feared fatally about the abdomen and head.

The two men who made the assault were arrested Sunday and sent to jail in Oakland by Justice of the Peace Albert L. Lee, of Kitzmiller.

The wounded Slav has been in an unconscious state since Monday as a result of the encounter and yesterday in was reported that the chances of his recovery were exceedingly doubtful.

HOYES.

Independence Day was a quiet one at Hoyes, but a large number of our people spent the day at Accident, joining our sister village in the celebration.

Among the students and teachers who have returned home for the summer vacation are the following: Miss Ethel Welch, of Western Maryland College; Miss Elizabeth Welch, Miss Artie Friend and Messrs. N. K. Welch, O. B. Lowdermilk, W. E. Bishoff, D. Earle Smith, S. K. Welch and Harry Lowdermilk, of the Oakland Training School; Miss Bernadette Mattingly of Villa Maria College, of West Chester, Pa.

Alvin Lowdermilk, who is engaged in the real estate business at Greensburg, Pa., is spending a few days with his parents here. He is accompanied by his cousin, Miss Anna Koontz, who will remain here for a few weeks visiting and regaining her health.

Misses Hazel and Mary Poland, of Westernport, are visiting friends here at this time.

Mr. H. R. DeWitt spent his Fourth at Terra Alta.

Miss Sadie Friend is paying a visit to relatives at Mt. Lake Park.

Messrs Asa and Harry Speicher, of Armistead, spent Sunday and Monday at the home of Mr. Geo. E. Bishoff.

Mr. Ren. Smith, of Belair, O., is visiting his brother, Mr W. A. Smith, of this place.

Mr. Joseph DeWitt and a lady friend of Landstreet, Pa., were with us to spend the Fourth.

Mr. Geo. E. Bishoff has just returned frow a visit of a few days at Kingwood, W. Va.

Messrs. Wm. Frazee and T. H. Cuppett made a business trip to Oakland last week.

Mr. Guy Harvey, of Kearney, was calling on friends here Saturday and Sunday.

We are sorry to note the illness of Mrs. W. A. Smith, who has been confined to her bed for several days.

There was a combination of a children's day practice and a party at the home of Mr. Asa B. Friend Tuesday evening. The children are being trained for the Children's Day exercises to be given Sunday evening July 19th.

It was a happy band of fishers that went down over Chestnut Lump on a haywagon to the Youghogheny river on Monday for a day of outing. The day seemed to be an ideal one and many were the thrilling adventures described by members of the party on their return. The only difficulty seems to be in distinguishing between the fish stories and the real facts in the case. Owing to the fact thet the party consisted of thirteen people, of course the anglers were not expected to be so successful in bringing home a large supply of fish. The superstition of the unlucky thirteen held good in this instance.

BITTINGER.

The juvenile picnic held in Ellithorp's grove on the Fourth, under the management of Mrs. T. B. Wiley, was an occasion of much pleasure for the little folks.

Miss Myrtle Wiley, of Cumberland, is spending a few days at her home near this place.

A very refreshing and much needed rain fell in this section last Monday afternoon.

Amos H. Reckner and family drove over to Confluence, Pa., to celebrate the Fourth and spent a few days with relatives in that section.

The teachers who attended the preparatory at Oakland are home again and seem glad of it.

Asa Bittinger purchased a handsome buggy last week and now all the young ladies have an eye on "Jimmy."

The Lutheran congregation at this place is arranging to have a grand picnic at the usual place on Saturday, Aug. 8th, and the installation of Rev. Alvin Yugle will occur on Sunday, Avg. 9th.

Clever Brenneman is spending a few days with his parents at this place.

The first automobiles seen in this section this season passed through this village last week.

Blank Books of all kinds for sale at this office at a remarkably low price. Give us a call when needing anything in this line.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

It is painfully apparent to all and especially to those who feel a deep interest in Mountain Lake Park and all for which it stands that we are not progressing, and many even claim we are losing ground from year to year as a summer resort. We should look at this matter fairly, deliberately and with the purpose of trying to find where the trouble is and then, all together, seek a remedy. Is it in our form of local government? Is it a lack of sympathy and co-operation on the part of the cottage owners and residents? Is the management on the part of the Association in the interest of all concerned? These questions should have our earnest consideration. It is a fact that values are shrinking, rents are being lowered year after year and hotels and cottages are going to decay and ruin. Should we shut our eyes, close our mouths and let this magnificent "City in the Woods" go to decay and death? If the camp meeting can be improved let it be done, though it hurt some one. Is the Chautauqua all that it should and could be? If not let us all try to make it so. Have we modern hotel accommodations for a great summer resort, as Mountain Lake Park should be in fact as well as in name? These suggestions are not made by a pessimist or a grumbler, but by one who has invested several thousands of dollars in the Park and has its success at heart. We are sorry that it is necessary to bring this matter before the public, but we feel that it is the right thing to do. Sometimes it takes a considerable "jar" to awaken some people to a sense of surrounding conditions, but when they become aroused are ready to apply the remedy. We hope that may be the case in this matter of the utmost importance to every one having the best interests of Mountain Lake Park at heart.

We still have some croakers and prophets of evil in our midst. For the past ten years, year after year, we are made tired by the old song: "There are not as many people here as were here last year," and "we don't have as good preaching as in the past," etc. The greatest trouble with some of our good people is that they havn't the appetite for preaching that they had in former years. We suggest to them that they go to the altar and stay there till they get right with God and then they will realize that the trouble was not in the preacher or the preaching.

The camp meeting started, as usual, where it left off last year. The attendance the first day was not so large, being the 4th of July, with other nearby celebrations, and on Sunday the rain prevented many from attending, but Sunday night, notwithstanding the threatening weather, the tabernacle was well filled. The meeting Monday night was one of great power. After an unusually strong sermon by Rev. Hyde the altar was filled by seekers for pardon and purity, nearly all of whom left at the close of the meeting praising God. A large majority of those at the altar were Garrett countians.

Next Sunday the usual great crowd is expected, when the platform will be occupied by some of the greatest and most eloquent preachers in this country.

Among those attending the meeting we notice quite a number from Bond, this county, and they are being blessed and helped by the meeting, and will go back home to be a blessing to the church at Bond.

Dr. and Mrs. Laughlin, of Deer Park, were here Sunday.

Dr. P. B. Ward was at the meeting Monday night.

Rev. H E Friend came up Monday and will remain until the close of the meeting.

Revs. M. W. Rider and W. E. Dean are attending the camp meeting.

NORTH GLADE.

Rev. J. H. Fitzwater, D. D., Field Secretary of the Board of Home Mission and Church Extension of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was here a couple of days last week visiting his relatives and the place of his birth. Doctor Fitzwater was born more than fifty years ago on a farm where George O'Brien, Esq., now resides. Part of the old house in which he was born is still standing. He is a first cousin of Judge J. L. Fitzwater of this place, where he was mostly kindly entertained while here. He also visited ex-Judge R. Beckman and his son Archibal. The Doctor preached an excellent sermon to a large and an appreciative audience in the Methodist church on Monday evening.

Our old friend, Wm. White, Esq., residing near Oakland, and an uncle of the Doctor, visited us at the same time.

Hon. C. M. Miller, of Swanton, gave us a splendid temperance address on Sunday night of last week.

We are glad to see Joseph Beckman, who was seriously and almost fatally hurt recently by a pile of lumber falling on him, able to go around again.

We are sorry to learn that Salem Lee contemplates leaving us soon. There are many "undesirable citizens" in many places, but Mr. Lee is not one of that number.

Our community was shocked by the sad death of our neighbor's boy Joseph Lee notice of which appeared in THE REPUBLICAN of last week. The relatives have our sympathy.

The Fourth passed off quietly here. A number of our young people went elsewhere, some east, some West, some north and some south, and it is reported that some went over into matrimony.

Farmers are beginning to harvest. Owing to the dry weather grass in generally light, and much fear is entertained in regard to the oats crop.

FRIENDSVILLE.

Mrs. Geo. B. Frazee and daughter, of Somerfield, Pa., spent Sunday with friends here.

Mr. and Mrs. Stotler and family and Miss Iva McCullough are spending the week in Johnstown, Pa., with friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Corbett, of Carnegie, Pa., spent Sunday with Dr. Mason and family

Mrs. Walter Savage is visiting friends in Mt. Lake Park.

Master Carl Schultz, who has been quite ill for a couple of weeks, is much improved.

Quite a number of our townspeople spent the 4th of July at Addison, Pa., where they report having a good time. Accident was also visited by quite a large number of our people.

Mr. Nelson Alsip took the excursion to Cumberland Sunday morning returning Tuesday noon.

Mr. and Mrs. R. C. McCandlish gave a house party on July 4th, among the guests being Mr. G. W. Martin, superintendent of the Washington Terminal, who arrived in Friendsville in a private car, accompanied by Mrs. Martin and their daughter Margaret; Mr. William Johnson, superintendent of the United States Express Company at Washington; Mr. Robert Farham, chief engineer of the Washington Terminal; Misses Margaret and Jennie Moore, of Fairfax, Va.; Miss Emma Martin, of Brunswick, Mr. and Mrs. U. B. McCandlish and daughter Ruth, of Westernport. On Friday the car in which the party arrived was taken with its occupants to Kendall and from that point, by courtesy of the Kenda l Lumber Company, a car and engine on the narrow gauge railway took the party up the river where they fished for bass. On Saturday Mr. and Mrs. McCandlish gave their guests a hay ride to Hoyes where they were entertained at the home of Mr. M. Mattingly, returning to Friendsville the same evening when a magnificent display of fire works, brought from Washton by Mr. Johnson, occurred.

Will Meet at Keyser.

F. T. Martin, of Grafton, has issued a call for the Democratic Congressional convention for the second congressional district which will be held in Keyser on Tuesday, July 14, at 10 a. m.

TRUSTEE'S SALE OF Valuable Farm

Located about one mile Northeast of Friendsville, Garrett County.

By virtue of a Decree of the Circuit Court for Garrett county passed in a cause in said court wherein Silas Teats is complainant and Allen Teats and others are defendants, being No. 1321 Equity, the undersigned Trustee will, on Saturday, the 18th Day of July,

1908, in front of the Postoffice, in the town of Friendsville, at the hour of 2 o'clock p. m. of said day, offer at public auction to the highest bidder, all that farm located about one mile Northeast of the town of Friendsville, Garrett county, Maryland, which is known as the

and described as follows:

FIRST—All that part of a tract of land called the "Gleanings," lying North of Bear Creek, containing the quantity of fifty acres of land and being the same land which was conveyed to Andrew Jackson Teats by deed from David P. Mays et ux., dated the 27th day of September 1884, and recorded in Liber W. H. T. No. 9, folio 472, etc., one of the Land Records of Garrett county. Part of said fifty acres is cleared and under cultivation.

SECOND—All that other part of a tract of land called the "Gleanings," situated and adjoining the above piece of land, containing the quantity of fifty acres of land and being the same which was conveyed to the said Andrew Jackson Teats by deed from Silas Teats et ux., dated the 1st day of August 1885, and recorded in Liber W. H. T. No. 10, folio 482, etc., one of the Land Records of Garrett county, saving and excepting ten acres of land which was conveyed to the said Andrew Jackson Teats et ux., to Amanda Schroyer by deed dated the 25th day of January, 1899, and duly recorded in Liber E. Z. T. No. 15, folio 662, etc., Land Records of Garrett county. This second piece is partly cleared and under cultivation and improved by a good dwelling and outbuildings.

Said property will first be offered separately and if no adequate bids are received it will be offered as a whole, and is a beautiful farm for any one desiring to purchase.

Said property will be sold subject to the dower of the widow of Andrew Jackson Teats, Anastatia Teats.

Terms of sale as prescribed by the Decree: Cash on day of sale or the ratification thereof by the court.

As mail-carrier to Grantsville Frank Plaff is 3 years old, and some friends who understand multiplication figured out the other day that he has in that time traveled 25,850 miles, or several miles more than around the world at its biggest circumference.—Frostburg Journal

Messrs. J. B. Frantz, John J. Sweeney, Perry Frantz, W. H. Bartlett, Snyder Frantz, S. B. Aronholt and Leslie King, prominent young men of Oakland, spent last evening in Cumberland. From this point they took a tallyho drive to Frostburg.—Cumberland News.

A young married man wanted with no children or a very small family; the wife to do the cooking for four men, the man to work by the year or month; house ready till July. Write at once; reference wanted. C. J. Yoder, Grantsville, Md. 11-3t

The lumber plant at Bond, Md., closed down on July 1st until the first week in August. The men usually have two weeks' holiday during the summer, and as orders were slack it was concluded to closed the plant. However, all the men will be given some kind of work in the woods and yards until active operations are resumed.

Mr. George W. Legge, Jr., who recently graduated from the law department of the University of Maryland, left Oakland on last Thursday for Washington to accept a position as special attorney in the United States Court of Claims. The young gentleman starts in his new position with a salary upwards of $2000 per year.

Mr. Gilmor S. Hamill, of Oakland, one of the Maryland delegates to the Democratic convention now in session at Denver, Col., left here for that point on last Friday. At Chicago he attached himself to the rest of the Maryland delegation they having gone via the Pennsylvania Railroad to that city. Mr. Hamill was accompanied by Mrs. Hamill.

Patrick Hoye, of Garrett county, in town last Saturday, looked a little discouraged concerning the promised improvement of the National Pike, and "at any rate," he said, "I don't intend to buy an automobile to ride over to town in. I am going to get an air-ship, and on my first voyage I am going to bring the Journal a loaf of smearcase."—Frostburg Journal.

In the columnn of this paper today will be noticed a number of very interesting and news conveying local letters from different sections of the county. Such items as are contained in the letters are interesting to our readers and are a source of gratification to the editor, knowing that the corps of correspondents are on the lookout for news and not for neighborhood gossisp.

Once again that age-long conflict between the real and the ideal. We are told that the author of "How to keep a Husband" lost hers in ten minutes through the medium of a divorce court. About the only likeness between poetry and husband is that they both have feet, but it is still a problem how to keep the pedal extremities of the latter at the domestic fireside. Poetry, on the contrary, has a tendency to gravitate toward the hearth, most frequently, so the poets themselves aver, via the editorial waste basket.

Joseph Skipper, son of Thomas Skipper, of near Oakland, gave evidence recently the he was of unsound mind and was committed to jail one day last week by Justice Teats upon a technical charge. Since the young man was committed to jail he has been at times extremely wild. Tuesday his condition was very bad, but yesterday he was somewhat improved. Unless he shows a greater improvement within the next few days a jury to enquire into his sanity will be empaneled by Sheriff Austin Brown and if he is found to be of unsound mind he will be committed to a hospital for treatment.

Mr. D. E. Bolden, the furniture dealer and undertaker, was taken ill last Wednesday night after his return home from his place of business. His condition was such as to create alarm among his family and friends, Mr. Bolden's arm and leg being numb, indicating the approach of a stroke of paralysis. His physician being hastily summoned he was ordered to bed, since which time he has been confined to his home, with recurring attacks of numbness but each attack growing less severe. Mr. Bolden's many friends in Oakland hope for his speedy and complete recovery.

The Ferndale Baptist church, under the ministry of Rev. C. W. Hudson, is one of the rising church organizations of Garrett county. It is only a year old, and for want of a church edifice the congregation worships in a tent. Mr. E. Glenn Perine, of Baltimore, has donated a piece of land for a new church and the members of the church are raising funds for a building. They are in earnest and should succeed. A church supper given in the tent on the 4th of July yielded a handsome sum, and the ladies did good work. They raised some money and everybody who ate the good things went away fully satisfied. A number of people from Deer Park participated in the event. Miss Jessie McCubbin, of Mt. Washington, Baltimore county, and Misses Helen Jordan and Helen Morse, of Philadelphia, were present.

Maj. Willey O. Ison, of Washington, D. C., was among his many friends in Oakland and Mt. Lake Park last week.

NOTICE TO OLD CITIZENS.

Volunteer Pilots Wanted to Help Show Valuable Mineral Deposits.

We have invited capitalists and manufacturers to come amongst us all and inspect the coal, iron ore, fire clay, lime, building stone, and other valuable mineral deposits that are scattered throughout the Upper Youghiogheny valley, and its tributaries all the way from Oakland down to the Pennsylvania State line.

We need the assistance of volunteer pilots in all sections of this immense valley to help show what we have got, hidden under the ground, in Garrett county, that needs developing.

We can't do everything ourselves, single handed and alone, nor be in more than one place at a time.

It only costs a few cents to write and send samples of minerals, either by mail or messenger, telling us what they know, (and "tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth") and where they can be heard by 'phone if needed, as pilots to capitalists.

It may be worth hundreds of dollars to each of you in the very near future.

Attorney R. T. Semmes of Cumberland, told us during Court, that while trout fishing in Mill run, several years ago, that somebody pointed out to him a large continuous vein of very rich iron ore cropping out near to the site of the Old Peter McCleary Woolen Mill, near the Pennsylvania State line. Won't some citizen of that locality kindly volunteer to pilot such capitalists as we may send to them, and write to us stating where we can catch their ears by telephone.

We need volunteeer pilots or guides, at once in all sections.

Whenever you come to Oakland don't fail to bring samples of every valuable mineral to be found in your neighborhood, and leave them at our office in room 14, First National Bank Building, where they will be systematically arranged for exhibition, with your name affixed to them.

Please write soon as you see this notice, and the "Notice to Capitalists" preceeding it, and tell us everything you know and where you can be found.

Yours truly,
H. P. TASKER,
Gen'l Mgr.

Oakland Takes Double Header.

Eight hundred people saw Oakland take two games from Terra Alta at Terra Alta Saturday, the first by 7 to 2 and the second by 7 to 5. Batteries, first game, Oakland, Brown and Dawson; Terra Alta, Dunn and Fraley; second, Oakland, Boyle, Brown and Dawson; Terra Alta, Killen and Fraley. The pitching of Brown and Boyle was a feature. The Oakland fans are very jubilant over the success of their team.

KODAK SAFETY FILM

A QUESTION OF TIME.

By Clarissa Mackie.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

A night in India—humid, breathless, with great stars hanging in the dark blue sky and the dank odor of rotting vegetation from the nearby jungle.

From his seat in a bamboo reclining chair Welton stared unwinkingly at the blazing constellations. The punka boy had fallen into exhausted slumber on the mat, and the huge fan hung motionless overhead.

Welton could hear the low murmur of voices from the interior of the bungalow, and he knew that by slightly turning his head he could see the pink glow of light from the shaded lamp and the reflection of two faces in the large mirror in the corner.

The two forms leaned over the piano, the white fingers of Marion Lester drawing soft harmonies from the instrument, while Akerslie murmured tenderly in her pretty ear.

And it was because of these two at the piano that Welton was very miserable and stared at the stars. He knew that Mrs. Lester was nodding over her embroidery in some obscure corner of the room, and as for himself—well, he seemed not to be in it at all!

Colonel Lester was quartered at Lucknow, and when it was learned that Welton could not obtain the desired leave of absence to visit his sweetheart Mrs. Lester had good naturedly undertaken the journey to Welton's isolated station at Gola Chat.

The unexpected visit of the two women had thrown the little station into a blissful confusion of preparation. The depredations of a man eating tiger had furnished an inexhaustible source of conversation and had been the occasion for many tentative trips into the jungle for several weeks before the advent of the visitors, but now all was forgotten save the fact that there would be new faces to break the dead monotony of the days—the fresh faces and low toned voices of refined Englishwomen.

And then Akerslie had stepped in and spoiled it all. He had come up to see Welton and to try pot shots at the man eater, but he had met Marion Lester, and in spite of the fact that he was Welton's guest and that he knew the relatons existing between the two he paid assiduous court to the girl.

Thus far she had repelled his advances with a dignified coolness that seemed to inflame him to greater ardor. This evening, however, the gentleness of her manner toward him and her careless treatment of her lover had driven the latter to sulky solitude in the veranda.

When the blue smoke wreaths from

"WERE YOU REALLY ASLEEP, BILLY?"

his cigar had formed a dense cloud which obliterated the starry heavens from his gaze Welton dropped his eyes and stared at two points of yellow light that oscillated near the ground.

They were ten inches apart, and they moved in unison. Welton calculated that they must be just without the bamboo stockade which inclosed the compound.

There was a prickly feeling along the spine, and he could feel the hair raising slightly around his forehead as he realized that Chuni had neglected to close the great gate and that there was perhaps only a hundred feet intervening between the man eater and the open window of the little drawing room.

He thought rapidly, with his eyes fixed on the lambent points of flame in the velvet gloom of the gateway. If he made a dash for the window and the safety that lay beyond the beast would spring before he could close the shutters behind his retreating form. If he could make Akerslie hear, at least the women would be safe.

"Akerslie!" he called in a low, clear whisper.

"Yes!" came the other man's lazy tones.

"Close these shutters instantly! The man eater"— His words were lost in the quick manipulation of the iron rods from within, and the shutters fell with a clang, blotting out the glow of light and leaving Welton alone to face the tiger.

The momentary confusion roused the beast into action. Welton could see the slow approach of the yellow eyes, could hear the padding of the great paws on the sandy path, and now his long sinuous form was dimly outlined in the starlight.

Welton remembered that he had left his revolver on his dressing stand. It could not be much of a fight with all the odds on the other side. At any rate, when the tiger had borne him away to his lair Akerslie, the coward—

Suddenly there was a terrific roar, a stifling odor of fur. Welton's hand instinctively flew to his pocket, and to his surprise the revolver was there. There was a sharp crack at one of the yellow spots of light and a rush of air as the beast sprang toward him. He dropped to the floor, and with a tremendous thud the animal struck the closed shutters and bounded back with a bloodcurdling scream of baffled rage and pain.

Welton had leaped over the railing and slipped behind the protecting trunk of a giant teak. The animal snuffed about the veranda, and presently there was a cry of startled fright, and Welton remembered the sleeping punka boy. He saw the tiger stepping down the path, his jaws gripping a dark, moaning bundle.

He knew that, unmolested, the beast would now retire to the jungle with his victim and that the occupants of the bungalow as well as himself would be free from danger. He ground his teeth and aimed for the other eye. He put it out.

In the light of the stars he saw the beast shiver, drop the dark bundle, which sped affrightedly away, and then come toward him with bleeding, blinded eyes and snarling mouth.

It was only a question of time now. Around the tree he dodged, and then farther away from the house toward the stockade. He would lure the beast from the vicinity of the bungalow and fight it out with him in the open space before the jungle, which rose dark and forbidding in the background. One would win out, and the other—

Again he heard the crack of his revolver, and yet again, and still the beast did not fall. Still he tracked the man blindly, remorselessly. There were two cartridges left in the chamber, and then—again Welton fired, once, twice. With a shudder, he felt something soft on his cheek.

"By Jove! Billy seems a bit sleepy! Wake up and hear the news, old man!"

Welton recognized the facetious tone of Akerslie, his faithless friend. He opened his eyes slowly, wonderfully. Overhead the great stars were hanging in the dark blue sky, and there was a rank odor of rotting vegetation from the nearby jungle.

He was reclining in the bamboo chair, and Marion stood behind him with her soft hand upon his rumpled hair. There was a glow of lamplight from the open window of the drawing room, and in the opposite direction he could see that the gate of the compound was closed.

"The—man eater?" he asked dazedly, moving his cramped limbs.

"What made you think of that?" asked Akerslie ruefully. "I was just going to spring it on you! Chuni—the brave, the incomparable Chuni—has slain the man eater just without the stockade! Look!"

Welton rose stiffly to his feet and looked sheepishly at the flaming torches and the crowd of brown skinned natives who were triumphantly dragging the huge carcass through the gateway. Chuni, proud and victorious, salaamed before his master. "For the honorable sahib," he said solemnly.

A little later Marion bade her lover good night. "What do you think, Billy?" she murmured softly, with a side glance at the stalwart form of Akerslie. "Major Akerslie has been telling me about his engagement to Marjorie Booth—a dear schoolmate of mine—and I'm afraid we were so much interested in talking about her that we forgot you! Were you really asleep, Billy?"

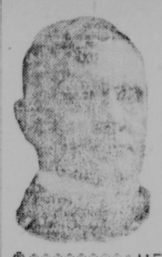
"I hope so," said Billy impressively.

The Glory of Life.

The human race is still in its infancy. Up to the present moment, with a few grand exceptions, man has lived mostly an animal existence. The brute is only partially educated out of him. He has not yet evolved that superb character, that diviner man, foreshadowed in the beast. How few people ever get anything more than a mere glimpse of the true glory of life! Few of us see any real sentiment in life or anything above the real animal existence and animal pleasures. Most of us look upon our occupation as a disagreeable necessity that somehow or other ought to have been and might have been avoided. The trouble with many of us is that we think too meanly of ourselves. Our sordid aims and material, selfish ambitions have so lowered our standards that we think downward instead of upward; we grovel instead of soaring. Our lives are materialistic, selfish, greedy, because we live in the base of our brains, down among the brute faculties. We have never explored to any great extent the upper regions of our brain, never developed our higher intelligence.—Success Magazine.

A Courteous Pirate.

That even a Chinese pirate may have a strong idea of chivalry is proved by the following excerpt from an item in the North China Daily News: "The launch at once stopped when ordered to do so. The leader of the pirates was then heard to order his men that they were not to molest any one on board who voluntarily handed over his or her valuables. Among the passengers, however, were a father and son, the latter of whom, it seemed, was a little too slow in obeying the pirates' order to hand over his money, with the result that he was shot. Upon hearing the shot the pirate chief, who was on deck, came down into the cabin and, seeing the father of the unlucky young man lamenting over his son's death, addressed the old man and condoled with him on his son's unfortunate and 'undeserved' death. The chief finally brought out of his pocket a roll of $50 and handed the sum to the old man as a solatium, bidding him to refrain from further lamentations."



Urgent Need of Currency Legislation.

By Representative CHARLES N. FOWLER, Chairman of the House Committee on Banking and Currency.

THERE CERTAINLY SHOULD BE SOME REMEDIAL FINANCIAL LEGISLATION, AND I CAN ASSURE YOU THAT THE MEMBERS OF THE COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY WILL BEND THEIR ENERGIES TO THAT END. WHAT WE SHALL BE ABLE TO ACCOMPLISH NO MAN CAN ANSWER. BUT THAT THERE IS URGENT NEED FOR HELP NO MAN CAN DENY.

If this government continues its present policy of injecting into the arteries of trade and comerce a fixed bond secured currency—by exchanging securities, by bond speculation, by treasury manipulation, by executive order or by any other form of THIMBLE-RIGGING—we shall continue to move, but with greatly accelerated speed, toward a commercial crisis COMPARED WITH WHICH THE PRESENT PANIC IS ONLY A PLEASANT SUMMER OUTING.

Our recent condition has been one of REAL PROSPERITY. Our crops are worth about $7,000,000,000, the products of our mines about $1,400,000,000, manufactured products about $17,000,000,000, a total of $25,000,000,000.

Meanwhile we have had the advantage of an extraordinary consumption of foodstuffs as a result of the Russo-Japanese war, the disturbed condition of Russia has led to a reduced wheat acreage there, a food scarcity prevails abroad, and consequently we are enjoying EXCEPTIONALLY HIGH PRICES. If all this were not true, but, on the other hand, our business conditions had been bad, our crops poor and foreign prices low, IMAGINE WHAT WOULD HAVE TRANSPIRED!

Notwithstanding all this and wholly because of the maladministration of our finances we are in a state of PANIC.

We have today in the banks of this country about $12,000,000,000 of deposits and about the same amount of outstanding loans. Against this fabulous sum the banks hold as reserve about $900,000,000, or LESS THAN 8 PER CENT. And even of this 8 per cent reserve nearly one-quarter, $200,000,000, is in bank notes—a mere credit, a mere promise to pay.

Stating it in another way, the reserves held against $2,500,000,000 of our bank deposits in the United States today are bank notes and not gold, which is admittedly the ONLY PROPER RESERVE in any country with a gold standard.

YET IF WE CONTINUE OUR PRESENT POLICY WHERE IS IT GOING TO END? HOW LONG WILL IT BE BEFORE ALL OF OUR BANK DEPOSITS WILL REST UPON CREDIT RESERVES? THIS IS OBVIOUSLY THE WORST AND WILDEST FORM OF INFLATION.

Yet it is rumored that sheer madness is to follow in a scheme now being wrought out to add to this already OVERWHELMING burden another load in the form of state, municipal and railroad bonds as the basis of our bank currency liability. No one who has studied this question doubts that all of our reserves, whether for deposits or any other form of bank liability, including bank notes, should be gold.

The World Is Growing Better.

By ANDREW CARNEGIE.

THE THING THAT COMES OFTENEST TO MY MIND AS I LOOK OUT ON LIFE IS THE UNQUESTIONABLE EVIDENCE THAT THE WORLD IS GROWING BETTER. AS I GO FROM PLACE TO PLACE, RETURNING TO SCENES I HAD KNOWN BEFORE, I FIND IMPROVEMENT IN EVERY CASE. MEN ARE MORE KINDLY DISPOSED, MORE CHARITABLE, MORE SOLICITOUS FOR OTHERS, LESS SELFISH.

The outlook of men is BROADENING EVERYWHERE; their capability of sympathy is expanding; their SENSE OF DUTY TO OTHERS and responsibility for others is growing more acute. Man becomes more and more his brother's keeper.

There is much I don't understand. I can't see why a good OMNIPOTENT power should allow suffering, why he allows poverty, sickness and sin. It isn't clear to me why he allows men to have still such dreadful delusions that it is necessary for some of them to kill some others in the SAVAGERY OF WAR. Oh, there are many things I can't understand!

In particular I don't at all understand the MYSTERIOUS LAW OF EVOLUTION according to which the higher forms of life live upon the lower, RISING THROUGH SLAUGHTER AND EXTINCTION. That is profoundly, tragically obscure and perplexing, but we must accept and bow our heads and murmur to universal law, "Thy will be done."

But I still rest satisfied that THIS IS A GOOD WORLD because it is unceasingly becoming a BETTER world. "ALL IS WELL SINCE ALL GROWS BETTER"—that is the foundation of my philosophy of life and the world. It is the motto of my life.

The Jap Is an "Undesirable Citizen."

By WILLIAM H. LANGDON, District Attorney of San Francisco.

CALIFORNIA'S delegates to both national conventions will raise their voices strongly in favor of the EXCLUSION OF THE JAPANESE from the United States. They may even demand planks in their platforms dealing with that issue as a necessity.

THE JAP IS AN UNDESIRABLE CITIZEN. HE HAS BEEN TRIED AND FOUND WANTING. IF IT WERE A CHOICE BETWEEN ADMITTING JAPANESE OR CHINESE TO THIS COUNTRY, THE PEOPLE OF CALIFORNIA WOULD WELCOME THE CHINESE.

The Japs are tricky, dishonest and do not know their place. It is NOT A CASE OF IMPASSIONED RACE PREJUDICE with the Californians. They know their ground, and they have given the Japs a FAIR TRIAL. If the east knew as much about them as the Pacific slope does it would have exactly the same view.

MORE TRAMP TALKS.

Why the Dilapidated Gentleman Likes His Profession.

"THERE'S GOOD LIVING IN IT"

"Cities and Villages Are Overcrowded and the Man Who Butts In Has Little Chance of Success," He Declares in an Interview.

[Copyright, 1908.]

"Why don't I give it up and settle down in city or village and become a respectable member of the community?" echoed the dilapidated gentleman as he pocketed his usual fee. "I have been asked that question a thousand times, it seems to me, and my answer has always been the same. I tramp as a profession, and I stand at the head of it. I like it. There's a good living in it. I come in contact with human nature at every turn. I am respectable as it is. The cities and villages are overcrowded, and the man who butts in has little chance of success. I have less to worry about and sleep more soundly than any business man in America. You newspaper fellers think you know it all, but you'd take a drop to yourselves if you were on the tramp for a month. You'd see more human nature with the bark on in that time than you can find on the east side in New York in five years.

"THE FARMER'S WIFE WOULD HAVE CALLED YOU."

"Say, now," continued the man, "can you name me one single newspaper in the state of New York that felt sure of Roosevelt's election as governor? No; you can't. I hit his majority within 2,000. Why? Because I was among the people and knew how they talked. Plenty of politicians and newspapers said he'd be elected as president when he ran, but no man or no newspaper came within a thousand miles of the popular majority. I don't say that I hit it, but I could have given pointers to a hundred editors.

"Before the next national convention of either party meets I'll have tramped over three or four states, and I'll be ready to wager my life against a nickel that I can name the victorious candidate. I'll wager that I can predict it far closer than any newspaper in the land. If you want to know what this country is thinking about, my boy, don't box yourself up in a sanctum and read a few exchanges. Get out and rub elbows with the people. It isn't the few big cities that settle the great political questions. It's the farmer and the villager, and they come pretty near being dead right every time. When I had tramped across seven counties of New York state, I shouted for Hughes. A politician in Syracuse who heard me had me thrown out of a meeting and wanted the police to arrest me. I heard that he had a bet of $5,000 on another candidate and was predicting Hughes' defeat by 50,000. But enough of this. I'll switch off and tell you something that has hurt me for the last three or four years.

"Do you know that a few men comparatively have almost changed the nature of the country and village population? No, you don't, but you'll learn of it some day through some magazine writer who gathers up his points in the way I have. Time was when not one farmer in ten in the land locked his house or barn at night. Now ninety out of a hundred do it. When a stranger came along they welcomed him. When a man talked with them, they accepted his statements. What they saw in the newspapers they believed without cavil. Well, they have got over all this. The patent medicine fakir, the mine exploiter, the bucket shop man and the hundreds of other swindlers have destroyed the confidence of the farmer and villager in human nature. They have been bitten so often and so hard that they have come to doubt if such a thing as honesty exists. They won't take a stranger's word for anything. They have got through believing that there is an honest advertiser. They have even become distrustful of each other. It has become the hardest kind of work to sell a windmill, piano or other article direct.

Victim of Fakirs.

"You can't get out into the country and walk five miles without finding a victim of the fakirs. The farmer has invested in bogus mines, bogus oil wells, bogus stocks and bogus other things, and not only lost his money, but come to know that he was as good as robbed of it. The villager has been trapped the same way. It has hardened their hearts and given them the worst view of mankind. You can know nothing of this feeling nor the ruin wrought until you get among the people.

"Up to a year or so ago it was seldom that a farmer turned me down. If he had nothing for me to do to earn a meal or lodging he would not turn me away. He most always took me on trust and had no fear that I was a rascal in disguise. It's all changed now. All last summer I was padding the hoof in Connecticut and Massachusetts, making a sort of grand farewell tour, and it was hard work for me to even get a few apples of the farmers. They used to be full of chin and gossip. They used to hold me for an hour in order to hear all the news. I found them last summer sullen and sulky and calling to me from the fields to move on. In other years the village landlord would set me at work in the stables or with a pail of whitewash in some of the rooms, and in that way I'd pay for my stay. I found a change there.

"Three years ago if you had started out for a day's tramp with me along a country road every farmer we met would have had a 'Howdy?' for us and perhaps stopped for a chin. You'd have heard whistling or singing from every man at work, and the farmer's wife would have called to you that she had some fresh buttermilk. Take such a tramp today and you'll find a tremendous change. I can't estimate the sum the farmers and villagers have been robbed of during the past years of prosperity, but it is something appalling for the whole country. As much and more has been taken out of victims in the cities, but the case is different. The man in the city doesn't pin his faith to an advertisement. He speculates on chance. He is where he can use the law if needs be. If he loses here he goes at it to get even there. With the other class it is a dead loss, and the swindler can give them the laugh. Take almost any highway you will, leading through almost any state, and eight farmers out of ten have been made victims. Even the man who hasn't lost above $10 has been hardened by it."

The Change Hurt Him.

"I said that this change hurt me, and so it does. You may be surprised to hear that anything can hurt the feelings of a tramp, but that is because you don't know him. He is looked upon as an outlaw in the cities, but ever since he took the road there has been a sort of bond between him and the dwellers outside. He has paid his way or been willing to. He has asked for but little and done little harm. The newspapers have made thousands of farmers tell hard stories about the tramp, but it has been in the newspapers alone. The two have worked together harmoniously. Have you got any idea of how the professional conducts himself on the road? No? Well, it won't happen once a week that you will find one without a little money. It has been earned by hard work. When he stops at a farmhouse he offers to work for a meal. If there is no work he pays cash for what he gets. If he has been padding along for three or four days he will stop and work for half a week if the chance is offered him. In his work he keeps up with the hired man. He washes before he eats. He knows what forks are made for. He carries a clean handkerchief oftener than the man he works for. The average tramp can dress a chicken, kill a pig, empty and fill a straw bed, whitewash a kitchen, paint the house or fence, hoe corn, dig potatoes, run a cultivator, drive a team, split fence rails, dig a well, shingle a roof or rebuild a chimney. He is a handy man. He eats what he gets, sleeps where he is told to and brings the farmer a bigger budget of news than any two of his county papers. When his work is finished he slings his hook and is told to stop again. That's the tramp, and that's the farmer, just as they have been for the last forty years, and that's the reason I bemoan this change in the farmer. He has been victimized by men he thought were honest, he has been swindled and robbed where he trusted, and in changing his feelings toward mankind he must include the tramp who has never wronged him."

Will Appear in this Paper Shortly.

Three Great Excursion Days.

Unusual preparations are being made for three great excursions to Mountain Lake Park during the Chautauqua season. Arrangements have also been perfected by which the old-time railroad rates are to be granted for all of these excursion days, which will make it possible for the lovers of this Chautauqua in all the nearby towns to come three times to Mountain Lake Park and enjoy the great program offerings, visit their friends and have an enjoyable outing.

One Dollar round trip rate will prevail from Cumberland on the east and Grafton on the west, with proportionate low rates from intermediate points.

There will also be cheap rates from Clarksburg and Fairmont on the west. Special trains will run on these excursion days. Make all your plans to come.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 7TH,

"Denominational Day."

Fourth annual Lutheran Reunion. This day we have prized for several years. It has grown in significance with each year. Our friends of this denomination, strong throughout the region about Mountain Lake Park, have come in large numbers to enjoy this day of goodly fellowship on our grounds. The number has increased with each year and the present year promises to eclipse anything which has ever before been attempted. A magnificent program is being prepared to be enjoyed by our friends of this great denomination. From 1:00 to 3:00 P. M. they will have the Band and special music and inspiring addresses by many very prominent men in the auditorium. A. Wirt Lowther on the "Art of Seeing Things," one of the most popular lecturers on the platform, gives the morning lecture. He is recalled again and again and again to the same platform. He has appeared as many as twenty times in the course of a half dozen years at some of the best Chautauquas in the country.

Mrs. Philip Snowden, wife of a member of the English Parliament, the most gifted woman talker in England, engaged in great reforms, who will give us her marvelous lecture on "Peep at Parliament Through a Women's Eyes," in the afternoon. At night a great entertainment, including Frederick Warde the great American actor ,author, scholar, critic—one of the most fascinating platform personalities in this country—the renowned Shakespearian scholar. Miss Ruth Arnett, a delightful reader. The famous Sylvan Glee Club. ten in number, giving beautiful satisfaction always. They do much that is humorous and entertaining. Harry Raymond Pierce and Wife in comedy sketches in costume, and the American Vitagraph with its wonderful Moving Pictures.

The second Excursion Day,

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 19TH.

"Fraternal Day"—Order of Red Men.

This program is unusually attractive and includes Jahu De Witt Miller, one of the most popular men who has ever appeared at Mountain Lake Park. Strong, vigorous, humorous. He has been here for 18 years out of the past 20 and no man has been so constantly in demand. Dr. Robt. S. MacArthur, another delightful lecturer, well called the "Prince of the American Platform," strong and dramatic and forceful. The most prominent Baptist pastor in America, a man whom everybody honors. Prof. N. J. Cory, of Detroit, Mich., in a unique musical lecture, with stereopticon views and musical interpretations on a monster Victor Talking machine. He was the sensation of the year at Chautanqua, N. Y., last season. He comes with a great lecture which is given in magnificent voice which can be heard everywhere. The famous Weber Male Quartette, the very best in existence. La Verne Ogden in readings and impersonations. The American Vitagraph with its wonderful Moving Pictures. On this day also the Red Men of all the towns covered by the excursion territory will come in great numbers to Mountain Lake Park to spend a day of goodly fellowship. All other fraternal orders are cordially invited and they can all get together for mutual benefit.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 28TH.

"National Day."

The closing day of the Chautauqua, which has always been one of the great events of the year. Everybody is anxious to be at Mountain Lake Park for the closing day. Our audiences have averaged from 6,000 to 8,000. This day will hold much that is of profit and will furnish both profit and pleasure. The presence of George R. Stuart in one of his famous lectures is enough to make the day attractive. He is more than the equal of the lamented Sam Jones who used to draw such tremendous audiences to Mountain Lake Park. Geo. Stuart was long associated with Sam Jones in work. Dr. D. W. Howell, of New Haven, Conn., a great politician, will also be secured. The chorus under the direction of Dr. Johann Blose, will present some great and appropriate selections. The Otterbein Male Quartette and Hand Bell Ringers, one of the most unique organizations on the Chautauqua platform will also have a large share in the evening program. Readings and impersonations by H. U. Engle who has won great renown on the platform. Prof. Struck, the famous magician, will startle all with his mysterious work. The wonderful Vitagraph will present the greatest Moving Pictures obtainable on both hemispheres. The evening will end with an expensive and attractive display of fireworks. We hope to make this day one of national character, exalting the country which we love and emphasizing that enlargement of civic righteousness which is certain to exalt the nation. Come and enjoy these magnificent days with us.

School and Institute Resolutions.

Since a special normal school at Oakland is a new experiment with us, and since it has proven such a great success, far surpassing our expectations, be it

Resolved, That we express our sincere thanks to Prof. Gibson, Miss Callaghan and others for their excellent music rendered during our session.

Resolved, That the thanks of this Institute be extended to our worthy Supt. E. A. Browning, who has presided over this body with such fairness, dignity and marked ability, and also for his untiring efforts in trying to elevate the standard of education in Garrett county.

Resolved, That we extend our heartiest thanks not only for the kindness and hospitality which were shown us by the people of Oakland during the entire term, but also for the special courtesy shown by Messrs. Offutt, Davis and others in cleaning and decorating the street for the reception of the teachers on Thursday evening.

Feeling that we have been especially benefitted by the instruction received from Miss Phoenix, Profs. Armstrong, Palmer and others, be it

Resolved, That we give them our sincere thanks for their splendid work during our session; and be it further

Resolved, That these resolutions be published in the county papers.

Many Cauliflower Plants Set Out.

The H. Weber & Sons Company, whose gardens are located adjoining Oakland on the east, have set out in one body upwards to two hundred thousand cauliflower plants this season. The plants were set, watered and covered by an ingenious machine operated by a horse and the work of putting out such a tremedous number of plants is necessary laborious even if not done by hand. The plants look thrifty and unless unfavorable weather conditions arise a bumper crop of cauliflower is expected by the firm.

The Church Must Modernize Its Methods of Work.

By HARRY PRATT JUDSON, President University of Chicago.

THE world is getting away from Christianity. Christians reach out for heathen lands, and THEIR OWN PEOPLE ARE BECOMING HEATHEN faster than the heathen are becoming Christian. Why is it?

Few things are more marked in our time than the REVOLUTIONARY CHANGE IN SOCIAL ORGANIZATION in adaptation to modern conditions. It is not only that machinery on a large scale has taken the place of slow and clumsy handiwork. Government and business, too, are new and effective machines. Manufactures and commerce have devised modern plans consonant with the vast scale of modern affairs. Business methods which were effective a century ago are long since obsolete.

We complain of the abuses of the corporation, but we might as well inveigh against the reaping machine and the steam engine. We have learned NEW MACHINES, SOCIAL AS WELL AS MATERIAL, for the conduct of our matters of great moment.

THE CHURCH ONLY LAGS BEHIND. IN ITS ORGANIZATION AND METHODS IT BELONGS TO A PAST GENERATION. IF THE WORK OF THE CHURCH IS TO BE AS EFFICIENT AS THE PROCESSES OF MANUFACTURE AND TRADE THE CHURCH MUST MODERNIZE ITS SYSTEM.

Airships Will Carry Mails and Be the War Engines of the Future.

By ALEXANDER GRAHAM BELL, Inventor.

FLYING machines are no longer a dream of the future. They are here now, successful and splendid. The problem of the navigation of the air is CERTAINLY SOLVED.

THIS IS TO BE AN AGE OF FLYING MACHINES. THE FUTURE IS MERELY A MATTER OF DEVELOPMENT. THE HEAVIER THAN AIR FLYING MACHINE MAY BE SAID TO HAVE PASSED ITS BABYHOOD. IT IS CERTAIN THAT THE NEXT FEW YEARS WILL SEE AERODROMES ENTER UPON A LIMITLESS FIELD OF USEFULNESS. THEY WILL CARRY THE MAILS OF THIS COUNTRY AND PROVIDE THE QUICKEST MEANS OF TRANSPORTATION.

This will all come quickly. A few months of haphazard flights will be followed by a few more months of more careful flights, in which attempts will be made to start from and land at certain fixed places.

The experimental stage thus passed, the AGE OF COMMERCIAL DEVELOPMENT will begin. I do not believe that aeroplanes will ever be valuable as carriers of great weights, but in this respect they will be supplemented by the dirigible balloon, which will prove a cheap freight carrier.

Aerodromes will be the vehicles of the near future. They will also be THE WAR ENGINES OF THE FUTURE. Their great speed will make them almost impossible targets for heavy guns of any kind, and small projectiles or arrows will be ineffective against them.

I cannot see how a fleet of ships could defend itself against a fleet of aerodromes. New guns probably will be invented to meet the emergency, but under any circumstances the advantage will be entirely with the airships.

I AM NOT A PROPHET TO SAY THAT THE COMING OF THE FLYING MACHINES WILL DO AWAY SPEEDILY WITH ARMIES AND NAVIES AS THEY NOW EXIST. BUT I CAN SEE NO OTHER CONCLUSION TO BE DRAWN FROM THE SUCCESSFUL EXPERIMENTS NOW BEING CONDUCTED.

Let Baby Learn That There Are Other Babies on Earth.

By Mrs. CHARLOTTE PERKINS GILMAN, Author and Lecturer.

I BELIEVE that children should be taken out of the home as soon as they have reached an age when they begin to realize and understand things. Baby is allowed to rest too long with the idea that he is THE ONLY BABY IN THE WORLD. Baby should be sent to school. The kindergarten is a step in the right direction, but THERE OUGHT TO BE A BABYGARTEN where baby could spend several hours a day away from mother, learning that there are other babies and taking on more of the US feeling and losing much of the I feeling.

Such schooling would tend to broaden the child and allow it to grow up capable of grasping the fact that the ethics of society are greater than the ethics of the individual or of the family.

A babygarten would not only be broadening for baby, but would ALLOW MOTHER TO GET OUTSIDE OF THE HOME and learn, too, that the ethics of society are greater than the ethics of family and give her a chance to become more of a person and more of a factor in the world.

Why America Needs a Thrashing

By Professor LUTOSTAWSKI of the University of Cracow, Russian Poland.

WHAT America needs is a thrashing. You are all too prou too full of conceit. You worship the material. Y scorn the things that are higher than the material. BU NESS IS EVERYTHING; LEARNING IS NOT ING. Why, even China, of its kind, has a higher type of civilizat than you have.

In my stay in this country I have been most impressed with UTTER DISRESPECT OF LEARNING that prevails. You a illiterate. To your business heads you pay high salaries—$50,000 year. To your professors you pay $2,000 or perhaps $1,000. It i because you have no knowledge, no thinkers, that you have amon you thousands of false teachers.

ANOTHER NATURE FAKIR.

Story of Jim Hance and the Grand Canyon of Arizona.

Here is another story of Jim Hance and the Grand Canyon of Arizona:

When tourists are thick Jim rides over to the hotels and talks to them. He has marvelous tales to tell. One day he was standing by the top of the Bright Angel trail with a few pieces of meat in his hand.

"What are you going to do with that meat, Mr. Hance?" asked a pert tourist lady from Boston.

"Why, I'm goin' down to feed my pet fish with it."

"Your pet fish? Have you a pet fish? Oh, tell me about it!"

"Waal," said Jim, "it was this way: One time some years ago I was fishin' down there in the canyon in the Colorado river. I wasn't havin' much luck, but all of a sudden I seen a commotion in the water and a tolerable sized fish riz up and looked at me. I seen the fish was angry, and as there ain't anythin' much more desprit than a mad fish I ducked. I was just in time, for the fish leaped out of the water and straight at me. He'd 'a' speared me sure if it hadn't been for that duck of mine. As it was, he went clean over me and landed in a pool in the hollow of the rocks behind me, where there was a considerable pond of water. He couldn't get out, and he's there yet. Him and me is fast friends now, and I go down twicet a week and feed him."

"How long ago was that?"

"It was seventeen year ago."

"The fish must be quite large by this time."

"Oh," said Jim, "not so much! Last time I put the tape on him he was only twenty-seven feet long. He ain't got his full growth yit."—Saturday Evening Post.

Saw Himself as Others Saw Him.

One Sunday morning some years ago I stepped out into the back yard of my southern home. The "cook's boy," wearing a checked homespun shirt, was playing in the yard. He approached me and said:

"Mister Chollie, I never is had on a white shut in my life. Can't you gimme one?"

I complied with this request by giving him a white shirt and a very high standing collar. With a grin and show of large white teeth, he left me. That afternoon I saw the boy in the yard wearing his accustomed colored shirt. Responding to my interrogative look, he said:

"I put on dat white shut and collar, and you know what I look like? I look like a black mule wid his head over a whitewash fence, and I took dat shut and collar off."—Judge's Library.

A Question of Distance.

"Do you favor the eight hour movement, Mr. Snail?"

"It depends on how far I have to move."—Philadelphia Press.

Against the Rules.

"Did I ever see General Grant?" exclaimed Veteran Kilgore in response to an idle query. "Did I ever—why, child, at Shiloh I was a-layin' in th' tall grass a-shootin' jest as fast as I could load an' fire when I heard hoss tracks approachin', an' a voice calls from th' road:

"'Hey, there! Ain't that you, Kilgore?'

"I knowed th' voice instant an' says, 'Yes, Grant; it's me,' an' kep' right on shootin'.

"'Come here,' he says.

"I riz, reluctant, an' sauntered over to th' road, an' Grant says t' me:

"'Kilgore,' he says, 'I want ye t' go home. Ye're killin' too many people.'"—Woman's Home Companion.

Very Suspicious.

"Better send an inspector down to see what's the matter with this man's meter," said the cashier in the gas company's office to the superintendent.

"Oh," began the superintendent, "we throw complaints about meters"—

"This is no complaint. He sends a check for the amount of his bill and says it's 'very reasonable.'"—Catholic Standard and Times.

Not Safe Even There.

The Janitorial King.

We've prayed for it with earnest prayers;
We've pleaded with the man downstairs;
We've gone down on our bended knees;
We've told him we would surely freeze;
We've proved it by our steaming breath;
We've said the cold would be our death;
We've vowed to bow to his commands;
We've hinted Christmas was at hand;
We've promised him a mint of tips;
We've jollied him with quirks and quips;
We've used some words we don't repeat;
We—hang it all—we want steam heat!
But he, the villain, gives a smile
And calmly answers, "Wait awhile!"

VOLUME 32. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, JULY 16, 1908. NUMBER 20

TOOK A HIGH DIVE

Laborer at Court House Fell Sixty Feet and Was Unhurt.

Last Saturday a colored laborer employed at the new court house in Oakland lost his balance and fell from the highest point of the building through the elevator shaft to the first floor, a distance of sixty feet or more, and escaped without a scratch.

The man was standing alongside the shaft when he was seen by other workman engaged on the building to topple over and fall headforemost down the aperture. After descending for a distance of probably forty feet the sleeve of his blouse caught upon a nail which had the effect to turn his body in its natural position and the balance of the distance was traveled in an upright position, the man alighting squarely upon his feet. He walked from the building and a few moments afterwsrd was again at work as though nothing had happened.

BITTINGER.

According to the showing of the thermometer, Monday of this week was the warmest day of the season and at its close a severe electrical storm passed over this section, accompanied by a heavy fall of rain and hail.

Messrs. Clever and Clarence Brennemen, of Springs, Pa., spent last Sunday at their homes here.

Miss Florence Bittinger, of Springs, Pa., was visiting friends and acquaintances here last Sunday.

Jonas Bittinger is suffering with an attack of heart and stomach trouble.

Many farmers are harvesting their wheat this week and report the prospect good for a heavy yield.

Fred. Snyder, who has been employed here for some months, left last Monday for West Virginia lumber region.

The communion services in the Lutheran church at this place held last Sunday morning was largely attended and at the service one new member was received into the church and five transfers from other congregations.

Mrs. C. E. Ellithorp and her cousin, Marius Broadwater, of Minnesota drove over to West Virginia last Sunday to visit a sick relative.

The news of the nomination of William J. Bryan as candidate for president on the Democratic ticket was not received with much enthusiasm by the people of that persuasion in this section.

INSTITUTES FOR TEACHERS.

Schedules For the County Meetings to be Held This Summer.

The Department of Education of Maryland has issued a schedule of the annual teachers' institutes of the several counties of the state and has also prepared a list of instructors to address the different meetings of the institutes. Most of the institutes will be held between August 24 and September 11, although some will be held later in September and others not until October.

The majority of the institutes will be held by the counties singly, but there will be joint conventions of the teachers of Wicomico, Somerset and Worcester counties at Ocean City from August 24 to September 4; Anne Arundel, Prince George's, Charles and St. Mary's counties at Annapolis from September 4 to 11, and Caroline and Talbot counties at Easton, August 31 to September 11.

The schedule of Allegany and Garrett institutes follows:

Allegany county at Cumberland, August 31 to September 4—Visiting superintendents, Bryon G. Grimes, of Queen Anne's, and John P. Fockler, of Washington county.

Garrett county, at Oaklaud, September 7 to 11—Visiting superintendents, Charles T. Wright, Harford; John P. Fockler, Washington; instructors, Misses Minnie L. Davis and Lillian L. Thorpe.

Prof. E. A. Browning will visit several of the institutes of instructor.

FRIENDSVILLE.

Mrs. W. W. Savage returned Sunday from Mountain Lake Park, where she had been spending a couple of weeks.

Mrs. Geo. F. Frazee and little son are ho ne again, after spending two weeks with parents and friends in Addison, Pa.

Miss Goldie Frazee, of Somerfield, is visiting Miss Nell Welch.

The lawn fete given by the Ladies Aid Society, on Saturday night, was well attended and was a financial success.

Mr. Fred Mitchel, of the Crawford House, is quite ill at this writing.

Mr. Dick Liston, wife and little daughter, of West Newton, Pa., are spending a couple of weeks at the Crawford House.

Mrs. Leon Hardie is visiting relatives at Jacksonville, Va.

The dance in Allen's Hall Thursday night last was well attended and enjoyed by all.

Mr. Gould and wife are staying at the Crawford House. Mr. Gould is in charge of the Western Maryland Coal Co., of Kendall, and expects to begin work at once.

Mrs. Wm. McCullough and sister, Miss Humberson, spent Sunday with Mrs. Geo. Dunham.

Mr. Harter returned Sunday night from a business trip to Dawson, Pa.

REPLY TO THE CRITICISM OF THE MOUNTAIN DEMOCRAT

Of the One Mile Limit In the Local Option Law.

I understand that the Editor of the Mountain Democrat in last week's issue of that paper attacked the one mile clause of the local option act that closed up the saloon at Accident and several others in the county and declared that such malicious laws would certainly drive the Republican voters into the Democratic party.

Now we ask the Editor of the Democrat if we are to take this to mean that the Democratic party in Garrett county is to be the refuge and the sheltering and protecting organization of the saloon keepers and distillers.

We would like to know if the Democrat editor thinks that the hundreds, yes thousands of good temperance citizens who consider the saloon a menace to society and ask the question what good is the saloon in any community if these men shall have any consideration at the hands of his party?

Yes, it may drive a few old whiskey soaks out of the party (we do not mean the habitual drunkard for he is usually glad enough to get rid of the curse). But we would like to know at the same time what consideration a temperance man would find in the Democratic party in Garrett county, so long as it is being controlled by its present leaders. When any one party allows itself to be dominated by the saloon element as the Democratic party is controlled today in this county it casts a reproach upon the definition of Democracy, and when it elevates to the position of School Commissioner a man who has always been a stumbling block to temperance legislation it commits an act of shame from which good thinking men should turn in disgust. And yet our friend thinks it malicious to outlaw the saloon and to offend the bar-room proprietor.

Some have raised the cry that our county-seat should have been included and not exempted. The writer of this article would have been too anxious to have our countyseat included, but also believe that half a loaf is better than none. All great undertakings have small beginning: Christianity grew from thirteen leaders to what it is today; the Pilgram band was the seed of this great nation; the anti-slavery crusade had only a few leaders in its early stages. If this entire county were to go dry some one would raise the cry what is the use of having one county dry and the rest of the state wet? If the state were to go dry the same complaint would be heard in reference to the country at large, but the time is coming and Mr. Saloon Keeper you had better read the hand-writing on the wall.

You have filled enough drunkard's graves, made enough children orphans, wives widows fathers fiends and young men criminals. You have filled our prisons and furnished the victims for our scaffolds. You have corrupted politics and bribed legislatures. You have murdered the souls of men and paved the road to Hell with your victims. You have paraded through the land as the mother of all abominations and the father of all crimes, and now the people will rise in righteous indignation and smite you once and forever in your march of devastation and the rum soaked hamlets, villages and towns shall be made dry, and rum rule shall be at an end. May God speed this happy day.

AN OBSERVER.

Resolutions of Respect.

WHEREAS, It has pleased the Great Spirit in His love and wisdom, to take to Himself from the hunting grounds of this earth to those above, Bro Jos. H. Lee, who was esteemed and loved by all; therefore be it

Resolved, That deeply conscious of our loss we submit ourselves to the will of the Great Spirit whose dealings, though seemingly strange, are for the good of them that love Him.

Resolved, That we extend to the brothers and sisters of the deceased brother our deepest sympathy in this their time of sorrow and that we drape our charter for sixty days; that these resolutions be recorded on our minutes, a copy sent to the brothers and sisters, and a copy be sent to the county papers for publication.

Scherr Nominated; Also Swisher.

Last Thursday Hon. Arnold C. Scherr was nominated for Governor of West Virginia by delegates favorable to his candidacy for the office while another faction of the party placed in nomination Charles W. Swisher for the same position. Result: the party is "busted" right through the middle and chances for the election of a Democratic executive were never better. Mr. Scherr has the moral support of the Maryland Republicans but they can't vote over in West Virginia, more's the pity.

THE DEATH RECORD.

JAMES H. BEVANS.

James H. Bevans died Saturday morning at his home in Grafton, W. Va., aged 54 years. Mr. Bevans was a native of Cumberland. He was a member of the Woodmen of the World. His body was taken to the home of his brother in Grantsville, and the funeral occurred there there on Tuesday morning from St. Mary's Catholic Church. He is survived by his wife and four children, Ronald, James, Joseph and Katherine Bevans, all of Grafton. He also leaves two brothers, A. J. and G. E. Bevans, of Grantsville, and two sisters, Mrs. D. O. Sullivan, Philadelphia, and Miss Ella Bevans, of Grantsville.

FELIX G. SLOANE.

Judge Felix G. Sloane, of Wilmington, Ohio, an annual visitor to Oakland for a great many years past, died at his home in Wilmington July 9th. Judge Sloane was well known and very highly esteemed by many Oakland people. During the troublous times of the sixties he was an advisor of President Lincoln and later a commissioned officer in the Union army.

MRS. LYMAN DUEL.

Mrs. Lyman Duel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Allen Butler, of Crellin, died at that place Monday at the age of thirty years, after a brief illness, leaving four children, including an infant of five days. He funeral took place Tuesday, the interment being made in the Ashby cemetery near Crellin.

CHARLES SHAFFER.

At the home of his daughter, in Mountain Lake Park, Sunday night, at the advanced age of ninety-two years, Charles Shaffer, one of the pioneer residents and highly respected citizens of Garrett county. Mr. Shaffer came to this county from Germany a great many years ago, and made his home at the Shaffer farm, one mile west of Oakland prior to the building of the Baltimore and Ohio Railway through this section of the country. His wife died a number of years ago, leaving a number of children, all daughters. His funeral took place today from the Catholic church in Oakland, of which he was a devout and consistant member during his entire lifetime. The interment was made on his former farm west of Oakland.

GEORGE W. MALE.

George W. Male, aged 35 years, died at his home near Deer Park Sunday night and was buried Tuesday morning at Deer Park.

IMPROVING ON INSTRUCTIONS

By Taylor White.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

Ben Runyon regarded with amusement, if not approbation, the diminutive applicant for the vacant post of office boy. The lad's fluent talk, heavily flavored with the slang of the moment, was diverting even while it exposed his unfitness for the place.

"I'm afraid it's no deal, Lippy," he said, his tone tinged with kindly regret. "You don't quite fill the bill."

He turned back to his desk, but a grimy hand grasped his coat sleeve.

"Forget it, boss," pleaded Lippy (he had confessed that to be the only name he knew). "I'm in wrong. Get that? I don't live wid me fader and mudder, but it's 'cause I ain't got none, see? What ef I do live in a lodgin' house and ain't got me pants pressed? I'll be Johnny on de spot and wort' a dozen dude kids. Len' me t'ree iron men and I'll be back here wid de glad rags in a half hour. Is it a go? Give a feller a chanct, will yer?"

Lippy tried hard to keep a stiff upper lip, but the nervous twitching betrayed his anxiety, and there was a pleading look in the sharp greenish eyes. Runyon drew a five dollar bill from his pocket and handed it to the boy.

"It's a go," he agreed. "Now, for heaven's sake, get a decent looking suit! Don't come back here looking like a prize fighter's sparring partner, and hurry up."

With a muttered "Tanks" that was meant to be brusque, but which spoke whole volumes of the boy's delight, Lippy sped from the office. He was back within the prescribed half hour. A clean shirt and a paper collar had replaced the tattered garment that once had been his body covering. A suit well worn, but clean, and a pair of shoes described by Lippy as "new secondhand" completed the outfit. Lippy was installed.

For a few weeks things went well in the Runyon office. Lippy learned the rudiments of a more conventional speech, and his alertness brought many a smile of approval from Runyon. Lippy was keeping his promise to be "Johnny on the spot."

Then came a blue Monday, when all went wrong. Runyon came to the office with the temper of a bear. He passed Lippy with a curt nod and shut himself in the private office, whence presently came a demand for the typewriter. Lippy reported that she had not yet arrived and pointed out that she still had fifteen minutes grace. But the fifteen minutes stretched to half an hour, and still the girl had not come, while Runyon's temper grew more savage.

Then came a telephone message. Miss Blake had been married the day before and had gone on her honeymoon. Her mother hoped that it would not inconvenience her employer, but her fiance had been ordered west and the girl had accompanied him.

"What am I going to do without Miss Blake?" stormed Runyon. "There are important papers to be got out. I can't trust them to a public typewriter."

"Get another girl," advised Lippy sagely. "The man what makes the machines keeps girls in cold storage. Phone him and he'll push one down here special delivery."

"No go," dissented Runyon. "I must have one in whose discretion I can trust. The only recommendation those girls require is that they use the machine."

"Ain't you th' hep gamoosh to some dame wit' th' hurry fingers?" suggested Lippy. "Your fren or your fren's fren?"

Runyon started.

"It may do some good," he told himself. "It will show that I am not disposed to hold anger. Take this card and ask the lady if she can come down at once," he added to Lippy, handing the boy a card which he drew from his vest pocket.

Lippy was out of the office like a whirlwind, and presently he was standing in front of a handsome house in the residential district debating with himself if this could be the address. His debate was short. To Lippy orders were orders. He climbed the steps and soon was standing in the hallway, while the butler went off to find the girl.

"You have a letter from Mr. Runyon?" she asked as Lippy was ushered into a room all sweet smells and soft toned colors. Lippy shook his head in a negative.

"He didn't have no time to write," he explained. "He couldn't wait f'r that. He told me to hot foot it up here and tell you he couldn't wait s'leven seconds wit'out you. You're to come down wid me."

"What's the matter?" she asked in astonishment. "Mr. Runyon is in some trouble?"

"Up to his neck," declared Lippy. "Say, if you don't get down in a hurry he'll go dead nutty. He was mos' bughouse when I went away from there wit' somethin' t' tell you."

"Wait in the hall. I'll be right down," she promised, while her trembling hands toyed nervously with a ribbon. "I—I did not know it was so serious—that he would take it this way."

"Serious!" echoed Lippy. "I'll bet we find two cops and the ambulance doc in th' place if we don't get there pretty quick."

The girl rang the bell for her maid, and Lippy went down to the front hall to spend a pleasant ten minutes in impertinent conversation addressed to the butler with the delightful knowledge that the staid functionary did not dare hit back.

Then the girl came down the stairs looking even more attractive in her heavy furs, and Lippy wonderingly followed her into the automobile that stood at the curb. This sort of typewriter was new to him.

The ride was all too short, and the girl pressed after him as Lippy raced down the hall and proudly threw open the door with a shrill "I got her, boss."

Runyon came out of his private office and halted as he looked at the girl.

"You have come, Aline? You forgive?" he asked hoarsely.

"The boy said you were nearly distracted," she explained. "I should not have come if he had not led me to believe that you were on the point of committing some rash action."

"I sent him for that typewriter you recommended," explained Runyon. "My girl got married yesterday and left town. I had the address of this girl of whom you had spoken. Lippy, let me see that card."

Lippy produced the now battered pasteboard. It was one of Aline Breval's own cards with a pencilled address on the back, but the pencil marks were almost obliterated through friction with other papers.

"I did not notice that the pencilled address was blurred out," explained Runyon. "I suppose that Lippy did not even notice the marks. He is responsible for the trouble to which you have been put. But, dear, can't you see the hand of fate in the development? Won't you believe in the sincerity of my penitence and forgive my ill humor?"

Lippy, catching the drift of the remark, searched the girl's face. His quick perception saw in her clear eyes the dawn of forgiveness long before his employer read his answer, and he plucked at Runyon's coat.

"Say, boss," he shrilled, "I'll go out and get me lunch." And as he departed he innocently slipped the spring latch that these two, who were oblivious to all else than themselves, should not be disturbed by the intrusion of book agents or peddlers.

It was an hour before he showed up again, and Runyon was working feverishly at his desk while Miss Breval sat by the window enjoying the panorama of the city spread before her gaze.

Runyon handed him a letter.

"Take that to this address," he said smilingly. "It is the address of the new typewriter. When she comes, give her these specifications to copy. I shall not be here when you get back. I shall not be back until tomorrow."

"I'm sorry I didn't get her th' first time," said Lippy hypocritically.

"It's all right," assured Runyon as he added a five dollar bill to the envelope he still held out. "You improved upon instructions, and we, Miss Breval and myself, are very much obliged."

"Don't menshun it," muttered Lippy, backing away, for Miss Breval was smiling upon him, and the radiance of that smile abashed the boy's assurance for the first time in his eventful young life.

Charles Reade's Lunatics.

The author of "Leaves From a Life," a woman, referring to Charles Reade's notion that half the people shut up in lunatic asylums had no business to be there, says: "One day he told papa he had picked out twelve quite sane men from among the supposed lunatics, and one of the doctors had promised to ask them all to dinner and give them another chance. Would papa come too? As papa knew the doctor and knew also that ample precautions would be taken, he agreed, and the dinner duly came off. All went well, the twelve lunatics behaved admirably, and Charles Reade became more and more sure that he had rescued twelve unfortunates from worse than prison until the dessert was placed on the table. Then the doctor, turning to the man on his left, said: 'Have you been introduced to your next door neighbor? He is the Virgin Mary.' The lunatic leaped to his feet. 'You lie!' he screamed. 'I am the Virgin Mary.' And in a moment all the twelve lunatics began to show themselves in their real colors."

Too Dangerous.

Mr. Church—Whew, how it's raining! Lend me your umbrella, dear. I've got to run over to the vestry meeting.

Mrs. Church—But why not use that umbrella you've been carrying all week?

Mr. Church—What, to the vestry meeting? Why, that's where I got it.—Philadelphia Press.

Proposed Federal License Law Is Dangerous.

By JOHN C. SPOONER, Former Senator From Wisconsin.

THE constitution lodged in congress the power to regulate commerce among the several states and the Indian tribes and foreign nations. Commerce was not the outgrowth of the constitution, but THE CONSTITUTION WAS THE OUTGROWTH OF COMMERCE. It is a historical truth that but for the burdens and discriminations which were placed by the states, which were sovereign each and sovereign absolutely, as to the others upon commerce among the several states the constitution very likely would not have been adopted. That was ONE OF ITS PRINCIPAL INSPIRATIONS at least.

IT IS SAID NOW THAT CONGRESS IS GIVEN THE ABSOLUTE POWER OVER COMMERCE AMONG THE STATES; THAT IT MAY PROHIBIT OR IT MAY PRESCRIBE THE CONDITIONS ON WHICH IT MAY BE CONDUCTED. THAT WAS NOT THE PURPOSE OF THE CONSTITUTION, AND IN MY OPINION THAT IS NOT THE TRUE CONSTRUCTION OF THE CONSTITUTION.

It has been recommended that the Sherman antitrust act be amended. It ought to be amended—in the interest of the people it ought to be amended—but if the price of such an amendment is to be a federal license law the business interests of the United States, from my standpoint, HAD BETTER LET THE SHERMAN ACT ALONE. This federal license law is predicated upon the FALSE NOTION that the congress has the same power over the persons who may engage in interstate commerce that the state has as to whether it will permit foreign corporations to do business within its borders.

I THINK THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES OUGHT TO THINK A LONG TIME BEFORE THEY ALLOW THE COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES TO BE PUT IN A STRAITJACKET, TO BE TIGHTENED OR LOOSENED AS SOME ONE AT WASHINGTON MAY THINK BEST.

Let us KEEP THE CHANNELS OF COMMERCE FREE, allowing no one, corporations by contract in unreasonable restraint of trade or any power, to obstruct the free transit of products and commodities from state to state.

The Origin of the Money Crisis.

By JACOB H. SCHIFF, New York Banker.

THE ORIGIN OF THE CRISIS IS TO BE SOUGHT MAINLY IN TOO GREAT AN EXPANSION OF ENTERPRISE OF EVERY NATURE, BOTH CORPORATE AND INDIVIDUAL. THIS, AS A CONSEQUENCE, CAUSED A STRAINING OF FINANCIAL REQUIREMENTS, AND PARTICULARLY OF CREDIT, BEYOND LEGITIMATE LIMITS. "PROSPERITY RUN RIOT" EXPRESSES, PERHAPS, BEST THE CONDITION WHICH EXISTED AND WHICH BROUGHT ABOUT OUR PLIGHT.

Nothing is probably so largely responsible for the BREAKDOWN as the obstinacy with which new enterprise became fostered. In the enormous volume of business which was developed in every quarter even in the face of A STEADILY INCREASING MONEY SCARCITY and, further, in the stubbornness with which it was insisted that the country was so prosperous and rich that particular CAUTION AND PRUDENCE WERE NOT NEEDED the march forward was made with a totally unprotected rear.

Look only at the number of SO CALLED trust companies called into being during recent years, which under a false flag bid for and attracted millions upon millions of deposits to be used not for legitimate banking, but for ILLEGITIMATE PROMOTION, from which funds could not be withdrawn when their return was asked for by those to whom they belonged. And not alone in financial quarters had developed this PROSPERITY MADNESS. In industry and commerce prudence had likewise been thrown to the winds. The manufacturer and merchant when warned that they were EXPANDING TOO LARGELY—that they were straining their credit to too great an extreme—scornfully rejected the advice to go at a slower pace.

Our Banking System the Best In the World.

By CHARLES G. DAWES, Former Comptroller of the Currency.

THE present banking system of the United States is the best in the world. The banking power of our country is GREATER THAN THAT OF ALL CONTINENTAL EUROPE. We have this great system of separate and independent banks, and, whether we wish it or not or whether THEORETICALLY it is best or not, we must face as practical men the UTTER IMPOSSIBILITY of a reversion at this stage of our banking development to any type of banking fundamentally different. It is impracticable politically and from a business standpoint.

ALL THAT THE SITUATION NEEDS FROM CONGRESS, IN MY JUDGMENT, IS, FIRST, THE CHANGE IN THE LAWS REGULATING CASH RESERVES OF NATIONAL BANKS AND, SECOND, THE AUTHORIZING OF A HEAVILY TAXED BANK ASSET EMERGENCY CIRCULATION.

It might as well be recognized now that the independent treasury system of the United States has largely PROVED ITS COMMERCIAL SALVATION in the present crisis.

We have heard so much loose talk in recent years about the EVILS of the subtreasury system and its locking up the cash of the country when needed in commerce and business that we may as well recognize its benefits and WHAT WE HAVE ESCAPED THROUGH IT, AND IT ALONE.

The difference between conditions with our independent treasury and the position which we would eventually reach with its abolition is that the government would in the latter case be hard up for cash as well as the rest of us. From the moment of our putting the extra cash in the treasury into circulation it BECOMES THE BASIS OF BUSINESS and credits are built up above it under the ordinary operations of banking.

ORDER REMOVING "DIFFERENTIAL"

Interstate Commerce Commission Fixes the Time on or Before August 15.

The Interstate Commerce Commission in accordance with its decision, removing the differential on the small-vein coal in the Georges Creek basin, has passed the following order making the prohibition effective on or before the 15th of August, 1908. The order says:

"It is ordered that the defendants, the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, the Western Maryland Railroad Company and Benjamin F. Bush, receiver thereof, and the Cumberland and Pennsylvania Railroad Company, be, and they are hereby, notified and required to cease and desist, on or before August 15, 1908, from charging, demanding, collecting or receiving for the transportation of small vein coal originating from mines at points in the Georges Creek coal basin in Allegany county, Maryland, and when shipped over the piers at tidewater and water borne to destinations inside and outside of the Chesapeake and Delaware capes, rates that are in excess of the rates for transportation of small vein coal to said points from mines located in the Meyersdale or Somerset district in Southwestern Pennsylvania on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad or from points in the West Virginia field on the Western Maryland railroad, or from Austin, Bloomington, Kingwood and upper Potomac districts on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad.

"It is further ordered that said defendants be, and they are hereby, notified and required to establish and put in force on or before August 15, 1908, the same rates on small vein coal from mines at points in the Georges Creek coal basin, Allegany county, Maryland, to the destinations hereinbefore described as are now in force for the transportation of coals to said destinations from mines at points in the aforesaid districts on the defendants' railroads and for a period of not less than two years from and after the said August 15 to maintain a parity of rates on the small vein coal of Georges Creek coal basin and coals from said other districts.

"And be it further ordered that said defendants be, and they severally are hereby authorized to make effective upon three days' notice to the public and the Interstate Commerce Commission, given in the manner required by law, such rates as it may be necessary for said defendants, or any of them, to establish for the purpose of complying with this order. The schedules containing such rates must bear the notation that said rates are issued under the authority hereby granted, and must refer to the title and number of this case."

Mr. James D. Blackiston, who with Mr. Albert A. Doub, won this brilliant legal battle in behalf of the small vein coal interests in this region left for New York last night where he will confer with prominent coal operators with a view of beginning supplemental proceedings before the Interstate Commerce Commission for the removal of the differential on the "big-vein" coal. Mr. Blackiston stated before leaving for New York last night that he had no doubt that the companies interested in the big vein coal would unite in the supplemental bill, and that this bill would be filed within a very short time.—Cumberland News.

THE END OF COAL SEVERAL YEARS OFF

Anthracite, Says Expert, Is Becoming More and More of a Luxury.

In Mines aud Minerals, Edward W. Parker, of the United States Geological Survey, estimates the country's annal production of coal as far forward as the year 2055. But at that date the United States will be using more than two billion tons a year—2,300,000,000 to be nearer exact. The average annual production during the decade from 1916 to 1925 will be about 600,000,000 tons. The total production in 1907 was 480,450,042 tons.

The geologist prophesies that future generations "will have so far developed methods of subduing and utilizing other forces of nature that the need of coal for the production of heat, light and power will to a great extent, have been eliminated." Until these other natural forces are subdued, however, it appears that there will be enough coal to supply the nation.

Mr. Parker calls attention to the rapid consumption of anthracite and to the fact that the cost of mining it has increased.

"With regard to anthracite," he says, "it must be remembered that, with the advances in sympathy with the general tendency toward higher prices, there is the additional fact that the bonanza coal beds have been practically exhausted, and the mining of the deeper and thinner beds increases the cost, which must be made up, as I have stated, by higher prices."

Mr. Parker doubts "if the production of anthracite will ever greatly exceed the production of 1907, which was about 76,000,000 long tons." When the period of decline does set in, he says, "the decreases in production will be gradual, and some anthracite will be used well into the next century, and we may look for a gradually increasing prices, as the workings become deeper and thinner beds are drawn upon."

UNWRITTEN LAW DANGER TO STAT

Address Based on Posey-Bowie Case In Charles Co. and on Thaw Trial.

Gen. A. Allison Wilmer, of La Plata, president of the Maryland State Bar Association, in his address at the opening of the annual meeting of the Bar Association at the Blue Mountain House stirred the members to a pitch of enthusiasm. He had no scheduled address—that is, he had not announced any specific topic—and when he launched forth in an attack on the so-called unwritten law and expatiated upon it for an hour he showed that he had studied the subject very carefully and was in a position to give argument and combat any and all who might throw down the gloye in defence of the other side.

His subject seemed to be based on the Posey-Bowie shooting case, in Charles county, more than a year ago. Mrs. Posey and her son shot and killed young Bowie because of alleged indiscretions on the part of Mrs. Posey's daughter and Bowie.

He said there was no such thing as unwritten law. He argued that if the "unwritten law" were permitted to prevail to the extent that harm would come to the country. He said that there were good and sufficient laws on the statute books in every State in the Union, but the lack of enforcement made the "unwritten law" possible.

He hammered the Harry Thaw "brain-storm" idea, and the insane impulse suggestion, other ideas that have been worked into the more recent and prominent murder trials and cases.

BRYAN AND KERN

WILL LEAD THE DEMOCRATIC HOSTS AGAINST TAFT AND SHERMAN.

DENVER CONVENTION ADJOURNS

After Whole Night of Speechmaking Bryan Is Nominated on First Ballot, Receiving 892½ Votes to 59½ for Gray and 46 for Johnson.

At Denver, Col., William Jennings Bryan of Nebraska was nominated for president of the United States by the Democratic national convention on the first ballot at 3:36 a. m. The vote stood: Bryan, 892½; Gray, 59½; Johnson, 46. On motion of a member of the Minnsetoa delegation the nomination was made unanimous.

At the Friday afternoon session John W. Kern of Indiana was nominated for vice president by acclamation.

The scenes preceding and attending this action of the convention, in frenzied enthusiasm and spectacular features, were unparalleled in the history of political conventions in this country.

Dunn Starts the Uproar.

The speech placing William J. Bryan in nomination was made by Ignatius J. Dunn of Nebraska, a youthful orator of fire and eloquence, whose closing phrase stirred the vast assemblage into wild demonstration.

"I nominate," he exclaimed, "as the standard bearer of our party the man who in the thrilling days of '96 and 1900 bore the battlescarred banner of democracy with fame as untarnished as the crusaders of old—America's great commoner, Nebraska's gifted son, William J. Bryan."

Immediately perfect pandemonium of sound and motion was unloosed as delegates and spectators rose en masse and joined in the reverberating chorus of tribute to the Nebraska candidate. The standards of the states were wrenched from their places and borne through the hall to the platform while banners bearing the portrait of the commoner were waved aloft and the multitude joined in long-continued tribute. At times the intensity of the demonstration threatened a panic. One woman was borne out fainting.

Helped to Quell the Storm.

When the noise had continued for just fifty-five minutes the sergeants-at-arms began their first efforts to still the uproar and to clear the aisles. The word was given to messengers that it was desired that the parading should cease. A message was sent to the band in the gallery to cease playing and it willingly obeyed the injunction, the players being almost exhausted by their severe work in the torrid gallery near the roof. These measures had some effect, but it was impossible for such an uproar to die away in an instant.

At 10:20 p. m., when the demonstration's last cry had died away Chairman Clayton directed the secretary to continue calling the roll of states. Arkansas passed and California yielded to Oregon. Ex-Senator Gearin of that state then was introduced to second the nomination of Mr. Bryan.

The opportunity of Johnson supporters came when the rollcall reached Connecticut and that state gave way to Minnesota. Winfield S. Hammond of the latter state took the stand amid a considerable volume of applause to place in nomination Governor John A. Johnson of Minnesota.

Yelled 25 Minutes for Johnson.

That all the cheer was not yet killed in the convention was made manifest when Mr. Hammond concluded. The loyal sons of the North Star state responded with a cheer and a number of delegates in Massachusetts and Oklahoma joined. A liberal amount of applause came down from the galleries, but the noise was but a whisper compared with the terrific roar of the Bryan demonstration.

While the Johnson cheers were slowly dying and the chairman was struggling with the obstreperous galleries L. Irving Handy of Delaware was waiting on the rostrum to name as presidential candidate George Gray of his state.

When Mr. Handy had spoken for a few minutes he was interrupted by the appearance of the long-waited committee on resolutions. The seats reserved for the committee on the platform had long before been filled and there was a considerable delay and much confusion before the spectators could vacate the chairs and surrender them to the committee.

After the resolutions committee had been provided with seats Mr. Handy proceeded with his speech. He asked the delegates to give him close attention as an offset to the difficulty of his position in being cut short by the committee's appearance. The request was greeted with general applause.

Haskell Presents Resolutions.

Some of the cheering was heard when Mr. Handy had concluded, but there was no attempt at a Gray demonstration.

"Gentlemen of the convention," said the chairman, "I now have the pleasure of presenting to you the chairman of the committee on resolutions, Governor Haskell of Oklahoma."

The governor called forth loud cheers from the convention when he announced that there was no division among the members of the committee and that he represented them all in presenting the report. He then read the platform.

The platform was adopted unanimously.

At 2:30 a. m. balloting for the presidential candidates began and ended about an hour later with the result above stated.

Colonel Guffey Is Unhorsed.

At a night session the committee on credentials reported on the Pennsylvania and other contested cases. A minority report on the Pennsylvania case resulted in an hour's acrimonious debate, after which the convention rejected the minority report favorable to the Guffey faction by the decisive vote of 815 to 387.

The defeat of J. M. Guffey, the national committeeman from Pennsylvania, as a candidate for reelection was accomplished by the faction headed by James Kerr of Clearfield at a meeting held in the convention auditorium immediately following the adjournment of the first session of the convention. Colonel Guffey and his followers left the hall and refused to participate in the caucus. James Kerr was elected national committeeman, 411½ votes being cast for and none against him.

Won't Indorse Bryan.

Melvin W. Palliser, a member of the executive committee of the Independence party and considered one of the spokesmen for William R. Hearst, states that it is not likely the convention of the Independence party to be held in Chicago the latter part of the month will indorse Bryan. Mr. Palliser said:

"You know the delegates from this state were instructed to vote for independent candidates. I think that indicates what is the general sentiment in the Independence party. There is no doubt that Mr. Bryan would like the support of our party."

REPUBLICAN PLATFORM.

Principles Which Convention Has Approved.

PARTY RECORD EXTOLLED.

Held Up to Country's View as Worthy of Admiration and Continuance. Present Administration Called an Epoch In American History—Declaration In Favor of Tariff Revision by Special Session of Congress Immediately After Inauguration of Incoming President.

The platform approved by the Republican national convention held at Chicago is a lengthy document, covering many subjects of national importance. One of its most important planks, that on injunctions, was changed after much discussion. The rest of the platform is in part as follows:

Once more the Republican party, in national convention assembled, submits its cause to the people. This great historic organization, that destroyed slavery, preserved the Union, restored credit, expanded the national domain, established a sound financial system, developed the industries and resources of the country, and gave to the nation her seat of honor in the councils of the world, now meets the new problems of government with the same courage and capacity with which it solved the old.

In this the greatest era of American advancement the Republican party has reached its highest service under the leadership of Theodore Roosevelt.

The great accomplishments of President Roosevelt have been, first and foremost, a brave and impartial enforcement of the law; the prosecution of illegal trusts and monopolies, the exposure and punishment of evildoers in the public service, the more effective regulation of the rates and service of the great transportation lines; the complete overthrow of preference, rebates, and discriminations, the arbitration of labor disputes, the amelioration of the condition of wageworkers everywhere, the conservation of the natural resources of the country, the forward step in the improvement of the inland waterways, and always the earnest support and defense of every wholesome safeguard which has made more secure the guarantees of life, liberty, and prosperity.

Roosevelt's Place In History.

These are the achievements that will make for Theodore Roosevelt his place in history. But more than all else, the great things he has done will be an inspiration to those who have yet greater things to do. We declare our unfaltering adherence to the policies thus inaugurated, and pledge their continuance under a Republican administration of the government.

In the last house of congress many wholesome and progressive laws were enacted, and we especially commend the passage of the emergency currency bill, the appointment of the national monetary commission, the employers' and government liability laws, the measures for the greater efficiency of the army and navy, the widows' pension bill, the model child labor law for the District of Columbia, designed for emulation by the states; the new statutes for the safety of railroad engineers and firemen and many other acts conserving the public welfare.

For Revision of Tariff.

The Republican party declares unequivocally for a revision of the tariff by a special session of congress immediately following the inauguration of the next president, and commends the steps already taken to this end in the work assigned to the appropriate committees of the two houses which are now investigating the operation and effect of existing schedules.

In all tariff legislation the true principle of protection is best maintained by the imposition of such duties as will equal the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, together with a reasonable profit to American industries; and the benefits that follow are best secured by the establishment of maximum and minimum rates to be administered by the president under limitations fixed in the law, the maximum to be available to meet discrimination by foreign countries against American goods entering their markets and the minimum to represent the normal measure of protection at home; the aim and purpose of the Republican policy being not only to preserve, without excessive duties, that security against foreign competition to which American manufacturers, farmers and producers are entitled, but also to maintain the high standard of living of the wage earners of this country, who are the most direct beneficiaries of the protective system.

Between the United States and the Philippines we believe in a free interchange of products, with such limitation as to sugar and tobacco as will avoid injury to domestic interests.

We approve the emergency measures adopted by the government during the recent financial disturbance, and especially commend the passage by the last session of congress of the temporary enactment designed to protect the country from a repetition of such stringency only until there can be established a permanent currency system that will avoid all emergencies. The Republican party is committed to the development of such a permanent system, responding to our greater needs.

In line with the purpose here declared to secure by every wise means greater safety and stability in the banking and currency system, we favor the establishment of postal savings banks for the people, upon principles embodied in the measure now pending in congress.

Anti-trust and Railroad Laws.

The Republican party passed the Sherman anti-trust law over Democratic opposition, and enforced it after Democratic rejection. It has been a wholesome instrument for good in the hands of a wise and fearless administration. But experience has shown that its effectiveness can be strengthened, and its real object better obtained, by such amendments as will give to the federal government greater supervision and control over, and secure greater publicity in the management of, that class of interstate corporations having power and opportunity to effect monopolies, and at the same time will not interfere with the operation of such associations among business men, farmers, and wage earners as result in a positive benefit to the public.

We approve the enactment of the railroad rate law and the vigorous enforcement by the present administration of the statutes against rebates and discriminations, as the result of which the advantages formerly possessed by the large shippers over the small shippers have substantially disappeared. In this connection we commend the appropriation of $350,000 by the present congress in order to enable the interstate commerce commission thoroughly to investigate and to give publicity to the accounts of interstate railroads. We believe, however, that the interstate commerce law should be further amended so as to give railroads the right to make and publish traffic agreements subject to the approval of the commission, but maintaining always the principle of competition between naturally competing lines and avoiding the common control of such lines by any means whatsoever, and especially favor the enactment of such legislation as will prevent by federal restriction the overissue of stocks and bonds by interstate carriers.

Party's Labor Record.

The same wise policy which has induced the Republican party to maintain protection to American labor; to establish an eight hour day in the construction of all public work; to increase the list of employees who shall have preferred claims for wages under the bankruptcy laws; to adopt an adequate child labor statute for the District of Columbia; to direct an investigation into the conditions of working women and children, and later of employees of telephone and telegraph companies engaged in interstate business; to appropriate $150,000 at the recent session of congress in order to secure a thorough inquiry into the causes of catastrophes and loss of life in the mines, and to amend and strengthen the law prohibiting the importation of contract labor, will be pursued in every legitimate direction within federal authority to lighten the burdens and increase the opportunity for happiness and advancement of all who toil. The Republican party recognizes the special needs of wageworkers generally, for their well being means the well being of all. But more important than all other considerations is that of good citizenship, and we especially stand for the needs of every American, whatever his occupation, in his capacity as a self respecting citizen.

Injunctions.

The Republican party will uphold at all times the authority and integrity of the courts, state and federal, and will ever insist that their powers to enforce their processes and to protect life, liberty and property shall be preserved inviolate. We believe, however, that the rule of procedure in the federal courts with respect to the writ of injunction should be more accurately defined by statute and that no injunction or temporary restraining order should be issued without notice except irreparable injury would result from delay, in which case a speedy hearing thereafter should be granted.

We indorse the movement inaugurated by the president for the co-operative conservatism of natural resources; we favor the preservation of the White mountain and Appalachian forests; we approve all measures to prevent the waste of timber, and commend the work now going on for the reclamation of arid lands. No obligation of the future is more insistent, and none will result in greater blessings to posterity.

Another Republican policy which must be ever maintained is that of generous provision for those who have fought the country's battles and for the widows and orphans of those who have fallen. We commend the increase in the widow's pension made by the last congress, and declare for a liberal administration of all pension laws, to the end that the people's gratitude may grow deeper as the memories of heroic sacrifice grow more sacred with the passing years.

Democratic Party Criticised.

Beyond platform declarations, there are fundamental differences between the Republican party and its chief opponent which make the one worthy and the other unworthy of public trust.

In principle, the difference between Democracy and Republicanism is that one stands for vacillation and timidity in government, the other for strength and purpose; one stands for obstruction, the other for construction; one promises, the other performs; one finds fault, the other finds work.

The present tendencies of the two parties are even more marked by inherent differences. The trend of Democracy is toward socialism, while the Republican party stands for a wise and regulated individualism.

THE DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM.

Party's Views Expressed In Ringing Words.

PUBLIC WASTE DEPLORED.

Change In Injunction Law Recommended and an Eight Hour Day For Government Laborers Demanded. Bank Deposits Should Be Guaranteed, the Tariff Revised and Guilty Trust Officials Rigorously Punished.

We, the representatives of the Democrats of the United States in national convention assembled, reaffirm our belief in and pledge our loyalty to the principles of the party.

We rejoice at the increasing signs of an awakening throughout the country. The various investigations have traced graft and political corruption to the representatives of predatory wealth, and laid bare the unscrupulous methods by which they have debauched elections and preyed upon a defenseless public through the subservient officials whom they have raised to place and power.

"Shall the people rule?" is the overshadowing issue which manifests itself in all the questions now under discussion.

Labor and Injunctions.

The courts of justice are the bulwark of our liberties, and we yield to none in our purpose to maintain their dignity. We resent the attempt of the Republican party to raise false issues respecting the judiciary.

Experience has proved the necessity of a modification of the present law relating to injunctions, and we reiterate the pledge of our national platforms of 1896 and 1904 in favor of the measure which passed the United States senate in 1896, but which a Republican congress has refused to enact; relating to contempts in federal courts and providing for trial by jury in cases of indirect contempt. We deem that the parties to all judicial proceedings should be treated with rigid impartiality and that injunctions should not be issued in any cases in which injunctions would not issue if no industrial dispute were involved.

Labor organizations should not be regarded as illegal combinations in restraint of trade. We favor the eight hour day on all government work, pledge the passage of a general employers' liability act and promise a law creating a department of labor.

The Tariff Plank.

We welcome the belated promise of tariff reform now affected by the Republican party in tardy recognition of the righteousness of the Democratic position on this question, but the people cannot safely intrust the execution of this important work to a party which is so deeply obligated to the highly protected interests as is the Republican party. We call attention to the significant fact that the promised relief was postponed until after the coming election—an election to succeed in which the Republican party must have that same support from the beneficiaries of the high protective tariff as it has always heretofore received from them and to the further fact that during years of power no action has been taken by the Republican congress to correct tariff iniquities.

We favor immediate revision of the tariff by the reduction of import duties, and material reductions should be made in the tariff upon the necessaries of life.

We demand that pulp, print paper, lumber, timber and logs be placed on the free list.

Publicity of Campaign Contributions.

We demand federal legislation forever terminating the partnership which has existed between corporations of the country and the Republican party.

In order that this practice shall be stopped for all time, we demand the passage of a statute punishing with imprisonment any officer of a corporation who shall either contribute on behalf of or consent to the contribution by a corporation of any money or anything of value to be used in furthering the election of a president or vice president of the United States, or of any member of congress thereof.

We pledge the Democratic party to the enactment of a law providing for the publication before election of all contributions above a reasonable minimum.

Railroad Regulation.

We assert the right of congress to exercise complete control over interstate commerce and the right of each state to exercise like control over commerce within its borders.

We demand such enlargement of the powers of the interstate commerce commission as may be necessary to compel railroads to perform their duties as common carriers and prevent discrimination and extortion.

We favor such legislation as will prohibit the railroads from engaging in business which brings them into competition with their shippers, also legislation which will assure such reduction in transportation rates as conditions will permit.

We insist that federal remedies for the regulation of interstate commerce and for the prevention of private monopoly shall be added to, not substituted for, state remedies.

Economy In Administration.

The Republican congress in session just ended has made appropriations amounting to $1,008,000,000, exceeding the total expenditures of the past fiscal year by $90,000,000 and leaving a deficit of more than $60,000,000 for the fiscal year. We denounce the needless waste of the people's money which has resulted in this appalling increase as a shameful violation of all prudent conditions of government as no less than a crime against the millions of working men and women from whose earnings the great proportion of these colossal sums must be extorted through excessive tariff exactions and other indirect methods.

Coincident with the enormous increase in expenditures is a like addition to the number of officeholders. During the past year 23,784 were added, costing $16,156,000, and in the past six years of the Republican administration the total number of new offices created, aside from many commissions, has been 90,319, entailing an additional expenditure of nearly $70,000,000. We denounce this great and growing increase in the number of officeholders as unnecessary and wasteful.

Banking.

The panic of 1907, coming without any legitimate excuse, when the Republican party had for a decade been in complete control of the federal government, furnishes additional proof that it is either unwilling or incompetent to protect the interests of the general public. It has so linked the country to Wall street that the sins of the speculators are visited upon the whole people.

We believe that in so far as the needs of commerce require an emergency currency such currency should be issued, controlled by the federal government and loaned on adequate security to national and state banks. We pledge ourselves to legislation under which the national banks shall be required to establish a guarantee fund for the prompt payment of the depositors of any insolvent national bank under an equitable system which shall be available to all state banking institutions wishing to use it.

We favor a postal savings bank if the guaranteed bank cannot be secured.

The Misuse of Patronage.

We condemn as a violation of the spirit of our institutions the action of the present chief executive in using the patronage of his high office to secure the nomination of one of his cabinet officers.

Waterways.

Water furnishes the cheapest means of transportation, and the national government, having the control of navigable waters, should improve them to their fullest capacity. We earnestly favor the immediate adoption of a liberal and comprehensive plan for improving every water course in the Union which is justified by the needs of commerce.

We favor an immediate declaration of the nation's purpose to recognize the independence of the Philippine Islands as soon as a stable government can be established.

Income Tax and Other Planks.

We favor an income tax as part of our revenue system, and we urge the submission of a constitutional amendment specifically authorizing congress to levy and collect a tax upon individual and corporate incomes and favor election of United States senators by direct vote.

We pledge the Democratic party to the enactment of a law to regulate the rates and services of telegraph and telephone companies engaged in the transmission of messages between the states, under the jurisdiction of the interstate commerce commission.

The Navy.

The constitutional provision that a navy shall be provided and maintained means a navy adequate to defend the entire American coast and all citizens.

We are opposed to the admission of Asiatic immigrants who cannot be amalgamated with our population, or whose presence among us would raise a race issue and involve us in controversies with oriental powers.

We believe in the upbuilding of the American and merchant marine without bounties from the public treasury.

We advocate the organization of a national bureau of public health.

We favor a generous pension policy.

Trusts.

We favor the vigorous enforcement of the criminal law against guilty trust magnates and officials and demand the enactment of such additional legislation as may be necessary to make it impossible for a private monopoly to exist in the United States. Among the additional remedies we specify three—first, a law preventing a duplication of directors among competing corporations; second, a license system which will, without abridging the right of each state to create corporations or its right to regulate as it will foreign corporations doing business within its limits, make it necessary for a manufacturing or trading corporation engaged in interstate commerce to take out a federal license before it shall be permitted to control as much as 25 per cent of the product in which it deals, the license to protect the public from watered stock and to prohibit the control by such corporation of more than 50 per cent of the total amount of any product consumed in the United States, and, third, a law compelling such licensed corporations to sell to all purchasers in all parts of the country on the same terms, after making due allowance for cost of transportation.

Natural Resources.

We repeat the demand for internal development and for the conservation of our natural resources contained in previous platforms, the enforcement of which Mr. Roosevelt has vainly sought from a reluctant party.

Conclusion.

The Democratic party is the champion of civil rights and opportunities to all; the Republican party is the party of privilege and private monopoly.

THE REPUBLICAN

BENJ. H. SINCELL, EDITOR.

THURSDAY, JULY 16, 1908.

FOR PRESIDENT,

WILLIAM H. TAFT,

OF OHIO.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT,

JAMES S. SHERMAN,

OF NEW YORK.

FOR CONGRESS,

GEORGE A. PEARRE,

OF ALLEGANY COUNTY.

THE high dive of His Excellency the Governor of Maryland for the Bryan band wagon was not unexpected, and from his gratification over the platform and the outlook one might imagine that Mr. Crothers' sole purpose in going to Denver was to assist in the nomination of William J. Bryan.

THE ISSUES.

From a long and well written editorial in Monday's Baltimore Sun, the inference may be fairly drawn that that newspaper will be most conservative in its utterances in this campaign. After presenting a symposium of public opinion gathered from the newspapers in the North, South, East and West, and discovering that the press is "discussing the political situation in a practical, sensible and, in the main, well balanced way," concludes as follows:

"Reflecting men and journals are convinced that the issues involved in this campaign call for no outbursts of hysteria, no vehement denunciation of political opponents, no appeals to class prejudice. The newspaper comments which we have published indicate a very grave interest and concern on the part of the press in questions at stake in the Presidential contest this year. But, except in very few quarters, we find at present no dispostion to suggest that a man cannot be a Democrat or a Republican without exposing himself to the suspicion that he is a public enemy. There are millions of good citizens in each of the two great parties. They are honest and patriotic according to their light. They vote their honest convictions, and in doing this they exercise the right of American citizens to vote as they believe. Before the close of this campaign the American people will have the opportunity to consider all arguments for and against the policies and the candidates of the two leading parties. Having heard the case presented for both sides, they will be prepared to render an intelligent verdict.

"On the whole, the press of the United States has started the discussion in a spirit free from rancor and devoid of hysteria or vehemence. The leaders in both parties and the orators should cooperate with the press to make this a campaign of "light and leading" and seek to influence voters by argument addressed to the conscience and convictions and minds of citizens. The thoughtful press has given party managers very striking suggestions in its comments as to the spirit in which the Presidential contest of 1908 should be conducted. No partisan who claims to be guided by the sincere convictions and absolute honesty of purpose can rightly deny the same virtues to the partisan of an opposing party. No man of independant views will deny that the partisan is exercising an independent voter exercises an unquestionalbe and inalienable right in voting his convictions regardless of party. The comments of the discriminating prees indicate that in this campaign there is a probability, especially in the West, of both parties recruiting from each other, with the independent voter an important factor this year as in the past. With a campaign of enlightment and reason all along the line the American people will be enabled to solve their problems with greater regard for the national welfare and the material prosperity of the country than in a campaign of bitter denunciation and dangerous appeals to class prejudice."

NO HOPE FOR BRYAN.

In figuring the chances of William J. Bryan for election, under the caption, "Bryan's Plan of Campaign, 'yesterday's New York Sun can see no hope for the Democratic presidential nominee. 'The nomination" says that paper, "of John W. Kern of Indiana for vice president by the Democratic national convention seems to confirm the report that Mr. Bryan has renounced the hope of gaining the electoral votes of New York, New Jersey and Connecticut and will concentrate his efforts upon carrying Ohio, Indiana and Illinois and upon recovering Kansas, Nebraska and the Rocky Mountain States which gave him pluralities in 1896. Upon these, the three Pacific States of California, Oregon and Washington, together with the border states he counts to give him a majority of the presidential electors.

"What prospect is there of this plan succeeding? Mr. Bryan evidently assumes or hopes that he can do in 1908 what Mr. Cleveland accomplished in 1892. Mr. Cleveland got one electoral vote from Ohio, five electoral votes from Michigan and all the electoral of Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin. The result was that although as a matter of fact Mr. Cleveland obtained pluralities in New York, New Jersy and Connecticut he might have lost those States and yet have won the presidency by a majority of 28 electoral votes.

"Evidently it is this precedent which is encouraging Mr. Bryan. The situation, however, in the middle West is materially different from what it was sixteen years ago. The states of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois had given no striking pluralities against Mr. Cleveland in 1888, and he carried Indiana in 1884. Four years ago, on the other hand, Mr. Roosevelt swept Ohio by upward of 255,000 plurality, Indiana by more than 93,000, and Illinois by phenomenal figures. How can such a start be overcome? State pride, which is enlisted for Taft, seems certain to prove a more potent factor in Ohio than any apathy caused by factional dissensions in the party. In Indiana the friends of Vice President Fairbanks may not support the Republican ticket with all the energy which they evinced in 1904, but they can scarcely be expected to embrace with ardor the cause of Mr. John W. Kern, whose aspirations for the Governoship of their state they have twice defeated. In Illinois Mr. Bryan has twice experiencee a disastrous rout, although in 1896 he had the advantage of following Mr. Cleveland's victory in that commonwealth. The Republicans are incomparably stronger now in Illinois than they were in Mr. Bryan's previous campaign. Nor can he hope to wrest from its old affiliation with the Republican party the Scandinavian vote in Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota and North Dakota, which Governor Johnson might have secured.

"As for Kansas, Nebraska, South Dakota, Colorado, Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, Utah and Nevada, Mr. Bryan's chance of carrying them has for the most part passed away with the issue of free silver, which he personified so illustriously twelve years ago.

"Our conclusion is that Mr. Bryan's plan of campaign is by no means promising and that he will be lucky if he gets more electoral votes than he obtained in 1900."

BORROWED THUNDER.

The Democratic party recognizes the importance and advantage of developing closer ties of pan-American friendship and commerce between the United States and her sister nations of Latin America.—Democratic platform.

That is to say, the Democratic party approves the Republican party's pan-American policy and repudiates its own opposition thereto.

The laws pertaining to the Civil Service should be honestly and rigidly enforced, to the end that merit and ability shall be the standard of appointment and promotion rather than services rendered to a political party.—Democratic platform.

Not forgetting that it was under a Republican administration that the merit system was adopted.

We earnestly favor the immediate adoption of a liberal and comprehensive plan for improving every water-course in the Union.—Democratic platform.

In other words, the execution of the plans formulated and urged by the Roosevelt administeation.

We believe the Panama Canal will prove of great value to our country and favor its speedy completion.—Democratic platform.

Yes, but how they did kick against President Roosevelt and Secretary Taft for their policy in undertaking that great and beneficient work!

We believe that the interests of this country would be best served by having a navy sufficient to defend the coasts of this country and protect American citizens wherever their rights may be in jeopardy.—Democratic platform.

Right! But why not preserve the truth of history by recalling that it was a Republican administration which began, against Democratic opposition, the work of creating such a navy?

RESUMPTION OF INDUSTRY.

Before the prosperity of the Westinghouse Electric Company became entangled with panic conditions the corporation was employing about 15,000 men. Since the entanglement there has been a material decrease of activity, with the usual consequences to labor. Now, however, and it is one of the important signs of the times, the works are again employing 9,000 men and gradually adding to the number. New orders are being received, and labor is sharing in the prosperity which is coming to capital. This it true of the other industrial institutions of this region. The National Fire Proofing Company, though it has deemed it the course of wisdom to pass its dividends because of the insufficiency of earnings of the last three months, is understood to have done a larger business during the month of June than in the same months of last year. Investors suffer from the passing of the dividend, it is true, but labor in the employ of the concern is beginning to benefit more more largely and the investor will soon again obtain his proper share. The dividend action of the Monongahela River Coal Company is fully justified by its recent report, the concern showing the increased earnings. This corporation resumed its usual dividend payment in July of last year, paid the January dividend and now pays a third one. The things we mention are evidences that business is surely becoming normal. There is, it is becoming plainer every day, encouragement in the situation for all. One does not need to be a constitutional optimist to perceive the betterment.—Pittsburg Gazette Times.

CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES.

We sincerely hope that the enthusiasm of the Democratic organization for Bryan—and Governor Crothers says it will jump right into the fight for him—will extend to that plank in the platform which demands publicity of campaign expenditures both before and after the election. 'Mr. Bryan thinks that election corruption is one of the vital features of the campaign, and intends to lay stress upon it from the start. We hope that our own local spellbinders when they take the stump will follow the cue of their chief. Of course, there is to be no ex post facto proceeding. There are a few distinguished officeholders in Maryland who can, and who probably will, make the welkin ring with denunciation of corruption at elections but who couldn't reach the timbers quick enough if publicity of their campaign expenditures were calle for.—Baltimore News.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

The great camp-meeting closed Monday night. A very large audience filled the Tabernacle while hundreds remained outside. The closing sermon was by Rev. Henry Ostrem, a great favorite of the meeting this summer. The meeting was dismissed at 10.30, but many remained at and about the altar until near midnight, loth to leave the sacred spot where many of them had been so blessed.

The attendance for the entire meeting was fully equal to that of any year in its history, and the crowd last Sunday was greater than ever before.

The announcement Saturday evening that Rev. Joseph Smith would have charge of the meeting next year was received with a sea of waving handkerchiess and other manifestations of joy and pleasure.

There is a general expression of opinion that the meeting next year will be much more largely attended by ministers, evangelists and others than ever before in its history.

The annual meeting of the Community was held yesterday morning when the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President of the Annual Meeting, Maj. J. M. Burns; Secretary of the Annual Meeting, Rev. L. A. Rudisill; Treasurer of the Community, Mr. E. E. Friend; Road Commissioner, Mr. J. L. Echard; Policeman, Mr. Upton Cuppett; Members of the Annual Committee, Rev. J. P. McKee and Mr. M. M. Schrock.

John D. Hayden, Supt. of the electric plant, while connecting one of the Talson cottages on E street yesterday afternoon, fell from a tree in front of the cottage, a distance of about thirty feet to the street, fracturing his left wrist and dislocating the elbow of the same arm besides receiving many bruises. Dr. H. W. McComas, reduced the fracture and the patient is now doing well, but he won't climb poles and trees for some time.

Among recent arrivals we note the Maxwells, of Clarksburg, Bardalls, of Moundsville, and Hartmans, (the family of the many little children who again occupy the Conner cottage), of Pittsburgh, Pa.

The number of people in cottages, hotels and boarding houses is considerably excess of this time last year.

TO HASTEN WORK OF GOOD ROADS

It May Be Possible to Let Some of the Contracts in February.

The Good Roads Commission will meet today in its office in the Union Trust building, Baltimore, and will consider the routes for the new roads in Calvert and St. Mary's counties. Resident and property owners in both counties will be heard and it is probable that before the meeting adjourns the routes will be selected.

The commission is now perfectly organized, both in engineering and clerical forces, and the commissioners believe construction work should begin immediately. It is realized that after the routes are selected it will recuire several weeks to secure all rights-of-way and then the specifications for doing the work will be advertised several weeks before bids are opened.

There is a general demand that these details be arranged as soon as possible and contracts let so that some work can be done the latter part of the summer and in the fall. During the winter months it is impossible to build roads. Considerable progress, it is believed could be made on the roads before cold weather sets in.

During the winter the details for the road running through the Eastern Shore counties and several roads in Western Maryland will be mapped out, so that it will be possible to let some contracts in February and the contractors will be able to begin work as soon as spring opens.

HIS FLORIDA VISIT.

Mr. George L. Michaels Writes Entertainingly of His Trip to the South.

Mr. George L. Michaels, of Firm Rock, one of Garrett county's best known, popular and substantial citizens, gives the following account of his trip to Florida, where he spent last winter:

After four years I once again find myself aboard of a railroad train, bound for the land of flowers, via Baltimore and Washington. One cannot feel justified in making a visit to Florida, and not spend a few days in the metropolis of the South, and the capital of the nation. Baltimore is recovering nobly from the disastrous fire of February, 1904, and is well entitled to be called the "Greater Baltimore of 1908." Washington city, beautifully located on the Potomac 40 miles south of the largest city in the Southland, is the pride and glory of the tourist going to Florida and the islands because of its many attractions especially when congress is in session, making laws, good or otherwise, for the people of this great nation One of the the special attractions of Washington city is the new union depot magnificent in all of its appointments, costing fourteen millions of dollars. West Washington is justly proud of this, the finest depot of the country, if not the world. All passenger traffic coming and going north and south, east and west, center at this magnificent depot.

We boarded an Atlantic Coast Line train down stairs where the Southern trains arrive and depart, at 4:20 a. m., for Jacksonville, about 1,000 miles. Arrived at old historic Fredericksburg, at day light. The next place of importance is Ashland, beautifully situated, and where is located a branch of the Randolph-Macon College. Then, "On to Richmond," arriving there between 9 and 10 o'clock. My friend, who had served 3 years as captain of an artillery company in the Civil War in front of R. P. B. pointed out many places where batteries and entrenchments had been located. He also related instances of bravery and daring of both the "Blue and the Gray" that he had personal knowledge of and by no means the least of the objects of interest was old Libby Prison and Castle Thunder. While in and around Richmond and Petersburg my friend says that the Richmond and Petersburg of '61 to '64 was not of the latter date. The new southern idea has struck the Richmondite and the Petersburger heavily, and "progress" is now the watch word.

Our train sped on to Danville, Va., Weldon and Charlotte, N. C., Florence and Charleston, S. C., Savannah and Way Cross, Ga., arriving at Jacksonville at 9:30 the second day out from Washington, having spent 28 hours on the way.

We took rooms at the Lee Roy hotel for a few days, taking in the opening of the Midwinter Florida State Exposition, which was formally opened on January 25th, by a very able address by a very able address by Governor Broward, followed by Henry Flagler, the millionaire benefactor of the east coast of Florida. We also visited the ostrich farm, where were quartered a number of cages of animals for the winter. A free exhibition was given for the benefit of the large gathering of tourists and others to be present at the opening of the State Fair.

Five years ago the writer visited Florida and made a stop over at Jacksonville going and coming. This was just after the great fire of 1902, which wiped out 58 city blocks in the business portion of the city. Very few of the people had rebuilt at this time, but "Onward" seems to be the watchward now.

Jacksonville has gotten out of its swadling clothes. It is no longer a village. It is no longer a town. It is a beautiful city, with a city's impulses, wants, opportunities and development. Jacksonville is the largest city in the southern states, without exception. Anyone who walks the streets of Jacksonville, who looks at her residences, her business houses, gets acquainted with her people, sees what she is and what she is doing, observes the enterprise, push, energy and public spirit that is gradually becoming almost universal, learns that her people are rebuilding the burnt districts, and everybody is in favor of every enterprise for the public good. Year by year her pavements increase, her mileage become a very much more desirable place of residence, and with its large population, it is a great city on the historic St. John's river, sixteen miles from the ocean.

After spending four days at Jacksonville I took leave of my new acquaintance and friend and boarded an Atlantic Coast Line train for the west coast, my new friend going to the east coast. I stopped off at Sanford for change of cars for Oakland, where I arrived in the evening and was meet by my cousins. This town is on the south shore of the second largest lake in the state—Lake Apopka, covering about 200 square miles, and is a beautiful body of water and is bountifully stocked with numerous kinds of fish among which are the black bass and pike. This lake is longer than broad, and at the northwest end is the famous "blue spring," the Indian name is "Winny Bobow." This spring is certainly one of the greatest attractions to the lake, it being nearly 100 feet deep. Our boat stopped over the center of the flow of water, and we could feel the current of the flow into the lake, and the water is of good quality, being clear as crystal for a long distance around. A silver dollar can be easily seen at the bottom with the naked eye. I think this body of water has been written up sufficiently, in as much as there are so many inland seas in the state, I will venture to write of the pleasure and enjoyment that I had with my cousin on this lake fishing for the famous black bass. Fish is only taken here with hook and line. There are various methods employed; some fishermen plant stakes some distance apart and stretch lines from point to point upon which are numerous short lines and hooks. On these lines the cat fish are taken in large quantities, and are shipped from this point. Cousin and I used the row boat and the trowling lines. He rowed and I landed the fish; many of which were quite large and of an excellent quality. I think it best to close the "fish story," by saying that fishing and eating them was enjoyed thoroughly by me, as the fish "liar" is abroad in the land—and I do not wish to have my veracity encroached upon.

Two railways pass through the town, the A. C. L., and T & G., and is the end of a division of one of these roads, with extensive round house and repair shops, but like many other towns, the shops were removed to Sanford after the town had grown, to a population of size, but has dwindled down to a few permanent resident and is surrounded by many fine and well kept fruit and vegetable farms. There are several stores here, blacksmith shop, two packing houses, two railroad stations, one large church, owned by the Presbyterians, use of which is granted the Southern Methodists at regular intervals. The school house is located midway between Oakland and Winter Garden, so as to accommodate the children of the two towns. The trustees, who are first-class men, employ a principal and several assistants. The school is kept open four terms of 10 weeks each year. To state in brief what I know of the orange and grape fruit groves, and vegetable farms in Orange county, the yield for shipment is enormous. The two stations at Oakland, one at Tildenville, one at Winter Garden, and one at Killarney, nearby stations, from October 1st to March 30th, would amount to more than one hundred thousand boxes and crates of fruit and vegetables. A large portion of this lake front was owned by one of Orange county's popular and best known citizens, the late Judge Spier, who cultivated cotton and corn upon those broad acres before the Civil War. The cotton was hauled to Sanford on the St. John's over a sand road about 40 miles and loaded upon steamers for the northern factories. At this time there were very few factories in the southern states. This was as of old slavery days. Conditions have changed. These are the days of the New South.

Mr. Editor, if this does not find its way to the waste basket, I will write again next week.

TRUSTEE'S SALE OF Valuable Farm

Located about one mile Northeast of Friendsville, Garrett County.

By virtue of a Decree of the Circuit Court for Garrett county passed in a cause in said court wherein Silas Teats is complainant and Allen Teats and others are defendants, being No. 1321 Equity, the undersigned Trustee will, on Saturday, the 18th Day of July,

1908, in front of the Postoffice, in the town of Friendsville, at the hour of 2 o'clock p. m. of said day, offer at public auction to the highest bidder, all that farm located about one mile Northeast of the town of Friendsville, Garrett county, Maryland, which is known as the

and described as follows:

FIRST—All that part of a tract of land called the "Gleanings," lying North of Bear Creek, containing the quantity of fifty acres of land and being the same land which was conveyed to Andrew Jackson Teats by deed from David P. Mays et ux., dated the 27th day of September 1884, and recorded in Liber W. H. T. No. 9, folio 472, etc., one of the Land Records of Garrett county. Part of said fifty acres is cleared and under cultivation.

SECOND—All that other part of a tract of land called the "Gleanings," situated and adjoining the above piece of land, containing the quantity of fifty acres of land and being the same which was conveyed to the said Andrew Jackson Teats by deed from Silas Teats et ux., dated the 1st day of August 1885, and recorded in Liber W. H. T. THEIR VICTIM SUCCUMBED

Slav Who was Assaulted by Two Fellow-Countrymen at Donson is Dead.

The Slav miner who was assaulted by two of his fellow-countrymen at Dodson, this county, on the afternoon of the Fourth, died on last Thursday as a result of his injuries, and was buried at Blaine the following day.

The full story of the assault was published exclusively in this paper last week, the men being implicated in the affray having been arrested on Sunday and brought to the jail here the same day where they will be held until the charge against them is disposed of at the Grand Jury Term of the Circuit Court which convenes next December.

As was stated last week an operation was performed on the injured Slav Thursday, when it was found by the surgeons that his skull had been fractured and concussion of the brain resulting. Besides being slashed with knives and seriously cut the victim of the assault had been struck at the base of the brain with a shovel, which was the immediate cause of his death.

Ex-Sheriff A. L. Lee, acting as coroner, summoned a jury of inquest at Blaine and after viewing the remains and hearing the testimony of witnesses to the affair, the verdict was that the Slav had come to his death as a result of the injuries received at the hands of the two men now in jail charged with the crime.

Mr. Graham Dukehart, Grand Lecturer of the Mosonic fraternity of Maryland, was in Oakland Tuesday when he made an official visit to the local lodge. Mr. Dukehart was accompanied to Oakland from his home in Baltimore by his daughter and granddaughter.

Mr. and Mrs. Gilmor S. Hamill arrived home from Denver, Col., where Mr. Hamill went as a delegate to the late Democratic convention, Tuesday evening. By his vote in the convention, which was cast for Johnson, Mr. Hamill carried out his expressed determination not to support Mr. Bryan's candidacy.

Hon. and Mrs. S. A. Kendall returned last Friday from Mt. Clemens, Mich., where the latter had been for some time for the benefit of her health. They went at once to "Kendalwood," their summer home, and it will be good news to Mrs. Kendall's many friends to learn that her health has has not been better in years.—Meyersdale Republican.

C. A. Wilt, of Bayard, W. Va., joined his family here, last week. They are enjoying a visit among their Salisbury friends, and they are thinking of again moving back to Salisbury. Mr. Wilt moved to Bayard about a year ago, where he embarked in the merchandising business under very favorable prospects, but the panic has flattened things out there in a most deplorable manner, same as in many other places, and for that reason, and the fact that Bayard has very poor church and school facilities, he may decide to again return with his family to Salisbury.—Star.

Senator Arthur Pue Gorman and his cousin, Mr. Douglas Gorman, the latter accompanied by his wife, have been visitors in this city and vicinity, since Sunday last, coming from Deer Park in their touring car to Mt. Bladen Lowndes, the company including in addition to the host and hostess and guests of honor, Judge Robert R. Henderson, Mr. Daniel Annan, Mr. Lloyd Lowndes and Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Biays. Senator Gorman and Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Gorman will continue their journey to Baltimore to day, via Hancock and Hagerstown—Cumberland News.

The National Drainage Association has opened offices in the duPont Building, in Wilmington, Delaware, and will enter upon a vigorous campaign looking to the drainage, by Government aid, of the 80,000,000 acres of swamp and overflowed lands within the United States. In order to facilitate the collection of the necessary data and statistics, the Association requests that all owners of such lands, no matter how large or small their holdings, send their names, address, number of acres of such land owned, to the Association at the above address. The receipt of this data will greatly aid in the early prosecution of this work, and will be of great advantage not only to the country at large, but especially to individual owners of swamp and overflowed land.

There's nothing on earth so mysteriously funny as an advertisement. The prime, first and last, and all-the-time objects of an advertisement is to draw custom. It is not and never will be designed for any other purpose. So the merchant waits till the busy season comes and his store is so full of customers that he can't get his hat off, and then he rushes to his printer and goes in for advertising. When the dull season gets along and there is no trade, and he wants to sell his goods so bad he can't pay his rent, he stops advertising. That is, some of them do, but occasionally a level-headed merchant does more of it, and scoops in all the business, while his neighbors are making mortgages to pay their bills.

The Merry Widow

By ALBERT PAYSON TERHUNE

COPYRIGHT, 1908, BY HENRY W. SAVAGE

CHAPTER I.

The Girl With the Millions.

"THE widow just now is the queen of our diplomatic chessboard," sighed the Marsovian ambassador's pretty wife. "She will be here tonight. My husband is hanging over the banisters watching for her."

"But what reason?"

"Oh, he has exactly twenty million reasons for"—

"I don't understand," murmured M. de Jolidon.

"No? Then you are probably the only bachelor in Paris who doesn't. She was the daughter of a poor Marsovian farmer—no dowry but her beauty. An enormously rich old banker named Sadowa, wealthiest man in Marsovia, fell in love with her, married her and did her the exquisitely graceful favor of dying a week later. She inherited his whole fortune—$20,000,000."

"And now I suppose she has come to Paris to spend it?"

"Oh, the money is safe enough for the present, I believe, in the Bank of Marsovia. But my husband wants it to stay there. So does the Marsovian government. Ours is not a rich country, M. de Jolidon. That's why a new white hair appears in my worthy husband's head every time one of your Parisian lady killers makes love to her. It's all absurdly simple."

"Well," laughed De Jolidon, "his hair needn't turn whiter on my account. I'll be the one Frenchman who won't make love to Mme. Sadowa."

"But you must."

"What?"

"You must marry her, at any rate."

"Are you mad, Natalie, or is this"—

"It is no joke, and I'm not mad. I've thought it all out."

The ambassador's wife glanced nervously about her. She and De Jolidon were ensconced in an alcove of the salon.

It was the night of the embassy ball. From the adjoining ballroom came the strains of a waltz and the soft gliding of hundreds of dancing feet. Guests were passing and repassing along the great hallway and broad stairs at the rear of the salon. But for the moment the two had the room to themselves.

"Listen," she said. "My husband suspects nothing thus far, but he is certain to in time unless"—

"Unless I divert his thoughts by marrying some one else? I can't, and you know I can't, for I"—

"Hush! You mustn't say it. I am a dutiful wife. And—what are you doing?" she queried as he snatched up her fan from the table. With the pencil that dangled from his dancing card De Jolidon scribbled three words on one of the ivory sticks of the fan, then handed it to his hostess.

Natalie, with a little catch in her breath, slowly read the words aloud:

"I—love—you!"

"Why did you write this?" she asked.

"Because you forbade me to say it," he retorted.

"Tell his excellency I have come back," broke in a voice at the door.

As a servant hurried off with the message the speaker waddled into the room. He was a stout, ungainly little man, clad in the quaint national costume of Marsovia. Bald of head, popping of eye and with abnormally long red mustache, his was a personality to excite laughter in a mummy.

The newcomer was Nish, messenger and clerk of the embassy. At his approach Natalie and De Jolidon slipped away to the ballroom. A moment later a tall, lean, fussy man with hooked nose and mincing gait trotted down the stairway and into the salon.

"Well, Mr. Nish," he asked peevishly, "did you find Prince Danilo at home?"

"No, your excellency," faltered the little man. "He"—

"Did you go thence, as I told you, to the American bar at"—

THE MERRY WIDOW.

"Yes, sir. But he was not at home there tonight."

"Odd. He's usually very much at home there, I'm told. So you failed in your mission? You couldn't find him?"

"Oh, yes, your excellency, I found him—that is to say, I"—

"Oh, you found him at last? That's better. Where?"

"At Maxim's, your"—

"Maxim's, eh?" snorted Ambassador Popoff scornfully. "Idling away his time, as usual, when"—

"Oh, no, your excellency, not exactly 'idling,' if I may say so. He seemed very busy. There were a number of bottles and"—

"Was he sober?"

"Not distressingly so, your excellency. In fact, if I may"—

"Did you give him my message? Did you tell him?"

"I gave it word for word, sir. I told him his country was calling for him and that your excellency desired his immediate presence at the embassy."

"Well, what was his answer?"

"He said, 'Give my country my regards and tell it to go to'"—

"Where?" snapped Popoff as Nish paused in embarrassment.

"I'd—I'd rather not say, sir; no place I'm at all familiar with."

"Oh, the ingrate," wailed Popoff, "the ingrate! Here he has been employed at the embassy all these months, and I've winked at his loafing and his dissipation, and the very first minute I really need him he refuses to come."

"Oh, no, your excellency," pleaded Nish; "scarcely as bad as all that, if I may say so—not 'refused' exactly. He will come. At least he promised to."

"Ah, that lifts a load from my brain if he promised he'll come! Diplomatically speaking, Prince Danilo's word is as good as his bond."

"Diplomatically speaking, your excellency," affirmed Nish, "he agrees to be here as soon as he has finished the magnum of champagne that was in the ice pail beside him when I left."

"How much of it was gone?"

"The cork was not yet drawn, but"—

"Be on the lookout for him, Mr. Nish. When he comes put ice on his head if necessary. Sober him at any cost."

"I fancy it will be cheaper than filling him up. I'll do my best, your excellency."

But the ambassador at a whispered word from a servant had already pottered out of the room as fast as his somewhat shaky old legs would carry him, and the voluble Nish ran along in his wake.

A commotion swept through the scattered groups in the foyer—a murmur, a rustle, a whisper that resolved itself at last into the excited phrases:

"The widow has arrived!" "Twenty millions and unincumbered!" "Widow of Sadowa, the animated money bag!" "A Monte Cristo fortune for some lucky man!" "Her name is Sonia Sadowa; twenty millions—red hair, too, but a beauty!" "Twenty millions!" "The Merry Widow!"

Down the stairway from the dressing rooms and into the salon swept a woman—young, beautiful, vivacious. A light of mischief danced in her great dark eyes.

Her masses of auburn hair shone like an aureole above her rather pale, delicate face. About her hovered a half score of gallants, all vying for a word, a look, from the beauty (and fortune) of the Paris season.

Two men—the Marquis of Cascada and the Count de St. Brioche—were lucky enough to claim for a moment or two her attention.

"No, no!" Sonia was saying in protest. "At home, in Marsovia, men don't make such pretty speeches. Courtship there is very primitive and marriage is for life. When a man makes love to another's wife, he is promptly shot. When a wife flirts, her husband beats her black and blue—a good plan. Why not try it in Paris?"

"Delightful!" exclaimed Cascada. "Do you know, madame, we have been counting the moments until you appeared?"

"I can well believe it," assented Sonia. "It must have been just like counting money."

"Oh, madame!" protested the group, horrified.

"Don't I know?" retorted Sonia, a little bitterly. "It's always like that. People count me like so much money. If it is coarse for me to say so, remember I'm a farmer's daughter and that in my country people call a spade a spade."

Popoff and Natalie came hurriedly in to pay their respects to the guest upon whom Marsovia's hopes so depended. At a sign from the ambassador the others drew back.

"So you were shocking some of our Paris gallants?" beamed the ambassador. "What a child of nature you are!"

"You mean," countered Sonia, "that I am a peasant dressed up. How I wish sometimes that I were a real peasant again!"

"Ah!" chuckled Popoff. "Child of nature, true child of nature, always remembering the dear old days on the farm—the bleating of the pigs, the new laid milk, the tomatoes freshly dug up and all the simple joys of the country! But I want you to meet tonight some of our Marsovian nobility—for instance, Prince Danilo, a charming young fellow. He'll be here presently. Danilo is"—

But the mischief had died out of Sonia's eyes. Her face was paler than was its wont, and there was a stern look as of pain about the daintily chiseled mouth.

"I have already met Prince Danilo," she said curtly.

"Really?" cried Popoff. Then, noting her change of expression, he added with apprehension:

"I hope it was not on one of his wet days—a charming, lovable youngster in spite of his"—

"I am not interested in hearing about him," broke in Sonia in a curiously level, emotionless voice. "It was long ago that we met. He will have forgotten me even as—as I have forgotten him. Let us talk of something else, please."

Even Popoff could see something was seriously amiss.

CHAPTER II.

Old Love and New.

"WELL, here I am," announced a tall, slender youth, entering the deserted salon a few minutes later with Nish at his side. "I'm here at my country's call, all right, but my confounded country doesn't seem to be on hand to meet me."

His graceful walk was not wholly steady, and there was a flush on the handsome young face. The late arrival was Prince Danilo of Marsovia, attache of the Marsovian legation at Paris. As a diplomat he had scarcely scored a success, for he had a delightfully normal aversion to work and a simple, unfailing joy in the amusements of Maxim's and his clubs.

"I'll hunt up his excellency at once," Nish was assuring the prince. "Are—are you quite in condition to see him, if I may"—

"Oh, I'm all right enough," yawned Danilo, "only I forgot to go to bed last night. If I could reel off a few yards of sleep"—

"Perhaps I could find you some place to"—

"I'd prefer a desk, if you can find one. I always sleep best at my desk. But I suppose"—

"There is a couch, sir, over in the corner behind the palms. How would that do? You could get a nice nap there, and in a little while I'd find his excellency for you. But, sir, if I may say so, why do you waste your life in dissipation when you might marry and settle down? Just think, now! Would not a dear little wife and a home of your own be better worth while than all your clubs? I leave it to you if"— "You leave it to me?" retorted Danilo. "Then I make it clubs."

"But, if I may say so"—

"You may not," interrupted Danilo, crossing to the couch and throwing himself at full length among its cushions. "By by! 'If you're waking, call me early?' "

He spread a handkerchief over his face and in a moment was sound asleep, leaving Nish to tiptoe out in search of Popoff.

For a few minutes no sound was audible in the empty salon save the distant swell and fall of dance music, punctuated by the slumbrous prince's heavy breathing.

Then Natalie hurried in with De Jolidon. Both looked anxious.

"How careless of me!" the ambassador's wife was exclaiming. "Where can I have dropped the miserable fan? If my husband should pick it up and find on it those words you were foolish enough to write— I wonder if I left it in the niche on the stairs when we were sitting there. Let's go back and see."

They turned back, almost colliding with Sonia, who was entering. Cascada directly behind her.

"Oh, Mme. Sadowa," asked Natalie, "you haven't seen anything of a white ivory fan? I've looked everywhere, and"—

"No," replied the widow; "but I'll look in this room if you haven't made a thorough search here already."

Natalie, thanking her, hurried back with her cavalier to the stairway. Sonia idly began her search, but Cascada interrupted her.

"That can wait," he pleaded, "but I cannot. Won't you hear me?"

"Certainly," assented Sonia cheerfully. "You are going to propose, aren't you?"

"Ah, you read my secret!"

"It required little cleverness. You men are all alike."

"But no man ever before loved as I love!" protested Cascada, his voice unconsciously rising in his emotion. "You are all the world to me. Until I met you I never thought I could"—

"Ring off!" grumbled Danilo in his sleep, vaguely bothered by the loud voice.

Sonia started.

"Some one is here!" she whispered, pointing toward the hidden couch.

"You are mistaken," contradicted Cascada, "and even if it were so I am willing for all the world to know how I"—

THE LATE ARRIVAL WAS PRINCE DANILO.

A long, blissful, sonorous snore from the couch.

Sonia laughed, her eyes alight with amusement.

"Snoring and romance don't go well together, marquis," she observed, "and as the snoring doesn't seem likely to stop the romance must. You say you are in love with me, and I know you are in love with my fortune. Good-by."

"You misjudge me cruelly!" Cascada protested.

"Oh, no, I don't! Men are all alike. Goodby."

As the discomfited marquis made his way wrathfully from the room Sonia mischievously crept across to the couch. There lay the man, sound asleep, his face still covered by the handkerchief. Sonia touched his hair.

"Scat!" roared Danilo, giving his head a shake that let the handkerchief fall from his face.

"Danilo!" gasped the widow, starting back.

At sound of his name the prince sat up, dazed and blinking. His wandering eyes fell on the woman, and, with an exclamation of utter amazement, he stumbled to his feet and stood staring incredulously at her.

"Sonia!" he exclaimed. "Sonia!"

Then, recovering himself, he bowed stiffly and said:

"I beg your pardon, madame."

"No; I beg yours," she replied. "Pray go on snoring."

"You don't remember me?" he asked, surprised.

"Not in the very least," she answered, moving away.

"Yet you called my name."

"You were asleep then. That was different."

"And now I am awake—to the joy of seeing you again."

"The joy is all your own. Is it so surprising to find me in Paris? I am here enjoying my wealth—and freedom!"

"I congratulate you on both, especially the freedom."

"Yes, freedom is one of your fads, I believe," remarked Sonia, "especially freedom from marriage. Do you still make a habit of avoiding marriage—at the last moment?"

THE FAMILY QUARREL.

Mr. and Mrs. Newlove Have a War of Words Over a Simple Matter.

The telephone bell jingled joyously. Mr. and Mrs. Newlove were seated at the pretty mahogany table reading.

"Nellie, dear, will you answer the phone?" warbled the benedict.

"Now, Charlie, you know I never like to answer," she replied.

"But it's some member of your family. They generally begin telephoning about this time every evening."

"It is not so."

"Probably your mother."

"No; it isn't, Charlie."

"Or your father."

"No; not father."

"Maybe your brother Willie."

"The truth about the matter is that some member of your family is calling."

"How absurd! They never call."

"I suppose they want to tell you how to crush my spirits."

"Rather it is your mother with some instructions on how to work me for my money."

"It is untrue."

"Well, the phone message isn't for me."

"It isn't for me either."

"Well, I'll end this by answering the phone. Of course I will have to call you, but what's the difference as long as we have peace?

"Hello!"

"No. This is not B 184. You have the wrong number."—John H. McNeely in Puck.

Family Blessings.

She was hearing her little four-year-old say his evening prayers. This supplication at the end included a request for blessings upon a long list of relatives, a list increased a month before by the arrival of an aunt and within the week by the addition of two cousins. This night he was half through the family catalogue when the doorbell rang.

"Wait a minute, darling," the mother said, hurrying downstairs. The summons proved to be from callers, and the little supplicant was forgotten. Five minutes passed and then from above came a long drawn "Mama-a-a!"

"What is it, dearie?" called the mother, stepping into the hall.

Compensation.

Why need you so regretful yearn
For boyhood days so long gone by?
A bent pin caught your fish, but then
You could not tell so big a lie.

No doubt your rusty little gun
Brought down the bird and squirrel dead,
But then you could not tell such tales
Of how you killed a tiger dread.

No doubt the quiet swimming pool
Beheld some very daring dives,
But then you could not tell the tale
Of how you saved four dozen lives.

So grieve not for the passing years
That may have made your prowess lame.
Between performance and the tale
The balance still remains the same.

ENSLAVEMENT OF THE CHINESE

Mongolians Smuggled Into This Country Practically Sold Into Bondage.

"Chinese traffic, as conducted by modern smugglers, is just like the slave trade of the olden days," said Inspector Ross of the immigration office, who, for several years, under Chief Inspector Tippett, followed the trail of the smugglers. "It is made to pay in the same way as the negro traffic in the south was made to pay in slavery days," continued Mr. Ross.

"The poor Chinese, who come to this country at great expense to some persons, are nothing less than slaves for several years. What man who understands the business, wouldn't be willing to put up, say, $1,000, in order to have a bond slave working for him, for perhaps five years, for nothing but food and clothing?

"In order to understand just how it is done, one must know all about the conditions under which Chinese live in this country; must be familiar with their mysterious organization and their social instinct, and the national tie which binds them together in the very mist of a race, which would like to do away with them, and which has passed exclusion laws to that end.

"While we are all the time trying to trap and arrest the men who are bringing the Chinese over the border, they are not the ones at the bottom of the system. The ones who are actually at the bottom of the system are wealthy Chinese merchants in Chicago and elsewhere. They are the ones who usually finances the enterprise, but to connect them with the smuggling in a criminal way seems almost impossible. Yet, many of these Chinese merchants are not at all secretive in their interest in the Chinese, whom we sometimes capture. They come into open court and put up cash bail for the Celestials and they see that they are delivered back to the court.

"For instance there is Hong Sling, who owns several laundries and restaurants, and who is interested in various other enterprises in Chicago. He didn't hesitate to show an interest in three Chinese we recently brought over from the border. He was in Commissioner Harris's office, in Port Huron, when the three were arraigned, and he supplied $3,000 cash bail for the three men, taking them to Chicago to await examination.

"I asked Hong Sling if he were not afraid the three men would run away, and he be the loser.

"'They won't run away,' replied Sling. 'They wouldn't dare go.'

"'Suppose they did run away?' I asked Sling.

"'I'd get them again,' he said.

"'What would happen if they did try to keep away from you?' I asked him again. And Sling drew his finger across his throat, smiled meaningly and made a gurgling sound.

"Perhaps Sling didn't mean just that. But he meant something like it. He meant that smuggled Chinese can't evade their bondmasters. Suppose these three Chinamen did run away, and Sling lost $1,000 each for their bail, they would have to pay him in labor for years to come.

"Even if they don't run away, and stay to contest the cases in court, those Chinese will cost close to $1,000 each before they get free, if they do escape the courts. It costs about $500 to have them smuggled, and it costs about $500 in court for attorneys and expenses. It is just a matter of investing $1,000 in a slave. Of course, you might say that a Chinaman will work in gratitude for the man who defends him, but it is not all gratitude. The man wants to get into the country and he makes a hard bargain. He knows he can't escape paying his part of the bill, because the Chinese organizations in this country would follow him just as the slave owners in the south used to help each other in getting back escaped negros. He is traced out. He has to abide by custom. We couldn't follow a Chinaman that way, but the Chinese can. They have a way of keeping track of their countrymen. They seldom fail.

"Since 1903 we have captured in this district 60 Chinese and 25 white men on smuggling charges. Of those Chinamen 32 were deported, but the other 28 remained here. Of the white men, 11 served time in prison. There is a system behind it all. We must admit that scores of Chinese are brought over the borders without detection, and that makes the business pay. But when a Chinaman is caught, the man behind it all considers in a matter of principle at stake to try to set him free.

"It is nothing in the world but a slave trade. But it is conducted in such a way that the law seems to have very little hold upon it, except that a man is caught now and then coming over the border. The real backbone of the system is in this country.

"In the case of these last three Chinese the bail was in creased from $500 to $1,000, just to make it more severe on the backers and make it more certain that the captured men will not escape. It has been the custom in the past to fix the bail at $500.—Detroit Free Press.

AN HONOR FOR MR. HENDRICKSON

The National Prohibitionists Wish to Nominate Him For Vice President.

Mr. Finley C. Hendrickson, of Cumberland, who is prominent in the ranks of the Prohibition party, may receive the honor of being nominated by the National Prohibition party for the office of vice president of the United States. From a good source it was stated last evening that the nomination would probably be tendered Mr. Hendrickson. Mr. Hendrickson is well known here. He is a member of the Allegany County Bar, and for many years a resident of Cumberland, is a native of Bedford county, Pa., where he was born October 22, 1863. He was a farmer's boy and was educated in the public schools. He studied law under Chief Judge A. Hunter Boyd and was admitted to the bar in October, 1895. Mr. Hendrickson has always been a Prohibitionist and never identified with either of the old parties. For some years he was court stenographer. He was the Prohibition candidate five years ago for Attorney General of Maryland, and has since been a candidate for State's Attorney of Allegany county, and for State Senator, receiving for the last office 934 votes when the ticket generally in Allegany county received about four hundred votes. Mr. Hendrickson is an able speaker and has inaddresses given special attention, recently to Inter-State Commerce laws in reference to liquor shipments. He was during the last session of Congress at the head of the Prohibition bureau of work among the National legislators at Washington. Mr. Hendrickson is a man of much force of character and stands high in the esteem of his fellow citizens.

The Prodigal's Return.

The prodigal Son approached the ancestral homestead with a considerable degree of pleasurable anticipation, only to be met afar off by his elder brother, who straightway lifted up his voice saying:

"Our beloved father begs me to inform you that, owing to the fact that he has but recenty been invaded by a prodigal daughter and her titled and impoverished husband, he does not at this time feel equal to the task of providing for you the reception you doubtless expect and probably deserve. However, he bids me request you to repair to one of the plain but servicable restaurants in the village nearby and there sojourn until he can get the present incubusses, or incubi, as the case may be, off his hands, when, if there is anything left of the fatted calf and the other comestibles, he will be delighted to share the same with you."—Puck.

HE WAS SPARED BY THE CANNIBALS.

The Harrowing Experience of a Missionary Held Captive by Savages.

One of the Indiana delegates to the Pan American church conference at Westminster abbey, London, the Rev. Edmund A. Neville rector of St. Paul's Episcopal church, New Albany, Ind., although a young man, has traveled in all parts of the globe and at one time was a captive for 15 months of cannibals on the Island of New Guinea, northwest of Australia.

In 1892 he joined an English party, consisting of six young missionaries and a number of converted South Sea islanders, which sailed for Australia for New Guinea, and after reaching the island steamed in a launch up Fly river to an unexplored region, 600 miles from its mouth.

They constructed their thatched huts and had settled for their work among the natives when they were attacked one night by a savage band, and the settlement was wiped out, Mr. Neville being the only survivor of the party.

The others were butchered as they slept, and Dr. Neville attributes his escape from death to the fact that he was sleeping in a hut apart from the others and was not discovered until the lust for blood had been satisfied.

The bodies of his companions were roasted in great fires of wood, and they were devoured by the hundred or more savages, while he was compelled to stand by and witness the hideous orgy. After the feast, whice lasted for several days, the band resumed its march from the smoking ruins of the settlement with the lone captive, who expected to be killed at any moment and meet the fate of his friends.

Far in the jungles the band finally reached a village, where Dr. Neville fell ill of fever. The white man, the first they had ever seen, was a source of wonder to the women and children, and they exhibited a sort of rude tenderness toward the prisoner and satisfied his wants as well as they could be understood. He was unconscious for days, and finally he began gaining sufficient strength to walk about his hut, and he discovered that the savages had carried him across the island and that their village was on the ocean's shore.

He determined to keep the good will of the band until such a time as an opportunity might be offered to escape to a passing ship. Fifteen months passed and one day he sat on the beach in his sattered pajamas and a straw hat, the only articles of clothing he had been allowed to bring with him into captivity, when a ship appeared in the offing. A steam launch, carrying a number of armed sailors, came ashore and began distributing beads and mirrors among the savages.

Dr. Neville was informed that they were from a Dutch gunboat which had been set out in search of a missionary party. At a favorale opportunity he was separated from the blacks, leaped into the launch, which put back to the vessel and was rescued.

Mark Twain on Prohibition.

"Crossing the Atlantic with Mark Twain last summer," said a W. C. T. U. woman, "I asked his opinion of the prohibition law. His reply was very characteristic, very humorous.

"'I am a friend of temperance, and want it to succeed,' he said, 'but I don't think prohibition is practical. The Germans, you see, prevent it. Look at them. I am sorry to learn that they have just invented a method of making brandy out of sawdust. Now, what chance will prohibition have when a man can take a rip saw and go out and get drunk with a fence rail? What is the good of prohibition if a man is able to make brandy smashed out of shingles on his roof, or if he can get delirium tremens by drinking the legs off the kitchen chairs?'"

Wheat Long Buried.

Wheat in a high state of preservation was found at the reservoir excavations by workmen a few days ago. This is on the lot where the Eisenmayer Mills were located. The mill was destroyed by fire about twenty-two years ago, and many bushels of wheat were wholly burned or partially scorched. It is, therefore, quite interesting to find wheat buried in the ground so many years and yet is found to be in as good condition as it was twenty-two years ago, shortly after the fire.—Trenton Sun.

No Meeting at Deer Park.

It is officially stated that there is no truth in the report that a meeting will be held at the Deer Park Hotel this summer, of officials of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad. For a few years it was arranged to have the officials of the road and operating department assemble annually and discuss all matter pertaining to the conduct of the several branches of the system. The general manager presided and nearly every officer in any way connected with the road was present.

The men thus brought together from different section of the country thereby became acquainted and exchanged views or opinions on various subjects, and resulted in making the operating department most effective and expeditious;

President Murray believes that co-operative and harmonious action is a great leverage in the successful operation of a railroad.

A meeting this year is not deemed necessary for the Third Vice president George L. Potter has just completed a trip of inspection over the entire system, and is said to have everything in first closs shape.

BETTY'S TRIP ABROAD.

Betty's back from Europe. Such a gorgeous trip!
Highly educational—even on the ship.
What did Betty learn? Oh, my! Everything on earth
One ought to know—and have you seen the gown she got from Worth?

Paris? Just delightful! Betty "did" it well
What she saw! Well, lots of things Betty wouldn't tell.
The Louvre, of course, the Eiffel and the Bois, and all of that,
And, oh, the sweetest vision of a pink and purple hat!
A hat—one can't describe it—with the true Parisian flare
And feathers a la—something—falling sidewise on the hair.
London? Simply charming! So historic, don't you know—
The tower and the palaces, the churches and the "row."
Betty saw them all, she thinks—they come to her in flashes,
And all of them—the men, I mean—wore funny waxed mustaches
And high silk hats—but, oh, my dear, they're clever as can be
And say the most delightful things across a cup of tea.

The voyage? Really perfect! A little rough, perhaps,
But when the ship was rolling or your chaperon took naps
There were so many things to learn—of masts and ropes and plugs
And such delightful men to tuck you in your steamer rugs.
Or if you felt the wabble of the boat a little, too—
Well, aren't ship doctors charming in those uniforms of blue?

Betty"s back from Europe, frazzled to a thread!
Glad to get once more into a comfortable bed.
Her bills? Alas, what father said! But why his vain vexation?
Betty's had her trip abroad—and such an education!

A Too Familiar Ego.

Deacon Stebbins, though a good citizen, was noted for getting more work out of the men who labored on his farm than any other agriculturist in the country. Late to bed was considered ample reason for an early rising.

Timothy Flannery was engaged by the deacon, but stayed one week only. A neighbor hailed the departing helper and said:

"Hello, Tim. Did the deacon work you too hard?"

"No; the worruk was all right. It was seein' too much of mesilf that I couldn't stand."

"Seeing too much of yourself?"

"Yes, sor. Ivery night when I went up to bed I met mesilf coming down to breakfast!"—Woman's Home Companion.

Getting Personal.

Pomp—'Pears to me dar's sumfin queer 'bout de set of dose pants of yours, Mose. Am dey ready made?

Mose—No, sah. I don't wear no "hand me downs." Dose trousahs was made to measure!

Pomp—Sho! Yo' don't say! Who for?

After the Honeymoon.

"Boohoo!" sobbed Cynthia under her blue sunbonnet. "I don't believe you love me any more."

"Waal, I do declare!" laughed Jason as he washed the milk pails. "What put that idea into your head, little gal?"

"Why, before our marriage you used to honey me up and say I was as sweet as sweet cider, and now you say I am sour."

"Oh, don't worry, pet. Even the sweetest of sweet cider turns to vinegar after a time."—Detroit Tribune.

The Expensive Part.

"Does it cost much to live in the city?" asked the old lady from the small village.

"Oh, no," replied her city nephew, "it doesn't cost any more to live in the city than it does in the country, but it costs three times as much to keep up appearances."—New York World.

It Was Great.

"Why are you laughing? I heard a moment ago that the home team had been defeated."

"Yes—but—haw, haw, haw!—it was great! I was there. A foul ball—haw, haw, haw!—struck the umpire over the heart and nearly killed him."—St. Louis Republic.

Lost Its Edge.

"Great guns, barber, that razor of yours is in a terrible condition!" exclaimed the victim in the chair.

"Yessah, Ah 'spect yo' all am right. Ah done wore dat razor to er ball las' night, sah, an' Ah reckon de grin'stone am what it needs."—Chicago News.

The Feminine View of It.

"Nell, what is a panic?"

"It is something, my dear child, which gives your husband a good excuse whenever you ask him for money for new clothes, house fixings or a little outing."—Baltimore American.

A Timely Suggestion.

Sighed the elderly swain to the blooming maid, "I would die for you!"

"You would?" she replied. "One would never think it to look at that head."—Denver News Times.

Financial Ability Deserves Its Reward.

By WILLIAM R. HEARST, Journalist and Politician.

THERE SHOULD BE NO PREJUDICE ENTERTAINED BY THE CAPITALIST TOWARD THE LABORER, AND THERE SHOULD BE NO PREJUDICE BY THE LABORER TOWARD THE CAPITALIST. THERE SHOULD BE AN APPRECIATION OF THE ESSENTIAL PART WHICH EACH PLAYS IN THE CREATION OF WEALTH.

The workingman is worthy of his HIRE, the business man of his PROFIT. The man who digs the precious metal from the earth is worth his wage. The man who tells him where to find the gold deserves his profit too. The great financial promoters, organizers, executives of America, are WORTHY OF RECOGNITION AND REWARD.

They work as hard as any of us, and their work is ABSOLUTELY NECESSARY to the full production of the riches out of which are paid here in America the highest wages in the world. Through many an anxious day and many a wakeful night these men have planned and prosecuted the great enterprises which have developed the wealth of the nation and have given employment to millions of men. Let them have a LIBERAL SHARE of that wealth as long as that is the incentive which stimulates them to useful activities. Let them have wealth as long as it is HONESTLY acquired through enterprises that benefit the whole community. The riches they amass and call their own are seldom spent in extravagance and luxury upon themselves, but are put back into new industries to produce more wealth and give employment to more men.

THE TRUE CAPTAIN OF INDUSTRY IS THE GENERAL OF OUR INDUSTRIAL ARMY. HE CANNOT DO WITHOUT SOLDIERS, AND YET, NO MATTER HOW WELL THE SOLDIERS FIGHT, THE VICTORY DEPENDS VERY LARGELY ON THE GENERAL'S SKILLFUL CONDUCT OF THE CAMPAIGN.

The great business man is the manager of the enterprise in which we are all embarked. HE IS AS NECESSARY TO US AS WE ARE TO HIM, for, no matter how well we work, the success of the enterprise and the profit of it depend very largely on the ability of his management.

Socialism's Spread Is Alarming Capital.

By GOLDWIN SMITH, Eminent Canadian Publicist.

THERE HAVE BEEN VERY LARGE DEMANDS ON CAPITAL OF LATE IN CONNECTION WITH VAST IMMIGRATION AND TAKING UP OF NEW TERRITORIES, AND THERE IS NO DOUBT THAT SOCIALISM IS CAUSING SOME ALARM AS TO THE SECURITY OF FUNDS AND PROPERTY.

There seems to be a general impression that AN ATTACK IS TO BE MADE ON PROPERTY. Even the churches unconsciously help this. Clergymen find a certain relief in diverting questions of religious doctrine into economic and even SOCIALISTIC channels. Possibly the tight market or financial depression might be traceable in part to a stand against corporations.

I believe that all utilities that are in reality public SHOULD BE OWNED AND OPERATED BY THE STATE, but there is a tendency to extend the grip of the state BEYOND these bounds, with the result that private property in corporations feels itself more or less threatened.

Nothing Radically Wrong In America.

By PAUL MORTON, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Equitable Life Assurance Society.

THE railroad outlook in the United States, for example, is not at all bad. So long as we have GOOD CROPS we will have good tonnage. There is no overproduction of any kind, and while there has been a depreciation of securities IT WILL NOT LAST LONG.

Good crops make good earnings for railroads, and good earnings will offset the TEMPORARY depreciations in value. I am a great believer in the natural growth of America.

THERE IS NOTHING RADICALLY WRONG. BUSINESS GENERALLY THROUGHOUT THE COUNTRY IS GOOD, AND IF IT HAD NOT BEEN FOR OUR GREAT INDUSTRIAL ACTIVITY AND THE MOST URGENT DEMAND FOR MONEY TO DEAL WITH IT THERE WOULD HAVE BEEN NO SUCH DECLINE IN SECURITIES.

All that is necessary is for us to proceed slowly, and in time CONFIDENCE WILL BE RE-ESTABLISHED.

Rights of Way For Airships.

By ROY KNABENSHUE, Aeronaut.

AERIAL NAVIGATION HAS PASSED THE EXPERIMENTAL STAGE. THERE IS BUT ONE SERIOUS QUESTION FACING THE PRACTICAL ADOPTION OF THE AIRSHIP AS A MEANS OF LOCOMOTION. THAT ONE QUESTION IS RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH THE AIR.

In the past this question has been considered something of A JOKE, but now there is serious questioning about the government of right of way.

Will it be necessary to condemn and buy the air above a man's land for airship purposes the same as though you used the land? WILL A BOARD OF ARBITRATION AND A RAILROAD COMMISSION BE NECESSARY TO HANDLE THE AIR RIGHTS QUESTIONS?

A recent decision by the Minnesota supreme court in a case where an injunction was asked to restrain persons from shooting game in the air above the farm of another holds squarely on the issue that a man owning property is master of the air above it, that he owns so high as he may wish to go and as low as possible to dig. Under this rule it may be possible to read advertisements offering for sale A STRIP OF AIR TWENTY-FIVE FEET WIDE suitable for airship travel, and street construction in cities may eventually simmer down to buying paths through the air.

THE PRESIDENT ABOARD YACHT SINKS SCHOONER

Mayflower Cuts Vessel Almost in Two in Collision in Dense Fog.

FORTUNATELY NOBODY IS INJURED

Executive Was Asleep and Knew Nothing of the Accident—Makes Address Before Naval War College and Appeals for Strong Navy.

NEWPORT, R. I., July 22.—The President's yacht Mayflower, with the President on board, in a dense fog last night ran into and sank the lumber-laden schooner Menawa.

All on board the schooner, consisting of the captain and five men, were taken on board the Mayflower.

The President's yacht had her bowsprit and one anchor carried away, but the jar of the collision was so slight that none of the President's party knew of the accident until they arose this morning.

The Menawa belonged to C. G. Pendleton of Isleboro, Maine.

The collision occurred at about 1.15 a. m., when the Mayflower was between New London and New Haven.

As soon as the Mayflower arrived here the following dispatch was sent:

Newport, R. I., July 22, 1908.

To Hon. William Loeb, jr., Secretary to the President, Oyster Bay:

The President and party arrived at Newport at 10 o'clock. The Mayflower was in collision with schooner last night about 1.15 o'clock. No one was injured. Everybody aboard schooner rescued. The President was informed and knew nothing about it until he got up this morning. J. L. McGRAW.

A full investigation has been ordered of the collision. Captain Hutchinson of the schooner said, "The collision was not my fault. The weather was misty with rain and fog. I had the lookout on duty when the Mayflower struck us ... knocked a big hole in the schooner ... broke the foremast. I guess the schooner is drifting about the Sound somewhere." It is likely a suit will be started against the Government for the loss of the schooner and cargo.

The President had a kind word for the shipwrecked crew and Captain Hutchinson thanked him far his interest and kindness in providing funds for the crew to reach their homes.

This forenoon, at the Naval War College the President addressed a conference of nearly 100 naval officers, representing all branches of the service, to consider plans for new American battleships.

President Roosevelt made a stirring appeal for a hard-hitting navy, hinting strongly at the possibility of a war with Japan.

IN THE ORCHARDS OF GARRETT.

Visit of Officers of the State Horticultural Department.

The visit to Garrett county last week of the officers of the Maryland State Horticultural Department was one of pleasure to the visitors and what they observed is recounted in the following, published in Sunday's American.

The officers of the Maryland State Horticultural Department, Prof. T. B. Symons, State Pathologist; Prof. C. P. Close, State Horticulturist, are making a tour of Garrett county in the interest of fruit growing in that section and to aid in their respective lines the persons now engaged in horticulture.

Meetings with the farmers have been arranged principally in connection with the local granges, this agricultural organization being in a flourishing condition in the county.

Farms and orchards are found to be in a flourishing condition in Garrett county. Fruits grow readily and with proper care would be successful. Very little San Jose scale or other dangerous insects or diseases are present. The serious abundance and rapid progress of peach yellows is the main drawback to peach culture.

While a large part of the county is mountainous and devoted to mining and lumbering, one not familiar with conditions would be astonished at the number and beauty of the thrifty farms which cover the valleys and hillsides in the most picturesque manner. The members of the State Horticultural Department were surprised at the extent of the agricultural land in districts not before visited. They state that the opportunity for orchard development in this part of the State is very encouraging.

Besides Hoyes meetings were held at Bittinger, Swanton and Mason schoolhouse. The speakers dwelt on the control of injurious insects and diseases, also told of plans for extermination of mosquitoes and house flies.

NORTH GLADE.

Prof. B. B. Savage and his sister Miss Della have been visiting their sister Mrs G. W. Moon for the past ten days. They were both formerly teachers of Garrett county but have been spending the past five years on the Pacific Coast, mostly in Southern California. Any one desiring information in regard to that country should see them.

Mr. and Nrs. Cleve O'Brien are now the parents of a fine big boy, just arrived on Sunday.

W are sorry that trouble has again come to the home of Salem Lee. His daughter Sista has the fever.

We are glad to learn that Mrs. Hannah Rhodes is getting on well with her broken arm.

Mrs. Rudolph Beckman has been quite ill for some time. Owing to her age we fear she cannot recover.

Messrs. Painter & Mason Dispose of Their Mill In Oakland.

HELBIG & WEST THE PURCHASERS

Mill Will Be Stocked With Goods At An Early Date And Preparations Now Under Way To Operate It To Fullest Capacity.

Messrs. D. M. Mason and James H. Painter, who purchased the City Roller Mill three or four years ago from Mr. George M. Mason, disposed of their property last Saturday to Messrs. Andrew Helbig and R. Harry West, both of whom are well known to the people of Oakland and vicinity where they were born and reared.

The property consists of a well equipped and practically new mill, having been erected by Mr. G. M. Mason. It is fitted for roller process flour manufacturing and also the manufacture of feed, corn meal for domestic use, etc., and is centrally located on Green street.

Messrs. Helbig and West will take charge of the property within the next ten days and in the meantime arrangements have been made to stock it with a full and complete line of mill stuffs.

The necessary repairs are now being made to the machinery and when these are completed it will be placed in full operation.

His Visit to Florida.

To the Editor of the Republican:

I note with much pleasure that you found space in the columns of your valuable paper for my letter last week, therefore I am pleased to write further of Oakland, Florida. The owners of a large acreage of land, who were public spirited men, seeing the competition of a railroad from Sanford to Tampa, donated to the mayor and city council of Oakland, Florida, one square mile of land for a city, running up to the lake and on both sides of the railroad, laying it out in city blocks, leaving a large part in the center with streets 80 feet wide. It seemed to the people for some time after the removal of the railroad shops that a large town on this beautiful lake had been spoiled; but it now looks to many of the business men of the community, very hopeful. Married men are coming, buying property, paying high prices and erecting costly residences. There is land under cultivation on the lake front that could not be had for one thousand dollars per acre. The writer was told that one farmer last year cleared between seven and eight thousand dollars on cucumbers alone, and I had the pleasure of visiting a farm on which there was planted 21 acres of cucumber seed, and many other farms of less acreage.

There is, too, considerable talk of the opening of a water way from some where on the St. John's to the Gulf via lake "Apopka" and several large lakes, which, if there is anything in the proposition, would make the central and west portion of Florida, equal, if not superior, to the east coast in importance for fruit and vegetable growing. The altitude at Oakland is 300 feet above the ocean, and the lay of the country around about is ideal for healthfulness and the water of excellent quality. Taking all these advantages into account Oakland is one among the best locations for a winter resort in the state. Capital and push would bring good things, to central and western Florida.

A word for the good people of Oakland and vicinity. To say the least about them, they are truly Americanized, even if some of them are of the "Mother Country." They are a social, generous, kind-hearted and a deeply religious people—doing unto others as they would have others do unto them.

Orlando is the county seat of Orange county, and is about 18 miles from Oakland by a good clay road, and much further by rail by the way of Sanford. It has a population of 1,500. The San Juan hotel is commodious and convenient in its arrangements, and is always well filled with winter guests. There are also several large boarding houses. The town has several large livery stables, well stocked with fine horses, that are hired to tourists for pleasant drives on good clay roads. There are two banks doing a good and safe business.

This little city is surrounded by thirteen lakes, among which is the beautiful Lake Lucern, the shores of which are beautified on all sides by commodious residences.

ADJOURNED TERM OF COURT.

In Session With Judges Boyd and Henderson on the Bench.

The adjourned June Term of the Circuit Court convened in Oakland last Monday with Chief Judge A. Hunter Boyd and Associate Judge Robert R. Henderson on the bench.

There were three cases postponed from the regular June term to be tried at the present time and these have either been heard or are in course of being tried.

The first case called was that of Eli and James U. Stanton vs. Gilead Broadwater, the parties all being from the vicinity of Grantsville. The action was one of trespass and the entire day of Monday and a portion of Tuesday was consumed in hearing it. At the conclusion of the argument the Court took the case under advisement and will render a decision either today or tomorrow. For the plaintiffs Mr. Thomas J. Peddicord appeared, while the defendant was represented by Messrs. G. S. Hamill and E. H. Sincell of Oakland, and ex-Judge Ferdinand Williams, of Cumberland.

Tuesday afternoon the action of assumpsit brought by the Nethken Coal Company vs. John R. Pope was taken up. The parties to this suit are from District No. 13, the complainant corporation averring that it had contracted for and paid to the defendant a sum of money for certain lands but that after making such payment Pope declined and refused to execute a deed for the same. Mr. Peddicord appeared for the complainant and Messrs. Hamill and Semmes were for the defendant. Decision held sub curia.

The case of Andrew Washington vs. M. A. Jolliffe, also an action of assumsit, was taken up this morning and at the time of going to press the case was still in progress. The same counsel appears as that above.

A Correction.

To the Editor of The Republican:

I noticed in your issue of July 2, that the engineer sent to make a survey and take measurements relative to the supply of water for the town of Oakland report that there is not sufficient water flowing from Gordon spring to guarantee full and constant supply of water.

This, no doubt, is true, as it is and always has been, a wet weather spring, affected by the condition of the weather. But up to the left of the mountain from Gordon spring there are several fine springs of water. One of these raises a stream of water as thick as a man's body, six feet above the surface. It is cool and clear as crystal, flowing through white sand and gravel, and evidently comes from a very deep secretion, as it is very cold, and not affected by the weather in the least.

This and the other springs form the headwaters of Trout Run. It has never been known that Trout Run has dried up, owing to the fact that the above springs are not all wet weather springs. And, as old Mr. Swan, the county surveyor, has said, and it is true, that this is the water supply for all this part of the country.

The several springs are now connected to one large reservoir containing five million gallons of water, built between two mountian sides. The dam of which is twenty-five feet thick, with a concrete core of four feet through the center. A ridge is built around the pool to keep out any of the surface drainage. A fence will be built all around it to keep out any animals, thereby assuring a pool of pure, fresh water at all times.

This reservoir of water has an altitude of two hundred and eighty feet above the street level in front of Offutt & Sons storeroom, and fifty-one and seven-tenths feet above Mrs. Bullard's porch. This shows plenty of pressure for the entire town of Oakland and just nineteen thousand feet from the borough line of Oakland to said pool or reservoir of pure water.

I think it would be advisable for our water committee to investigate this supply of water for our town.

Automobile Went Over the Baak.

On Monday afternoon at 4 o'clock a large white touring automobile car, while en-route from Deer Park, Md., to New York, with a full party aboard and while making the turn on the Bloomington road, just above Luke Md., at a high cliff, went over the bank. The brake refused to work at the proper time and the machine went over the bank and would have plunged into the Potomac River had it not been for a large tree, against which it lodged.

The machine was an entire wreck and before it can be used again will have to be sent to the factory and rebuilt. It was a narrow escape for the occupants, and they only saved their lives by jumping out.—Piedmont Independent.

WORK ON COURT HOUSE ROOF SUSPENDED.

Some Misunderstanding As to Material Used is The Cause.

WORK WILL BE RESUMED SHORTLY

Plans Call for Slate Covering and Tin Was Being Put On—Court House Commission Will Be in Session To-day.

Yesterday morning workman engaged in putting on the roof of Garrett county's new court house were ordered to discontinue work until the commission having in charge the erection of the building could be called together and the kind of material to be used in its construction was settled.

From what can be learned the plans and specifications adopted by the commission when the contract was awarded called for a slate roof. For some reason yet unexplained the contractor was using tin for the covering and at present has about one-fourth of the roof on.

County Commissioner Asa B. Friend, who is one of the Court House Commission, came to Oakland on Tuesday and when his attention was called to the fact that tin was being used he and some other members of the commission objected and the work was stopped.

To-day the entire commission, the architect and the contractor will meet in Oakland and the matter will be adjusted.

In connection with the building there is a petition being circulated and numerously signed praying the commission to have the interior finish of hardwood, instead of soft wood and painted white as specified in the contract.

Crellin Mill Damaged.

Last Wednesday the conveyor used for hauling slabs and other offal from the mill at Crellin across the river to the dump where the material is burned, fell with a crash, completely demolishing the structure. What caused the timbers to give way is a matter of conjecture, but it is thought by the mill people that the conveyor chain became fouled and the strain upon it pulled the timbers apart.

FOR ROAD SUPERVISOR.

"Tax Payer" Wants An Experienced Man Named for the Office.

To the Editor of The Republican.

If a note of this kind is not a little too discordant, we would like to speak a word in behalf of a much maligned public official, viz: the Road Supervisor. As a rule we hear nothing but adverse criticism of his attempts to repair the public highway, and we are aware that in many instances the same is deserved, for we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that through inefficiency or something worse, on the part of our road officials, much of the money appropriated for the improvement of the highways is wasted. However this is not the case in many instances, as all know, and I was both surprised and gratified the other day when it was my privilege to drive over the road leading from Oakland to Hutton to find the splendid condition in which it had been put by Mr. P. H. Rodeheaver, the present Road Supervisor.

For several years past this road has been in a deplorable condition, and taking this fact into consideration and the limited amount of money at Mr. Rodeheaver's disposal for this purpose (about $10 per mile) it is nothing less than remarkable that he could have made the road as good as it now is. It can hardly be considered a first class automobile road yet, but as we do not own an automobile, and never expect to, and have no desire to do so, we are not particular about getting the road up to that point of perfection.

However, the work on this road marks Mr. Rodeheaver as an honest and capable official, and the right man in the right place, and if not a little too early, we will anticipate the nomination convention and now name him as our choice for General Road Supervisor for District No. 14.

TAX PAYER.

GORTNER.

A Parlor Car Puzzle.

By HOWARD FIELDING.

Copyright, 1907, by C. W. Hooke.

IT is important to know how the people were placed when this thing happened. The pretty girl sat in seat No. 7 and was thus about midway of the car, on the left side looking forward. Directly in front of her, in seat No. 5, was a lean, tall, lithe man of forty years, with scanty dark hair and gray eyes. He was dressed in a style of quiet elegance. A panama hat hung from the gilded peg over his head, and a neat traveling bag was on the floor beside him. He seemed to be dozing.

I occupied seat No. 9, and behind me were a woman and her son, an unpleasant child, of a very dull countenance, but as restless as a scared jackal in a cage. Opposite me, in No. 10, was Mortimer Belden, whom I have known some years. He is a rich man and looks the part. Before and behind him, in seats 8 and 12, were young men of much the same type as himself. They were strangers to each other and to us.

The pretty girl had boarded the train at Albany, had immediately opened a book and, except for an occasional glance out of the window, had not for a single moment ceased to read. We were some miles beyond Utica when she closed her book and laid it upon the window ledge. A few minutes later I heard her utter a faint cry. She bent forward and studiously regarded the floor. Then she stepped out into the aisle for a more comprehensive view, and I thought that she had spied the object of her search, for she knelt quickly beside her chair. But when she raised her head her glance encountered mine, and I perceived instantly that she had not succeeded. A pretty bewilderment was in her big brown eyes, and as she turned them again to the floor I saw her wink rapidly, as a child does when its vision seems at fault.

At this juncture the young animal from seat No. 13 arrived upon the scene with a startling suddenness and yet not running.

"Lost anything?" said he in that flat and whining voice, as of the educated

"LOST ANYTHING?' SAID HE IN THAT FLAT VOICE.

pig talking through its snout, which is rapidly becoming the typical speech of New York.

The pretty girl looked up with something like a shudder, and I observed that she deftly changed her position so as to exclude the boy from a too intimate participation in her search.

"Yes," she replied, and, oh, the heavenly difference of her tone, so round and rich and human! "I have lost a ring."

"Le' me help yer find it," whined the boy, and at this we all interfered simultaneously.

She received our attentions graciously and simply.

"It's very odd," she said. "I dropped the ring right down in front of me. Can it have rolled back under my chair?"

Mortimer Belden arose from the floor at this, and his face was the color of a ripe tomato as a result of scanning the carpet at close range.

"It's not there now," said he.

Nevertheless we all repeated Belden's performance, and then with equal particularity we examined the region under and around chair No. 5. The result was entirely negative.

For my own part, I was thoroughly convinced that the ring had gone in the direction of No. 5, for, though I had not been looking at the young lady at the exact moment of her mishap, I knew what her attitude had been, and this seemed to preclude the possibility of the ring having rolled in any direction. It could not have caught in her gown, for the skirt was absolutely plain.

I had noticed the trinket on her finger. It was a pretty little diamond of about a carat and a half and had been worn on what is called the engagement finger—doubly precious, no doubt, and surely not to be lost in this ridiculous manner. There was not a cranny in which it could be hidden; there were no dark shadows, for the hour was 4 of a summer afternoon and the day very bright. Six of us—not to count the bad boy, who was viewed with suspicion by all and had been kept upon the outskirts—had searched twenty square feet of floor space in vain. The situation began to be painful, for if the ring was not on the floor it was in somebody's pocket.

Already I had observed my friend Belden to be eying the three strangers critically, and now he edged away toward the forward end of the car with the distinguished looking gentleman who had occupied seat No. 5. Obviously they were about to hold a consultation, and at the sight an idea came into my head.

I turned toward the pretty girl and was much gratified to perceive that my desire for private conversation was shared by her. She must have been perfectly sure that the ring was not on the floor, for she abandoned the spot without hesitation and followed me to the rear of the coach, where she graciously consented to accept my sympathy and my card. I learned that she was Miss Myrtle Leigh and that she lived in Syracuse.

"SHE BEGGED ME TO BE EXPLICIT."

"Do you suppose that dreadful little boy could have found my ring?" she asked. "And yet how could he? I don't understand it at all."

"My suspicions incline in another direction," said I, "and for rather an odd reason."

She begged me to be explicit.

"There happens to be on this train," said I, "a detective from New York, really quite a celebrated fellow in his way. His name is Anderson. I know him quite well. He passed through our car just after we left Albany, but I did not make any sign of recognition because he didn't. That's the etiquette with detectives. They share with ladies the precedence in the matter of bowing to their acquaintances. He saw and recognized me, of course, and he also saw and recognized, with quite a different feeling, the man who sat in front of you, in seat No. 5."

"Oh, my!" she exclaimed in a hushed voice. "You don't mean he knew him for a—a criminal!"

"The idea flashed through my mind," I replied. "You see, I've been about with Anderson and others of his profession quite a bit for the interest of it, and I know their ways. Of course, this is rather a wild accusation, for upon my word, I don't see how the fellow could have got the ring without your seeing him, and yet I think I'd better hunt up Anderson and try to get a word with him. He's still on the train, for I've seen him since we left Utica. He went forward just after we pulled out."

Miss Leigh was naturally indisposed to accuse any one or even to begin a police investigation under such circumstances, but she agreed with me that Mr. Anderson's advice would certainly be helpful.

The man whose reputation I had so recklessly assailed was not in view when Miss Leigh and I returned to our seats. Belden told me that he had gone forward, and he added, with a laugh, "He thinks you got it."

"I? Blast him!"

"What do you think?"

"I think he got it."

"Well, you're even on that," said Belden, and the idea seemed to amuse him.

"Now, look here," said I; "I have my reasons, but there's no time to tell you what they are. I may give you a surprise presently. You keep your eye on that panama hat and the grip over there. This train stops at Glendon, and we're within two minutes of the place now. If that fellow tries to get off stop him."

"What?" gasped Belden.

"Well, if you don't dare do that, delay him. Keep your eye on him. I'll be back inside the two minutes."

I hurried forward through the train, which was already slowing down for the Glendon station, but I did not find Anderson. Annoyed by this failure, I returned more slowly, keeping a sharper eye upon my fellow passengers, but the detective had disappeared. Obviously he must have got to the rear of the train without my seeing him, perhaps while I and the others were pawing around on the floor and bumping one another's head.

The train had come to a stop by the time that I reached our car, but the bag and the panama hat were still in view, and Belden was on guard. Miss Leigh, however, was not visible. Belden said she had gone "aft." I also went "aft." I went to the end of the train, but I did not find Anderson nor Miss Leigh nor the man from seat No. 5. It seemed to be a day when not only diamond rings, but people, were able to lose themselves with unexampled facility.

When I re-entered our car, Belden had vanished. I glanced hastily toward seat No. 5. The hat and grip were still there.

"Your friend's gone to find the conductor," said the man in seat No. 12. "At least I think so. He asked me if I remembered which way the conductor went. He seemed rather excited."

At this moment the man in seat No. 8 rose hastily. In fact, he came up as if propelled by a spring. He turned toward us, leaning with one hand upon the chair back. The other hand was at his breast. His mouth hung open; his eyes stared.

"My pocketbook!" he gasped.

Instinctively I thrust my hand inside my waistcoat, where in a pocket which I had always thought to be beyond the reach of thieves I had been accustimed to carry the bulk of my immediate funds. The pocket was empty.

The man in No. 12 looked from one to the other of us, and he grinned. His hands were in his trousers pockets.

"My money's all right," said he. "I didn't have much, but"— He paused and then suddenly clapped his hand to his tie. "By jingo! My pin's gone!"

"He touched me for better than a thousand," said No. 8, and I saw him moisten his dry lips with his tongue.

"I suppose there's no doubt"— I began, and finished the sentence by pointing to seat No. 5.

"Nonsense," said No. 12. "It was the girl. She made the bluff of dropping the ring, knowing what we'd do, and while we were all butting our heads against the furniture and she was reaching over us, pointing out likely places— Oh, oh, oh! What a set of easy marks!"

"But where's the man?" I demanded.

"There are his things," retorted No. 12. "He's still on the train. But where's the girl?"

"Miss Leigh was kind enough to permit a sort of introduction between herself and me," said I. "I may perhaps claim the right to defend her, since there is no one else here who knows her at all, and I would like it to be understood that nothing further must be said which touches her good name and that what has been said must be withdrawn."

No. 12 looked me in the eye. He was firm in his opinion and a man of nerve. I could see him hardening his heart for a reply that would create a very strained situation. Then suddenly his expression changed to one of astonishment. He was looking over my shoulder. I turned and saw Miss Leigh. Behind her was Belden, and behind him was Anderson. The conductor brought up the rear.

Miss Leigh came straight to me.

"It was that man!" she cried. "You were right. I've got my ring again."

And she held up her hand to show it.

"After you left me I went to the rear platform of the car," she continued. "The train was stopping, and I had your words in mind. I thought that man might get off, and he did. And when I saw that he had another hat on—a soft one that must have been folded in his pocket—then I knew for sure. And I ran after him, and just as I caught him Mr. Anderson caught him too. He's in the baggage car now, and Mr. Anderson has all your things."

"Yes," said Anderson, with his peculiar drawl, "when I saw Tony Jack Wallace quitting us like that and pulling out his folder hat I knew something was queer, so I just trailed along. Nobody quicker than Tony Jack to take advantage of a little accident like the lady dropping the diamond. I'll bet he had it before it touched the floor. See him do it? Why, that man could take your shoes off your feet and you wouldn't know it. Working the trains is his specialty, and he always has a bit of fake baggage to make you think he's still aboard. I hadn't seen him in two or three years; didn't know he'd come back to this part of the country. But now he's back he'll have to stay. I've got him dead to rights this time. And now, gentlemen, if you'll name your losses I'll make good. I've got all the plunder."

"MY DEAR LITTLE RING," SAID SHE.

Miss Leigh resumed her place in seat No. 7 and I mine in No. 9, but now the two seats faced each other.

"My dear little ring!" said she. "I love it very much. It was my mother's."

She saw the look in my eye, and she laughed.

"I have to wear it on that finger," she said. "It won't fit any other."

An Official's Plea For a Nonpartisan View of Officials.

By GEORGE B. McCLELLAN, Democrat, Mayor of New York.

LESS than four years ago the people of this country elected as their chief magistrate an honest and conscientious man. They knew what he was and what he represented. THEY KNEW HIS IDEALS, HIS HOPES, HIS PURPOSES, and had they stopped to think about the matter at all they would have known what to expect from his election. Now that the inevitable has occurred, instead of accepting it, those who a few months ago were loudest in his praise are THE MOST VITUPERATIVE IN THEIR DENUNCIATION. It is not so long since that those who disagreed with him ran the risk of being charged with leze majesty by the very newspapers that now even question his honesty of purpose.

When you believe that your party is doing right STAND BY IT. When you believe that a public official is doing his duty STAND UP FOR HIM. It is only human for you to think that were you in his place you could do better than he is doing. But the chances are altogether that you could not, and, besides, you have no idea under what difficulties he may be laboring.

DON'T PULL DOWN; BUILD UP. DON'T ANATHEMATIZE THE POLICIES OF GOVERNMENT UNLESS YOU HAVE SOMETHING BETTER TO SUGGEST IN THEIR PLACE. DON'T SENSELESSLY OPPOSE THE PARTY IN POWER FOR DOING WHAT YOU WOULD VERY LIKELY DO YOURSELF HAD YOU THE CHANCE. DON'T CRY OUT AGAINST YOUR SUCCESSFUL OPPONENT FOR STEALING YOUR THUNDER WHEN HE IS PROBABLY APPLYING IT BETTER THAN YOU COULD.

Make up your minds in what fundamental principles you believe and why you believe in them. Then, no matter how you may adapt them or apply them, adhere loyally and honestly to those principles so that you may say with Pericles, "We alone regard a man who takes no interest in public affairs not as a harmless but as a useless character, and if few of us are originators we are all sound judges of policy."

Religion Divorced From Life And Humanity Brutalized.

By RABBI TOBIAS SCHANFARBER of Chicago.

HUMANITY has not advanced to the height destined for it because men have divorced religion from life. They have MADE RELIGION SYNONYMOUS WITH RITUALISM AND DOGMATISM. But religion is everything or it is nothing. Its influence should be felt in the home, the busy marts of life, the legislative halls, the same as in the church or synagogue.

WE NEED A LITTLE LESS POLITICS IN RELIGION AND A LITTLE MORE RELIGION IN POLITICS. WE HAVE COMMERCIALIZED RELIGION WHEN WE SHOULD HAVE RELIGIONIZED COMMERCE.

It is when ritualism takes the place of righteousness that pious deacons of the church permit themselves to rent out their property to low brothels for immoral purposes because this nets them a larger return than when rented to respectable families. What can we expect of those who are not affiliated with church or synagogue when those who are devotees at religion's shrine rent their tumbledown, ramshackle, uninhabitable tenement houses to the poor because this brings them usurious returns?

It would be nothing short of a blessing if some fire should sweep out of existence these dilapidated tenement houses, for they are THE MOST PROLIFIC BREEDERS OF THE WHITE SCOURGE that claims 150,000 victims annually in this country.

It is when pious frauds, wolves in sheep's clothing, divorce religion from life that they permit themselves to perpetuate THE SWEATSHOP EVIL, another foul breeder of death and destruction, and find excuses to continue the INFAMOUS CHILD LABOR inhumanity and the barbarous factory conditions that send thousands upon thousands to untimely graves.

THE GREAT PRESIDENT OF THESE UNITED STATES OF RIGHT IS INSISTENT IN HIS DEMANDS THAT LAWS BE ENACTED ALONG THESE LINES BY OUR LAWMAKING BODIES. HE IS SPEAKING SIMPLY THE LANGUAGE OF RELIGION AND CLOTHING HIMSELF IN THE ROYAL GARMENTS OF THE PROPHETS OF ISRAEL AND HUMANITY WHEN HE THUNDERS INTO THE EARS OF THE DO NOTHING LAWMAKERS IN CONGRESS HIS DEMAND FOR JUSTICE AND RIGHTEOUSNESS. HE WOULD HAVE THEM AND ALL PEOPLE UNDERSTAND THAT THE HOMELY VIRTUES OF RELIGION SHOULD COLOR OUR EVERY THOUGHT AND GIVE DIRECTION TO OUR EVERY ACT.

"Watered Stock" a Definition Of Legalized Larceny.

By Governor JOHN A. JOHNSON of Minnesota.

THE tendency of the great to crush the small with the indifference of the elephant to the worm is too common.

FALSE CAPITALIZATION IS ONE OF THE GREAT CAUSES THAT HAVE BROUGHT A SHOCK TO THE FAITH OF THE PEOPLE. WATERED STOCK IS THE MIRAGE IN THE DESERT OF OUR COMMERCIAL LIFE. THE BILLION DOLLAR STEEL TRUST, QUOTED AT 75 CENTS ON THE DOLLAR TODAY AND AT 8 CENTS TOMORROW, TYPIFIES THE CLASS.

Watered stock has become a COMMON PHRASE OF LEGALIZED LARCENY. If the mad race is to stop before the runner falls, corporate business must be reorganized on a rational basis. No corporation should be permitted by law to issue a share of stock that does not stand for paid in cash and is not certified to by state examination. Every dollar invested in a commercial enterprise should earn a fair profit, and every investor is entitled to a fair rate of interest on his investment. But he is not entitled to a rate of interest and profit on STOCK WHICH HAS NO BASIS.

Public service corporations, railway corporations and other corporations fix a charge altogether out of proportion to the investment.

UNIQUE MACHINE TO SHOE HORSES

A Michigan Blacksmith Has Devised the Singular Apparatus.

Louis Hamel, of Southbridge, has a new machine for shoeing vicious horses and whenever he has one of the bad ones to shoe he has a big gallery of spectators to see the job.

The machine was given its hardest test recently, when a 17-year old mare was brought in. The animal had not worn shoes for more than one-fourth of her life, because no blacksmith has ever cared to take the job of shoeing her the second time, and the only way it was accomplished before was by throwing her to the floor and tying her legs. Even at that she made it so lively that a half dozen men were needed to do the job.

She was led to a certain spot in the shop floor, and two swinging crane-like arms were brought up each side of her, similar to the sides of a stall. A canvas swing was put under her and a system of ropes through and around her front and hind legs and before she knew it she was trussed up like a chicked to be baked

The mare realized that she was going to be shod, but it was too late; an adjustable iron arm had a grip on one of her legs and it was turned up to just the angle the smith wanted and the shoe was fitted and nailed in place.

The arm was moved around to each of the other legs with the same result.

The mare could stand on three feet at a time, if she wanted to, or she could hang in the canvas swing, and that was what she chose most of the time, preferring to use her legs in useless attempts to kick while she squealed like a stuck pig.

When it was all over the animal hadn't been scratched, even, but was trembling all over, and as the sides of the machine were swung away from her she looked around at it in a way that plainly said, "That's a new one on me."

"It doesn't make any difference how ugly or vicious they are," said Mr. Hamel, "they get in there and it is all over with them." It is a new machine that has been recently patented by a Michigan man, and this is the only one in Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut, if not in all New England. I have had horses from Palmer, Worchester and all around to shoe.

"There is one horse in Sturbridge that has been the terror of every blacksmith for miles around, but when I get her in there it is all off. There have been a lot of people killed or injured in trying to shoe vicious horses, but when I have them in there they can neither kick me nor anyone else in the shop, and where it used to take half a day to shoe such an animal, I can now do it nearly as quick as I can the gentlest animal that is brought in to me."—Boston Transcript.

Counting the Reserve.

By Henry Harling.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

George Barker, the newly appointed cashier, moved rapidly between the rows of desks which lined the walls of the accounting department. Daisy, bending over her huge volume, flushed as she caught sight of the tall, soldierly figure, but her face turned white and tense as she saw how grave his expression was. Clearly something had happened.

Others perhaps might not have noticed the change in his expression, but to Daisy every shade of meaning was familiar, and she knew that they must be serious worries which took the smile from Barker's eyes and made still more grave the lines about the mouth.

Ever since she had been in the bank Daisy had made Barker her ideal. It was he who had inducted her into the mysteries of the savings department and had stood guard over her ever since. He was always ready to give her a help over the hard places, and of late it had seemed to Daisy that there was something more than mere kindly interest in the steady gray eyes as he looked upon her.

Now he came to a stop before her desk and bent over the book on which she was working.

"Miss Gibbins will look after your book today," he said in a low voice. "I want to have your assistance in counting the reserve. The bank examiner comes next week, and we want to see that things are all right."

"I didn't suppose that you were to know when the examiner came!" cried Daisy.

Barker smiled, but the smile was mirthless.

"We are not supposed to know," he admitted, "but there are sometimes leakages in the banking department. Will you come with me to the vaults?"

Daisy followed him to the basement, where the reserve vaults were located. A steel cage, formed of heavy bars in place of the light nettings used on the floor above, was provided with a table and a chair. Daisy took her seat before the piles of bills with which the table was loaded.

"IS THAT WHY YOU WARNED ME?" HE WENT ON.

According to the law, a certain cash reserve was required of the bank, and it was Daisy's task to count the packages of bills and make certain that the contents agreed with the figures on the paper bands. Barker leaned across the table.

"Mike will take these away and bring you more when you are ready," he said. "You know how to check them on the slips."

Daisy nodded understandingly. Barker turned away only to come back and bend close to the curly brown head.

"Remember," he said impressively, "I have selected you for the counting because you are discreet and faithful."

This time the new cashier ascended the stairs, and Daisy's nimble fingers made quick work of the bills. They were for the greater part fifty dollar notes in packages of a hundred each, and Daisy dropped them into the box at her side as she verified the count.

The porter brought her a fresh supply of higher denominations, and of these she took more careful count. Several of the packages were short one or two bills, and these were for $100 and $500 each. The packages were tossed aside to be recounted later when the work should be done. It might be that some error had been made, and other packages might contain a bill or two in excess of their supposed number.

But package after package went to swell the pile on the rough deal table, and there were none to balance the shortage. Barker's words flashed through Daisy's brain. She was to be discreet and faithful!

Only two weeks back Barker had been promoted to be cashier. Before then he had been the assistant, and it was he who had last counted and packaged the reserves. Now that he was made cashier in the place of Newton Bryan the count had to be made again because the bank examiner was expected. The shortage would become known unless she was discreet and faithful!

For a little time things turned black for Daisy. To Barker she owed her advancement in the bank. He had virtually saved her place for her by his kindly advice when she had first taken a position, and during the entire two years she had been with the bank he had put her under a heavy burden of gratitude. He had been kind to all the girls, but it seemed to Daisy that he had been more watchful of her interests than of the others, and now—now she was being asked to make return!

A step aroused her from her thoughts, and she resumed her work just as the president came down the stone stairway to the basement. Daisy's fingers became nimble again, and she tried to keep all traces of excitement from her face.

"Everything all right?" asked Mr. Greenwell as he came into the compartment. "The count is correct?"

There was a note of anxiety in his kindly voice. Daisy wondered if he had any suspicions. For a moment she was tempted to answer that all was right. She could give an evasive answer and warn Barker that he was in danger of discovery. Then came the echo of the words "discreet and faithful."

It would not be faithful to the bank to hide the shortage. It could not be that Barker would have asked her to hide his guilt. She looked bravely into the president's face.

"Those packages are all short," she said simply. "They are mostly the hundreds, but there are five thousands too."

"Ask Mr. Barker to come here," directed the president. "Do not tell him what is the matter. Just say that I want to see him here. Come back with him."

As quietly as she could Daisy summoned the cashier. They were at the top of the stairs when her courage failed. She could not believe wrong of the man she loved, and yet"—

"There was a shortage," she whispered. "Mr. Greenwell told me not to tell you, but I"—

Barker nodded understandingly, but he kept on toward the basement, and Daisy followed wonderingly. Greenwell looked up as his cashier came into the compartment.

"I am sorry to say that your suspicions are correct," he said sadly. "Will you and Miss—er"—

"Walling," supplied Barker.

"Will you and Miss Walling figure the exact sum? I am afraid that it is worse than we thought."

Barker took his seat at the table opposite Daisy, and the president returned to the upper floor. As they worked Barker explained that he had suspected that the former old cashier had resigned in fear of discovery. It was at his own request that the count was being made before he became responsible for the surplus.

"It won't hurt the bank," continued Barker. "Bryan's father will make good the shortage. It is not as bad as I had supposed. Of course you will say nothing of this to any one in or out of the bank?"

"Why did Mr. Greenwell tell me to tell you?" she asked curiously.

"Probably that the others might not overhear your message," explained Barker. "Is that why you warned me?" he went on. "Did you think that perhaps I had been meddling with the reserve?"

"I didn't think that," denied Daisy, with reddening cheeks, "but it was all so strange and mysterious to me, and I—I didn't want to feel that perhaps I hadn't been—faithful."

"I meant faithful to yourself," explained Barker, remembering his words. "Was it because"—

He did not complete his question. There was no need. Eyes answered eyes. But some days later, when the gray haired president suggested that a married man was preferred by the directors as cashier, Barker agreed with him.

"It's all arranged," he declared. "I am going to marry Miss Walling, the young lady who counted the reserve."

Greenwell nodded approvingly.

"She will make an excellent wife," he declared oracularly. "You have made an excellent choice, George." And Barker agreed with him.

Ashamed of the Debt.

An English gentleman rather plaintively confides to the London Outlook that he no sooner flatters himself that he has turned his otherwise perfectly satisfactory wife into something approaching an economist than he finds out that he has done nothing of the kind.

He had, or he so believed, firmly implanted in her mind the fact that England has the greatest revenue ever known, when she learned, through a lecturer at her club, the figures of the national debt.

"John," she said on her return, "didn't you tell me that England has the greatest revenue ever known?"

"Yes," he said.

"Then how is it," she said keenly, "that we have such an enormous debt? Do we really owe that terrible sum?" She named it with great deliberation and awe.

He admitted that the figures were correct.

"Well, if that is so," his wife said firmly, "I will never again admit abroad that I am an Englishwoman. I could not travel in comfort known as one of a nation so shamefully indebted."

The Helping Hand.

A blind newsman stood in the early evening on the curb at Forty-second street and Third avenue. The papers he sought were at a depot on the opposite side of the avenue. He stood silent. Presently a young man slipped out of an idle group near by, took the blind man by the arm, piloted him across the car tracks, left him and passed on. Neither said a word.

Having obtained his papers, the blind man turned again to the curb, standing patiently. A woman, bareheaded and evidently a tenement dweller near by, walked up the avenue, paused, stepped aside, took the newsman by the arm, conducted him back across the avenue and resumed her errand. Neither spoke.

It's just a way they have over there on the east side.—New York Globe.

Shall We Retain Control of the Philippines?

By Representative JOHN A. T. HULL of Iowa.

WE are not going to sell the Philippines, so what's the use of wasting time talking about it? I regret that we have them. But THE ONLY THING TO DO IS TO FACE THE MUSIC. We will gradually build up a self respecting people by getting more of our own kind over there.

I would like to see more inducements given to Americans to go to the Philippines and less discrimination against them there.

I WOULD ALSO STOP THIS INFERNAL TALK ABOUT SELF GOVERNMENT. WE MUST PUT AN END TO STIMULATING THESE HALF CIVILIZED PEOPLE WITH THE IDEA THAT THEY ARE FIT TO GOVERN THEMSELVES.

By Senator CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW of New York.

WE CANNOT SELL THE PHILIPPINES. There is no nation that would buy the islands from us, aside possibly from Japan.

JAPAN WOULD GOVERN THE PHILIPPINES AS SHE DOES FORMOSA AND KOREA, SENDING A GOVERNOR AND TROOPS WHO WOULD EXPLOIT THE PEOPLE AND REDUCE THEM TO SERVANTS.

Neither can we withdraw from the islands by granting independence, for the Filipinos would soon drop into A STATE OF ANARCHY and become a prey of the predatory nations.

By JOSEPH G. CANNON, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

WE ARE IN THE MESS AND MUST DO THE BEST WE CAN. I WOULD BE IN FAVOR OF GETTING OUT TOMORROW IF THERE WAS ANY HONORABLE WAY OF GETTING OUT.

But we have the islands on our hands, with all the EXPENSE that entails, and to sell them might not be easy if we had a purchaser.

By Senator HENRY M. TELLER of Colorado.

I CAN'T say that I favor the sale of the Philippines to any one. They are not worth a "continental cuss" to the United States AND NEVER WILL BE. They should be turned over to the inhabitants to whom they rightfully belong, just as Cuba is for the Cubans.

THE PHILIPPINES HAVE COST US A GREAT DEAL OF MONEY AND ALWAYS WILL, AND THEY ARE A CONTINUAL SOURCE OF DISQUIETUDE AND DANGER. YOU CANNOT SAY TOO STRONGLY THAT WE SHOULD BE RID OF THEM.

By Representative W. S. HAMMOND of Minnesota.

I BELIEVE THAT THE BENEFITS DERIVED FROM THE POSSESSION OF THESE ISLANDS DO NOT COMPENSATE THE REPUBLIC FOR THE EXPENSE OF GOVERNING THEM AND THE ANNOYANCES AND DIFFICULTIES ARISING FROM THE ADMINISTRATION OF AFFAIRS THERE.

I hope that we may be RELIEVED of this possession in the near future in a manner that will be in no way a discredit to the nation and will fully discharge all our obligations to the inhabitants of the islands.

By Senator WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH of Michigan.

If the Filipinos demonstrate their ABILITY TO GOVERN THE ISLANDS as an independent entity, they should be encouraged to that end. I feel very certain that our government does not desire these possessions for purposes of political or commercial exploitation.

I DO NOT BELIEVE ANY ORIENTAL COUNTRY WOULD CARE TO PURCHASE THEM; NEITHER DO I THINK THAT OUR COUNTRY COULD AFFORD SUCH TRAFFIC.

Rich Man's Luxury Means Poor Man's Pain.

By Bishop CHARLES D. WILLIAMS of Michigan.

IT IS BECAUSE THE RICH MAN STRIVES FOR LUXURIES THAT THE POOR MAN MUST FIGHT FOR BREAD.

In a day when the earnings of the many are diverted by SPECIAL CLASS PRIVILEGES into the coffers of the few, so that THREE PER CENT OF THE POPULATION OWN NINETY PER CENT OF THE WEALTH, the pressure of necessity upon certain classes is so terrific, the game of grab so intense, we haven't time to live because we must make a living.

"What shall we eat? What shall we drink? Wherewithal shall we be clothed?" These are the QUESTIONS THAT PURSUE US from morning till night, day in and day out. We can't help it. If we didn't consider these questions we would starve.

THE STRUGGLE FOR EXISTENCE IS SO FIERCE MANY ARE FORCED TO THE WALL IN THE CONTEST. AT ONE EXTREME OF THE SOCIAL SCALE WE HAVE THE RICH, GREEDY FOR LUXURIES. AT THE OTHER END WE HAVE THE POOR, WHO MUST GRIND OUT THEIR LIVES IN THE MERE EFFORT TO EXIST.

With the vast majority of mankind it is the food, drink and raiment of mere subsistence that are the main concern. God pity them. The pressure is so TERRIBLE that they can think of nothing else. THEY HAVE BECOME MERE BRUTES. Our unjust social and economic conditions have made them so. Yet we scold and curse them for being brutes and beasts.

No Place For Married Women In Business.

By Cardinal GIBBONS.

EVERY woman should work. There is no room in the world for parasites. But married women should work IN THE HOME.

I give woman great credit for her advancement in industrial pursuits. Women have shown their fitness for certain pursuits. As stenographers and typewriters, as saleswomen, bookkeepers and cashiers THEY HAVE BECOME INVALUABLE. What would we do without them, indeed? But their work is not an invasion of man's domain.

NEVERTHELESS WOMAN'S SPHERE IS THE HOME, AND MARRIED WOMEN SHOULD FIND THEIR WORK IN CARING FOR THEIR HOMES AND HUSBANDS AND CHILDREN. A GIRL WORKS IN A FACTORY UNTIL SHE MARRIES, BUT MARRIAGE IS THE AIM OF HER LIFE. IT SHOULD BE. TO LOVE AND CARE FOR A FAMILY IS WOMAN'S DESTINY.

MRS. DOLBY'S TALKS

The Deacon Listens to Another One of Wifey's Lectures.

'TWAS HOT WHILE IT LASTED

But Did Not Ruffle Samuel's Sunny Disposition a Particle — Something That Happened Ten Years Ago Started the Trouble.

[Copyright, 1908, by T. C. McClure.]

At 7 o'clock in the evening the dove of peace had settled down over the Dolby family. The deacon had removed his shoes and was reading his country paper, and Mrs. Dolby was cutting up one of his old coats into carpet rags. There had been silence for ten minutes, broken only by the deacon cracking his toes now and then in solid enjoyment, when Mrs. Dolby suddenly slid out of her chair to the floor and turned on her back and rolled up her eyes. Mr. Dolby lowered his paper and looked at her, but made no move. She began to gasp and gurgle, but he held his place. At the end of five minutes she uttered a long drawn groan and sat up and looked around and asked:

"Samuel, have I died and gone to heaven?"

The deacon didn't think so. In fact, he was sure that was not the case, but he saw no use in saying anything about it. He therefore turned to his paper and again sought the paragraph where the editor had returned his grateful thanks to Farmer Brown for a peck of turnips laid on the editorial table.

"YOU CHASED HIM AND RACED HIM FOR TEN MINUTES."

"I see that I am still alive," observed Mrs. Dolby two minutes later as she struggled up and seated herself again, "but I don't know whether to be thankful or not. Samuel, don't you want to know why I lost my senses all to once?"

Samuel didn't. He had witnessed the same performance fifty times over, and it was an old thing with him. He didn't want to hurt her feelings, however, and so he made no reply.

"I will tell you as I set here wondering whether I should have the most red or most yaller in my new carpet I suddenly thought of what Mrs. Chambers told me the other day when I went over to her house to borrow a nutmeg to make a custard. You had given me 2 shillings to buy a new pair of stockings that day, and I was telling her what a good man you was when all of a sudden she broke down crying. It was ten minutes before I could find out what ailed her. She then said she felt it her duty to tell me just what a deceiver you was. She wasn't more than half through when I fainted away. That's why I looked so pale when I got home. You thought mebbe I had seen a mad dog, but I hadn't. I had been hearing what a villain I had lived with all these years."

Mr. Dolby elevated one eyebrow, but the elevation was trifling. Only a headquarter sleuth could have detected it and gone away to report that he had struck a promising clew.

"Ten years ago, Samuel," continued Mrs. Dolby as she worked up a tear—"ten years ago, one day when I was away from home and you was here all alone, a hog got into the garden. He was rooting for potatoes when you saw him. You ran out and grabbed one of the clothes poles and took after him. You wanted to bang him, Samuel. You wanted to slam him. You wanted to cripple him for life. You chased him and raced him for ten minutes, and every second or two you would yell out something. Mrs. Chambers saw all and heard all, and she remembers what you said as clearly as if it was but yesterday. When she repeated over the words I thought I should surely die. How could you say 'em, Samuel—how could you?"

Went on With His Reading.

Mr. Dolby heard her, but her voice seemed to come from the wood shed and made no impression on him. He was reading that one acre of ground ought to produce fifty bushels of turnips, and his thoughts and turnips ran together just then.

"You don't answer me, Samuel, and I don't wonder. You can't explain away your words. During the ten minutes you was chasing that hog you called him:

"A durned rooter! A son of a gun!

"A blamed sneak! A grunting devil!

"A wall eyed cuss! A durned dodo!

"You humped him! You hustled him!

"You yelled out so that you could be heard down to the wagon shop that you'd slam daylight out of him. And you tried to, Samuel. You raced him up and down and back and forth, and if you hadn't fallen down and rolled among the tomato vines you'd have had the crime of murder on your hands. You was still sweating and breathing hard when I got home, and you said something about having thrown a tramp over the fence. Samuel—Sam"—

Mrs. Dolby got ready to slide down on the floor again, but on second thought she concluded not to. She did give way to her emotions, however, and she couldn't have done better if she had been worked by machinery. During this interval Mr. Dolby read that the world in general was growing better, that there was more profit in one acre of catnip than in three acres of corn, that the deepest spot in the Atlantic measured over three miles and that Senator Foraker as a boy was kind to cats.

"Samuel, for ten long years you have been a pirate and concealed the fact from me," Mrs. Dolby finally managed to say.

"I have found it out at last, however, and something must be done. If you found out that I was a pirate you'd feel just as I do. Mrs. Chambers says she's gone to bed every night shivering for me and woke up every morning expecting to hear that I'd been murdered. I know that my sister in Indiana will tell me to get a divorce as soon as she hears about it. You can't blame me if I do get one, can you?"

A faint smile crossed the deacon's face, but as Mrs. Dolby wasn't looking that way he was safe. He turned his paper over, cracked his toes and left her to go on:

"I might commit suicide, Samuel, if you thought it best. I could hang myself to one of those hooks in the garret, and you could find me and tell everybody that I had been low spirited for a week. Of course Mrs. Chambers would know the real reason, but mebbe she wouldn't say anything. Mebbe she'd be willing to give you a chance to reform. I wonder if it hurts much to hang yourself."

He Made No Reply.

The deacon thought it did and instinctively raised his hand to his throat, but he made no reply.

"I presume it does, but the hurt is soon over, and one is among the angels. I may commit suicide or I may get a divorce. My sister would give me a home for the rest of my life. Will you miss me much when I am gone, Samuel?"

The deacon had struck a windmill advertisement and become deeply interested. The mill was warranted to go whether there was any wind or not and was worth the price asked merely for the cows to look at when chewing their cuds.

"Mrs. Chambers says you'd be sure to marry again if I got out of the way," said Mrs. Dolby as she reached down for the shears to resume her cutting. "Who would it be, Samuel? Would it be a widder or a girl? Would you buy new paper shades for the parlor winders and make a great splurge? Yes, I s'pose you would. You'd forget how hard I've worked to make soft soap and rag carpets and dye my old dresses. You'd forget that I can make half a pound of tea last longer than any other woman in the town. It was in the paper once that we'd been married twenty-three years and that I'd never set a loaf of heavy bread before you. Yes, it was there, but you'd forget all about it. Do you know how long I've made this pair of shoes last me, Samuel? Two years and a half, but you hain't give me a word of praise. If your new wife wore out a pair in three months you'd think it was all right. You hear me, don't you?"

He heard, but it seemed useless to reply. He had dropped the windmill and got hold of a new corn sheller that was doing wonders, and he didn't want to break in on himself. There came a long silence, punctuated only by the ticking of the clock, and when he finally turned his eyes on Mrs. Dolby it was to find that she had gone to sleep in her chair.

"Wha-what is it?" she asked as he shook her arm.

"It's time to go to bed," he said in reply as he turned to wind the clock.

THE REPUBLICAN

BENJ. H. SINCELL, EDITOR.

THURSDAY, JULY 23, 1908.

FOR PRESIDENT,
WILLIAM H. TAFT,
OF OHIO.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT,
JAMES S. SHERMAN,
OF NEW YORK.

FOR CONGRESS,
GEORGE A. PEARRE,
OF ALLEGANY COUNTY.

THE Hon. William J. Bryan asks editors of Democratic newspapers to open campaign subscription list. Mr. Bryan never ran a Democratic newspaper even if he does edit the Commoner.

THE legitimate expenses of electioneering during this Presidential campaign will be greater than common by virtue of the anti-free-pass provision of the Hepburn railroad act. If the railroads and party committees observe the law, the stump-speakers and other moving agencies of the parties will have to have their fares paid, where before they generally traveled at the expense of the railroads. Some one has calculated that the railroads will save not less than $500,000 on this account, and accordingly the campaign costs will be increased by so much to the party committees.

GOOD ROADS.

Now that the Commonwealth of Maryland has manifested a substantial interest in the good roads movement which is sweeping over the republic, anxiety among those in this vicinity, most deeply concerned is being evidenced, as to when the construction of the model highways shall be undertaken by the State Commission and the State Engineer, upon whom rests the burden of preparing the requisite preliminary plans and supervising the expenditure of the five million dollar appropriation for improved highways.

If Engineer Crosby has been correctly quoted by the Baltimore press, he expects to have his plans mapped out, surveys made and details completed not later than fall, when bids may be advertised for and the actual construction work undertaken next spring. It is highly important that this work be pushed with expedition and dispatch. If Engineer Crosby completes the preliminaries within the next few months there will exist no adequate reason why the real highway improvement may not be begun with the opening of spring. Delay on his part now will mean much greater delay in the construction. The citizens of Maryland have awakened to the great benefits foreshadowed by this good roads movement, and are sincerely desirous that the commission shall not only do its work well, but fulfill that duty at the earliest possible period.

ANTI-BRYAN HABIT.

The remarks of Henry Watterson, editor of the Louisville (Ky.) Courier Journal, that anti-Bryanism is a habit, seems to be brought out by the announcement from day to day by prominent Maryland Democrats and business men of their intention to vote for Mr. Taft. It has certainly become a habit in this state, and the outlook is that it will continue to be one. The Boston Transcript, speaking of the significance of the attitude of these Democrats says:

"Maryland is a Democratic State under ordinary conditions, but its Democracy is of the pro-Bryan type. It is a business community, and its industires are steadily expanding. Baltimore is a rapidly growing commercial city and a distributing point for the great sections to the south of it. Its business men and bankers, before all other things, want stability of trade and commerce. In 1896, when Bryan was preaching free silver, the business men of Maryland, without regard to party, threw the weight of their influence solidly against him."

Citing the overwhelming Democratic defeat in the two elections when Bryan was the Democratic candidate and the return of the state to its Democratic allegiance when Parker ran, the Transcript says:

"The difference between Maryland's course when Bryan was a candidate and when another was the Democratic standard-bearer is impressive. It has prepared us for the present protest. . . . If Maryland were a State in marked exception to the South in its domestic political views, an anti-Bryan protest would not be as significant as it is; but Maryland is governed by colorphobia, and the legislature has submitted to the people a Constitutional amendment conceived in this spirit. The circumstance that a State so Southern in the general sympathies is so Northern in its opposition to Bryan is one full of hopeful auguries."

Commenting upon the above paragraphs the Baltimore News, an independent newspaper, says:

It is undoubtedly true that exceptional significance is attributed to the attitude of independent Democratic voters in this State. Almost invariably their position gives reliable indication of how Maryland will go in National and State elections. In the last twelve or fifteen years, we may say, there has been no exception to this rule. As the independent Democrats have gone so has the State. It is natural, therefore, to predict that their stand again accurately forecasts the results.

"The significance to their attitude is all the greater at this time because Roosevelt has so thoroughly vaccinated the Republican party against the cry that it is running hand in glove with the "predatory rich," that the importance of the independent vote—whose sympathies naturally enough are made known through men conspicuous in business, professional and financial circles—cannot be offset by a campaign cry which seeks to produce the impression that "the classes" are all flocking to that side. Of course, in view of the action during the past four years of the Republican Administration, of which Mr. Taft has been a part, any charge that "the classes" are supporting Taft for ulterior reasons would only produce laughter. For once it is possible even for the financier to make known his political predilections without the fact of his doing so proving a boomerang."

THE DEMOCRATIC AJAX.

Mr. Bryan is permitted "free go" with the machinery of his party. He is allowed to do the planning and the assigning of the men who will carry on the routine of the campaign. He is, in fact, the only working factor in the party. This makes him the supreme individual as no candidate has ever been before. From him goes forth the pronuncimentos. He cracks the whip over the heads on the national committee; he appoints the subcommittees; he directs where the campaign money shall be disbursed. He is the merry King Cole of the Democracy. Outwardly there is wonderful compliance to his directing will. He is large in assertion, wide in vision and long in talk. His party has no alternative but to permit him to have his unchallenged way.

Bryan is the Democratic Ajax bearing the entire burden of the party upon his shoulders. But whether he will be able to sustain it is another question. The hope is indulged by many of his seemingly submissive associates that it will break his back and that at the end of the campaign he will be crushed under his defeat. The one hope of the Democratic party is to have Bryan so dreadfully beaten as to leave him a subject for political burial. The men who are ostensibly Bryan supporters will be ready for the long-delayed work of reorganizing the party.

Mr. Bryan cannot but be aware that there is much lip service offered him. He cannot but be aware that many of those who would be most exuberant over a defeat of an oveowhelming nature are fluttering about the self-constituted leader. The secret defection in the party, and even in the inner circle of the party, is the surest sign of the inherent weakness of Bryanism.

This country has never supported the kind of candidate Mr. Bryan is. It has had some self-centered men like Jackson, whose administration is entitled by Von Holst, the German historian, "The reign of Andrew Jackson." But Jackson and every other vigorous man in the White House had the force of strong convictions and definite purpose. They were not men who took their color from every circumstance that effected their own interest. It would have required a political trailer of especial sagacity to follow the sinuosities of the Bryan policies. This is because he has no leverage. He fined in every fact a fulcrum and bends his energies and the force of his will to every ridiculous and fantastic task.

If Mr. Bryan bore only the responsibilities of his party he might be a strong figure. But beside the weight of party bossism he carries the odd assortment of so-called policies and his prejudices. His greatest burden is the distrust that is felt for him by the saner leaders of the party and the masses of the Democratic voters who do not run at the call of a demagogue.

Therefore, it must come to pass that the Democratic Ajax will be found to be carrying about upon his shoulders a world of folly and sterility, a world of nonsense and pretense, a world of dreams and imaginings, a world of selfishness and insincerity. This is not the kind of a figure to stand out heroically in the delineations of present-day politics. His defeat will be tragic.

THE FARMER'S VOTE.

In a joint note to the farmers of the country Bryan and Kern, the Democratic national candidates, makes a unique and almost pathetic appeal for contributions to pay the expenses of electing them to the Presidency and Vice Presidency. "This is certainly a new and charming departure," says the Pittsburg Dispatch. "Usually such contributions have been left to individual or corporation enthusiasm, or, at times, self-interest. It is the first instance in the history of American politics when candidates have made a personal appeal, and that to a class. The candidates could not await organization of the National committee. They want the rush of funds to begin at once, and, with delightful naivete, it is stated that previous to the construction of an official contribution box the dollars may be sent to The Commoner treasury."

A farmer who traveled 100 miles from Iowa previous to the Denver convention and deposited $100 as a first contribution to the campaign boodle sounded the financial keynote for agrarian "coughing up." Bryan at once had his eyes and ears opened to the possibilities. When Kern came to Lincoln the two laid their heads together and made the appeal to the millions of farmers who suffer from the incursions of "predatory wealth." Hundreds of thousands of farmers, they proclaim, are able to contribute. Thousands are able to contribute $100 each, tens of thousands to give $50 each and "still more who could give $25, or $10, or $5." No sum will be held in contempt and before the end of the campaign it would not be at all surprising is penny contributions should be asked, to be called "The Commoner's Pense."

According to a former announcement in regard to the much-vaunted matter of publicity contributions of $100 or under will not be made public previous to the election. Suppose therefore, 25,000 farmers give $100 each: 50,000, $50 each; 75,000, $25 each; 100,000, $10 each, and 150,000, $5 each, which is doubtless the minimum that is expected by Bryan and Kern. The result from this source alone would be $8,625,000, whose expenditure would not have to be accounted for previous to the election. The possibility of this makes the vaunting of pre-election publicity, merely to all sums in excess of $100, look colossally ridiculous.

Campaign journals and ledgers will doubtless be kept at The Commoner office and by the National Committee after Mr. Bryan ceases to collect personally. The sums received each day should be known and the aggregate transferred to the ledger. To be consistent, therefore, Bryan and Kern should insist upon publicity before the election of the totals which they expect from the farmers and other classes. It would be exceedingly pleasing to the people of the whole country if The Commoner would devote a profound moment or two in explanation of this question of consistency in publicity.

Doubtless it also occurred to the Dispatch that the monetary theories upon which Bryan made his appeal to the farmers in particular, in both the campaigns of 1896 and 1900, have been thoroughly discredited. He preached in those campaigns, continuoasly, the doctrine that the single gold standard meant high priced money; that high priced money meant low priced agricultural products. And yet, with the steadying of the business of the business of the country by adoption of the gold standard for fixing monetary values, and under the wise policy of successive Republican administrations, the prices of both wheat and cotton are now nearly double what they were upon the average during the last four years of Democratic administration. Mr. Bryan has not a single argument, backed by evidence, to place before the farmers of the Middle West, or of any other section of the country, which will tend to convince them that they ought to vote for him. The farmers of the country have reason to regard Bryan as a dangerous risk, just as the manufacturing, commercial and financial interests generally so regard him.

In Memorian.

Resolutions of respect adopted by St. Paul's M. E. Sunday school on the death of Miss Margaret Porter.

WHEREAS, It has pleased our Heavenly Father to take from our school and community our sister and friend, Miss Margaret Porter, therefore,

Resolved, That, while we deeply feel the loss of one who was always cheerful, pleasant and Christ-like in spirit, yet knowing that God is allwise and doeth all things well, we therefore bow in humble submission to His will.

Resolved, second: That we hereby extend to the family of our deceased sister our sincere sympathy and regard and assure them of our prayers in this time of their trial.

Resolved, third: That being reminded once more of the uncertainty of life and the certainty of death, we will with renewed determination press onward in the Master's service.

Resolved, also: That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the records of our Sunday school that they be presented to the local papers for publication and that a copy be sent to the family of the deceased.

APSLEY—THRASHER—On July 18th, 1908, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Lorenzo D. Thrasher, in Deer Park, Miss Florence Elnoro, their daughter, was married to Mr. Herbert C. Apsley, of Baltimore, Md. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Arnett, of Parkersburg, W. Va. The bride was attended by the groom's sister, Miss Edith Apsley, and the groom by the bride's brother, Mr. Roy Thrasher, the ceremony taking place at 12 o'clock M. The friends and relatives of both bride and groom to the number of seventy-five or eighty were present from Baltimore, Portland, Oregon, Oakland, Mt. Lake Park, Grantsville, and other points in the county, and all enjoyed a sumptuous wedding dinner of delicacies of the season. In the marriage of this young lady Deer Park has lost one of its most popular and accomplished young ladies and the church a devoted worker. Mr. and Mrs. Apsley will reside at 209 Augusta avenue, Irvington, Baltimore, and be at home to the friends after August 1st.

GIVE THEM A START

The New Year is rapidly approaching. This would be a good time for you to start your young folks on the road to Success.

Early training in the practice of self-denial; instruction as to the use and value of money; opportunities for earning and saving money; all these tend to fix and fasten the children in the ways of thrift and prosperity.

We most gladly assist the young people in getting started.

One Dollar opens an account and entitles the depositor to one of our Savings Banks.

We shall be pleased to have our Garrett County friends call and receive a 1908 Calendar.

Unique Household Decoration.

Tuesday's Baltimore American contained the following concerning the work of art recently completed at the home of Mr. J. Lee McComas in Baltimore, the artist being the youngest son of Dr. J. Lee McComas of Oakland:

Mr. J. L. McComas, Jr., of 1700 Barclay street, has followed out a unique and original idea in household decoration by painting the walls of the dining room with beautiful tropical and water scenes. This work is all done in oil, and shows much painstaking care. It was executed by Mr. McComas during his spare time and required several months' work. One of the walls represents an Italian garden, with beautiful palms and other plants in profusion, while on the hill in the rear is an ancient castle. Another scene shows a body of water, with the silvery moon casting its rays across the surface, and a sailboat is gliding by. Around the border is depicted a battle between several warships and an entry trying to be made past a fort, all the details of which convey a realism that is remarkable.

The Merry Widow

By ALBERT PAYSON TERHUNE

COPYRIGHT, 1908, BY HENRY W. SAVAGE

"Sonia, you are unjust. If it had rested with me you should be my wife now, not another man's widow."

"If it rested with you?" she mimicked. "Well, let the whole story rest now. It's forgotten."

"By you, perhaps—never by me."

"Oh, no! I remember it every now and then for my own amusement. But it is hard to think of myself as the little Marsovian peasant maid to whom the dashing cavalry officer, Prince Danilo, was once engaged and whom his rich old uncle at the last moment forbade to marry because of her poverty. How differently that same rich old uncle would look on the match today! Twenty millions is a pretty dowry."

"At least it seems you didn't break your heart over losing me," sneered Danilo.

"No; my plebeian heart stood the shock excellently. I soon found consolation—an elderly husband who lived just one week after the wedding and left me all his wealth."

"Yes; I heard how your father forced you into the match. Next time you can choose a husband to suit yourself."

"Why should I marry again? I am rich, free. I have everything."

"Including love?" he asked, his eyes devouring her fragile beauty.

"I don't believe in love," scoffed Sonia. "All men are alike. Dozens of them are after my money and make love to me because they can't get it without me."

"Men are not all fortune hunters," he denied hotly. "I for one"—

"So they all say. Each says 'I love you!' Each means my fortune."

"They do?" cried Danilo, in rage at the strong insinuation. "Well, here's one that doesn't. I for one shall never say to you, 'I love you!'"

A strange smile stole across her face. She came very close to where he stood; so close that the faint perfume of her hair was sweet in his nostrils; so close that her breath was warm upon his lips; so close that his bewildered soul struggled in vain to hide from the glory in her eyes. Her voice was a musical whisper as she asked:

"You'll never say to me 'I love you?'"

There was an infinity of allurement in the tempting words. Danilo, with a mighty effort, shook off the spell and shouted:

"Never! Never! Never!"

"That's a comfort!" she said coldly, drawing away and seeking to veil her keen disappointment. "But," she added more softly, "why not say it if you really want to?"

"I don't want to!" he declared sulkily.

"And you promise faithfully you'll never say to me, 'I love you?'"

Again she was perilously close to him. Again his eyes tore themselves free from the pleading seductiveness of hers as he reiterated:

"I promise! I'm not going to make a fool of myself or be made a fool of."

"Is that a declaration of war?" queried Sonia.

"No, my friend, no. Do you mean to say if I asked you to be my wife you would merely laugh at me?"

"Probably. All men are alike."

"They are not, and in time I'll prove it to you."

Before she could answer the ambassador and several of the guests came into the room. At first opportunity Popoff drew Danilo aside.

"Prince," said he impressively, "you have now been attached to this legation nearly four months and"—

"Few of my attachments last so long," observed Danilo.

"You refer to your love affairs? I have heard of them. They have brought you to the brink of ruin. You are almost penniless. Here is my plan to save you, also to give you a chance to save your country from bankruptcy. I want you to marry."

"To what?" cried Danilo.

"To marry—beautiful woman, my boy—twenty millions—Mme. Sonia Sadowa! Hey?"

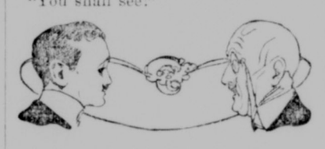
"Never!" returned Danilo, angrily, as he rose to end the interview.

"Then a Frenchman will marry her, and her fortune and our country will be ruined."

"I won't marry her," repeated Danilo, "and she won't marry me. But for my country's sake I'll keep any Frenchman from marrying her."

"But how?"

"You shall see!"



CHAPTER III.

The Garden Fete.

THE gardens of Mme. Sonia Sadowa's villa, just outside Paris, were gayly decorated for a lawn fete. The grounds were dotted with laughing groups of bright-[illegible] men and women, for Sonia's Marsovian guests were [illegible]esque native costumes and [illegible] was a veritable kaleidoscopic carnival of color in perfect [illegible] of golden hues and [illegible] figures.

Ambassador Popoff, his long, lean figure draped in vivid green, was pacing the allees of the garden near the entrance gate, pausing nervously now and again to scan late arrivals in search of some one. At length he descried the man he sought. Nish was just bustling into the grounds, and the ambassador at once beckoned to him.

"Now, then, Mr. Nish," cried Popoff as soon as the little clerk had shambled within earshot, "I told you to bring Prince Danilo here and not to leave him for an instant until"—

"He wouldn't let me stay," explained Nish. "He says he won't come. He's giving a party—if I may say so, a very gay"—

"And for the sake of a lot of pleasure seeking idlers the prince refuses to obey my orders and come to Mme. Sonia's?"

"Yes, your excellency. He positively refuses to come. And when I say 'positively' refuses I— Here he is now!"

Danilo, resplendent in the uniform of a Marsovian captain of hussars, strolled nonchalantly forward, with a careless nod that quite ignored the ambassador's glare of reproof at his lateness.

"I understand, prince," began Popoff coldly, "that you positively refused to obey my"—

"So I did, so I did," assented Danilo cheerfully. "But at the last moment I changed my mind and my clothes, and here I am. I've postponed my party for an hour or so. You see, I remembered my promise to help you scare away from the widow any Frenchman who seemed inclined to make love to her. That's why I came."

"Good!" approved Popoff, rubbing his hands gleefully. "Very good! And where do you expect to begin?"

ALL HER MARSOVIAN GUESTS WORE THEIR PICTURESQUE NATIVE COSTUMES.

"NEVER! NEVER! NEVER!"

"With the most dangerous suitor. Who is he?"

"Well," replied Popoff confidentially, "I've had my eye on her, and it seems to me that De Jolidon"—

"De Jolidon!" exclaimed Danilo. "Impossible!"

"Why impossible, pray? I think I have as good eyes as any man. I think, sir, I can detect love when I see it. And from the way De Jolidon looks at the widow—why, man, I don't know a single thing that doesn't point toward his being in love with her. If"—

"If I may say so, your excellency," put in Nish, shuffling nervously, "I think I could tell you of a 'single' thing, or, rather," he added, chuckling, "when I say 'single' I mean 'married.'"

"Mr. Nish," interrupted Popoff, "if you can stop wriggling around like an inebriated centiped long enough to talk plainly, will you do me the honor to put your blitherings into plain words?"

"Well, your excellency," stammered Nish, "I happen to know M. de Jolidon is already head over heels in love with a lady who has a husband. He"—

"Mr. Nish," thundered Popoff, "you are demeaning yourself to the contemptible act of talking scandal! Are you aware of that, Mr. Nish? If so, go on talking it and tell me who she is."

"You fool!" whispered Danilo in Nish's ear. "Everybody but the ambassador himself knows it is Mme. Popoff whom De Jolidon loves. Be careful!"

"Well, Mr. Nish," repeated Popoff objectionally as he eyed the sporting clerk with lofty majesty, "I'm waiting to hear the name of the lady that De Jolidon is in love with."

"He—he neglected to tell me, your excellency," sputtered Nish.

"Then," decided the ambassador, "I shall discover her by diplomatic means, and when I find who she is she shall use her influence to lure De Jolidon away from the widow. Prince, will you help me in this?"

"Leave it all to me," suggested Danilo, with startling willingness. "Don't try to learn her identity yourself. Let me attend to the whole matter."

"All right," consented Popoff. "It will be a good lesson in diplomacy for you. Perhaps I can put you on the right track."

The ambassador drew an ivory fan from his pocket.

"Last night at the embassy ball," said he, "Nova Kovitch, who used to be one of my attaches, brought me this. He was crazy with jealousy. He'd just picked up the fan; said it was his wife's and that some man had written 'I love you' on one of the sticks. He was going home to beat his wife and make her confess who the villain was when I persuaded my wife to save poor Mme. Nova Kovitch by pretending the fan was her own. Ah, but my wife is a born diplomatist! Nova Kovitch was convinced, and I pocketed the fan for future reference."

Danilo took the trinket from Popoff's hands and read the penciled inscription.

"Why," he said on impulse, "this is De Jolidon's handwriting! How does it happen that he"—

"Then," squealed Popoff in triumph, "it is Mme. Nova Kovitch he loves. The whole thing is absurdly simple when a brain like mine is brought to bear on it!"

Delighted with his own astuteness, the ambassador pattered off to join the other guests, leaving Danilo, fan in hand, blankly facing the astounded little clerk.

"Nish," observed the prince, "do you suppose it's possible De Jolidon can be in love with Mme. Nova Kovitch as well as with Mme. Popoff?"

"I'd—I'd like to think so," murmured Nish as he started faithfully off in the wake of his chief. "I'd like to think so. It—it would make it less exclusive, less of a monopoly. And to think his excellency never recognized his own wife's fan! Where ignorance is bliss why read up on divorce laws?"

Laying the fan on a nearby table, Danilo was turning away when a voice behind him called mockingly:

"Still in retreat? So you are afraid of me!"

Whirling about, the prince faced Sonia. She was bewitchingly pretty in the black and gold Marsovian dress that showed to fullest advantage every willowy line of her figure.

"I'm not retreating," he contradicted, "only skirmishing in light cavalry fashion."

"And you are going away like that? Oh, you stupid man!"

"I can't tell what you mean," he answered, puzzled.

"And I shan't tell what I mean," she rejoined. "By the way," she added, "how do you happen to be here? You declined my invitation."

"I'm here," he replied bluntly, "because I'm making it my business to get rid of every Frenchman who shows signs of proposing to you."

"But why?" she asked in wonder.

"For my own amusement; that's all."

"You—you don't happen to be in love with me yourself?" she asked, a tinge of wistfulness in the light mockery of her tone.

"Certainly not!" he retorted, with suspicious promptitude.

"You're very, very rude!" she reproved. "But since you don't love me you ought to be able to give me good advice about accepting a man I really want to marry."

"Oh!" growled Danilo, chagrined. "Then there is some one you want to marry?"

She nodded.

"Whoever the man is, he's after your money," he sneered.

"No," she contradicted. "He is not—not this one."

"You said all men were alike."

"This man is different. He loves me."

"Then marry him! What is it to me? Marry any one you want to. I don't care. And I'll dance at your wedding. I'll dance till I wear holes through both my shoes."

"You silly boy!" she scoffed. "You're jealous!"

"Jealous?" he raged. "Jealous? I jealous? That's a good one!"

Words failed him, and he stalked away to a nearby summer house, where he paused, lost in seeming contemplation of the little building's architecture.

The neglected fan lying on the table caught Sonia's eye. She picked it up idly and opened it. The words "I love you" met her gaze. Quickly she glanced at Danilo.

"I understand," she murmured to herself. "He vowed he'd never say it to me, so he's written it."

Noting that Danilo's back was toward her, she furtively lifted the fan to her lips and kissed the written words. Then as she restored it to the table she whispered:

"Just the same, I'll make him say it. He shall!"

She crossed to where he stood.

"Have you nothing to say to me, prince?" she asked.

"Only one thing—goodby!"

"Goodby!" she echoed. "You're—you're not going?"

"I leave Paris tomorrow morning by the first train—forever!"

"Then you won't be here, after all, to dance at my wedding?"

"No!"

"But you promised. And now, I suppose, I shall never see you again, for when I'm married I shall live in Paris."

"I thought you were more patriotic," he sighed. "It seems hard that you should turn your back on your native land, marry a Frenchman and settle here."

"Yet it is what I have decided," she answered. "This is probably the last time I shall wear our native costume or dance our wild national dances. Today's fete is a sort of farewell to old times."

"No; our dances and costumes would not appeal to a Frenchman. Who is it you are going to marry?"

"The engagement isn't announced yet," she evaded.

"Then," he returned, with a shrug, "I suppose I shall never know, for I leave early tomorrow."

"And you won't dance at my wedding?"

"I've told you I would not."

"If you won't," she cried, a sudden inspiration flashing through her mind and lighting her pale face to dazzling beauty, "dance with me now!"

She stretched out her slender white arms with an allurement that no mortal man could resist.

HIS MISCONCEPTION.

He Bought a Dog and the Next Night Got Into Trouble.

Mrs. Rounder had insisted that her husband should buy a dog. Rounder did not like the idea, having grave doubts of the advisability of having a savage brute around. But Mrs. Rounder said that she would feel safer when Mr. Rounder was detained late downtown on important business if there was a good dog about. So Rounder yielded, and the dog was bought.

That night when Rounder, with uncertain steps, made his way home he was confronted by the spectacle of the new dog barring the way to the front door. Rounder, who had no use for dogs, paused upon the first step, uncertain what to do.

"Good dog; nice doggy," he cooed persuasively in a thick voice.

But the dog showed no signs of friendliness, and Rounder took a new tack.

"It's all ri', ol' man. I'm yer daddy. I'm the ol' man. That's ri'. You know me. Come on inside an' have a bone on me."

Still the dog showed no sign that he recognized Rounder, who sat down on the first step and thought the situation over.

Slowly it dawned through his befuddled brain that the last car had left for downtown, and it was a question of getting by the dog or camping out for the rest of the night.

"Bloomin' outrage," he mumbled to himself. "My house, my dog—I'll kick the stuffin' out of him if he doesn't acknowledge the fac' pretty soon."

Suddenly he was seized with a bright idea. He would find a policeman and get him to kill the brute.

Rounder walked four times around the block before he was rewarded by finding an officer to pour out his tale of woe to.

"Officer," he mumbled thickly, "awful savage dog on my porch. Bigger'n a meetin' house. Can't go home. Bloomin' outrage. Goin' to sue the city for $1,000,000 damage."

When the officer finally grasped the situation he took Rounder by the arm and led him home. Taking one look at the object that was keeping Rounder from the bosom of his family, the officer kicked it aside and told Rounder to go in and keep quiet.

It was the doormat that some one had kicked up and neglected to replace.—Detroit Free Press.

How He Managed It.

James MacNeill Whistler once visited an artist in Paris who was not overburdened with this world's goods and was surprised at the sumptuous lunch provided. On being asked how he managed to live so well his host replied: "I have a pet monkey, which I let down from my window by a rope into that of my landlady and trust to Providence. Sometimes Jacko returns with a loaf, sometimes with a ham. His visits are full of surprises. One never knows what may appear."

A Bully Idea!

Well Recommended.

On the way to the office of his publishers one crisp fall morning James Whitcomb Riley met an unusually large number of acquaintances, who commented conventionally upon the fine weather. This unremitting applause amused him. When greeted at the office with "Nice day, Mr. Riley," he smiled broadly.

"Yes," he agreed. "Yes, I've heard it very highly spoken of."—Everybody's.

Lovely!

Oh, what a pleasure at five a. m.
To hear the door of the next flat slam!

At half past five what joy we know
To hear the alarm of the clock below!

At six how lovely 'tis to awake
With the smell in one's nostrils of burning steak!

At seven how sweet to lie and hear
A parrot squawking just in the rear!

At half past seven what dream of love
When the kids break loose in the flat above!

At eight, when one from his bed must creep,
How sweet to think of one's morning sleep!

RODE INTO RAVINES NEVER TO RETURN

What Mystery The Dark Paths Along Black Mountain Held Not Known.

Within less than half a century many persons have been swallowed up in the deep ravines of Black Mountain, in Wise County, Virginia, never to be found again. The old mountain with its sombre frowning front, true to the significance of its name, carries many strange secrets locked in its bosom. Men have ridden into its shadows in the flush of manhood, the eternal gates of silence closing noiselessly behind them, says the New York Times. The region is inhabited by mountain people who are a law unto themselves. Few men have ever ventured alone into the mountain and come back to tell the tale. The history of each new disappearance goes down in the legend of the region as another weird tale to be told. No explanation has ever been vouchsafed as to what became of those who disappeared and the manner or reason of death of those whose bodies have been recovered is as uncertain as the other secrets of the great black pile.

The general public knew little of the mysterious incidents associated with this wild section of the country until the sudden disappearance of Edward Leisonring Wentz, the young Philadelphia millionaire, who rode away from his home at Big Stone Gap on his favorite pony on the morning of October 14, 1904, never to return. On the evening of that day the horse ridden by Wentz, riderless, but with bridle and saddle still on, was found in the ford of Powell's river, not far from the Roaring Fork, the spot from which several other men had disappeared before the day of the millionaire. For weeks hundreds of men scoured the mountains, hunting through every ravine and in every cave for some trace of the lost man. The impression gained credence that Wentz had been kidnapped—supposedly for the purpose of holding him for ransom. This led to the offering of a reward of $55,000 for his recovery alive. Stimulated by the offer of the reward, hundreds of bold men joined in the search. Five months after the search had been abandoned a mountaineer unexpectly came upon the body of Wentz lying in a lonely spot among fallen trees. The flesh had rotted from the bones and some of the teeth had falled from the mouth.

The head of the man layed upon one of the fallen trees. The mystery was in a manner cleared by the finding of the body. The theory that the young millionaire had committed suicide was advanced. Eternity alone will clear entirely the mystery of the mountain.

The disappearance of Wentz was flashed over the wires to all parts of the country. The mysteries shrouding Black Mountain, which lies on the border between Virginia and Kentucky became a matter of great public inteaest. The daily papers carried columns of well written theory attempting to explain in some plausible manner the means and the cause of the death of Wentz. But the secret lay hidden in the recesses of the rocky hills, and there were none so bold to go and look for it. The history of the Wentz case brought forth many other gruesome stories of that region.

It became known that in the course of the years half a dozen or more men had disappeared from approximately the sam espot from which Wentz disappeared. Of these the body of Wentz was the only body recovered. What became of the others will probably never be known. All of the supposed victims of the mountains had ventured into the wild region where the mad waters of Roaring Creek leap and pitch down the rugged mountain ravine over the shaggy rocks to pour into the more quiet stream known as Powell's river. Of all the men who have disappeared from time to time for half a century under the shadow of the great mountain of mystery, the bleaching bones of Wentz alone were left to tell a portion of the sorry tale.

A mysterious disappearance next preceding that of Wentz was when James B. Gearhart, a Bristol insurance man, ventured into the mountain fastnesses. The disappearance is as much a mystery now as when searchers were peering fearfully into the ravines for his dead body. He left at his lodging quarters in Bristol a valuable library, a wardrobe full of valuable clothing and other personal property. These effects have remained unclaimed to this day. Gearhart left Bristol for a ten day's trip through the mining regions in the pursuance of his business. He left the hotel at Appalachia one morning for a trip into the surrounding country. He took the road which led by way of Roaring Fork and the mysterious spot near the ford in Powell's river. That was the last ever seen of Gearhart. Inquiry has been made in every part of the country, but no trace has ever been found of the missing man.

Former Congressman James B. Richmond, of Gates City, relates that this spot in Black Mountain holds a parallel to the Wentz and Gearheart cases of many years ago. The occurrence in question took place just prior to the Civil War. Two men were searching for a herd of lost cattle in the wilds of the mountain region.

When they came to the fatal spot near the mouth of Roaring Fork they dismounted and hitched their horses in order to foot points inaccessible when mounted. They separated at the gorges, taking separate ridges in the ascent, having agreed to meet at the gorge within a specified time.

Only one of these men ever followed the backward trail. He waited in vain and called repeatedly to his companion. Finally as the shades of night began to fall, he mounted and rode away from the lonely spot alone. Search was made for the missing man immediately thereafter. From that day to this—and in the meantime many other men have walked out of the the world of men through the same rocky gorge—no trace of him has ever been discovered.

A party of revenue officers whose names have become lost in the course of years, who were in the act of raiding the mountains of Kentucky and Virginia moonshiners are said to have disappeared in a similar manner to the other disappearances which have been narrated. Whether they were slain by moonshiners or fell into the mysterious abysses which no living man has seen and returned to tell the tale, is a question which eternity alone will solve Of these officers, of those who rode into the mountain, not one came out again. It is believed in the region that the men were ambushed by the moonshiners whose illegal business they proposed to breakup and by them killed. The Federal Government instituted an investigation, but the mountain and the people in it remained silent. They will remain silent for all time. It is the nature of the hill people to remain silent. They are born and bred in silent places and with few words.

Walter Kemp, a young civil and mining engineer, and Thomas Kilgore, superintendent of mines, are the latest examples of the mountain lost. These men, well known in the region and supposedly immune from the fate that awaited others who might venture into the region tramped jauntily up the Roaring Fork and disappeared. As in other cases, searching parties were sent out for them, but the search was futile. The great mountain refuses to give up its dark secret. The people who live in it went their way in silence.

Superintendent Kelly, who was last week reported to have been lost in the mountain, has turned up alive. But Superintendent Kelley did not venture into the Roaring Fork neighborhood. It was his intention to have followed the trail that led to the ford, but he changed his plans at the last moment and went in another direction. Knowing that his plans had been to take the route that had proved fatal to so many men, the alarm was sounded when he did not make his appearance at nightfall.

The report went abroad that Black Mountain had claimed another victim. But on the following day Superintendent Kelly turned up in the flesh, alive and well, prepared to resume his mining duties within the shadow of the great hillside.

The fatal spot is fascinating to the mountain tourist, albeit it is a place to be shunned. It is in the most inviting season of the when all nature is glad and the birds are making merry among the rhododendrons and the ivy, that this scene of surpassing beauty, with its roar of sparkling waters and its silent river ford is most to be dreaded. It is always upon such occasions or when the mountain is red and golden in its autumnal foliage and chestnut hunters are venturing into the wilds that the mysteries of Roaring Fork are repeated and the tossing waters sing their requiem to lost men and riderless horses neigh in the night in forest awaiting the return of their masters—a wait that is always in vain.

MINNESOTA FISH CAUGHT BY HAND

A Tale of the Finny Tribe That Sounds Something Like a Parable.

The opening of the fishing season in Minnesota has revealed a condition of things almost unparalleled in the annals of this favorite sport, writes the St. Paul's correspondent of the Brooklyn Eagle It has been known to fishermen for some time that there was an adundant supply of fish in the lakes and creeks, and that the finest sport could be expected. Since the season opened every train from St. Paul has been crowded with fishermen, and from every fishing ground in the state reports are arriving that the fish are running through the creeks connecting the various lakes in such shoals that at times it is difficult to cross the creeks without stepping on them.

At Fergus Falls, a favorite fishing place, the banks of the creeks are lined with spectators who stand and watch the fishermen pick out the largest and best fish with their hands as they swim past. The law permits the spearing of pickerel, suckers and a variety known here as red horse. At one point a fisherman took out sixty fish in record time, the largest being a pickerel weighing 26 pounds. Witnesses describe the fish as swimming so thickly that a boy, armed with a spear for the first time, could have no difficulty in taking out a wagon load.

There are 10,000 small lakes in Minnesota and innumerable creeks, and since the fish have come under protection of the State Fish and Game Commission, the fish have increased in a manner which is phenomenal, an object-lesson as to what can be accomplished in this direction. In fact this year the department is advised that fish are so plentiful as to become a problem, as they are clogging up the streams, and promise their own extinction. Trout are just as plentiful as the less aristocratic kind, and Minnesota is an angler's paradise. At Deerwood a new fish hatchery is being established for which $6,000 was appropriated last year. Arrangements have been entered into with the loggers for the security of the different kinds of spawn, and over 4,000,000 trout fry are distributed annually in different parts of the state.

FRIENDSVILLE.

Mr. Semmes Hamill, of Oakland, spent Saturday and Sunday last in our town.

Mr. David L. Hill, of Frostburg, spent several days with Dr. Mason and family.

Mr. Spiker, of Bruceton Mills, spent Sunday with Mr. R. C. McCandlish.

Mrs. Sue Moore is visiting her father, Mr. Geo. Long.

Mr. Geo. Friend met with a very painful accident on Sunday night by falling and dislocating his ankle.

Miss Nell Herpick and brother Ralph, of Connellsville, Pa., are getting ready to camp on Bear Creek. They expect quite a crowd this week.

Miss Ethel Dunham spent last week visiting friends in Somerfield, Pa.

Miss Olivette Shartzer, of Oakland, and Miss Ella Shaw, of Cumberland, are visiting Miss Gladys Mason.

Messrs. Murrell Nicklow, Morris Largent, James Meyers and Thos. Augustine, of Addison, Pa., spent Sunday with friends in our town.

Master John Thayer, of Eld r, met with a very painful accident on Monday morning by falling off a fence and dislocating his elbow.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

The Home Missionary and Church Extension Conference, under the direction of Dr J. H. Fitzwater, which was in session from the 14th to the 19th, was more largely attended than ever before, the Sunday audiences being quite large. The addresses Sunday afternoon by Dr. Wright and in the evening by Dr. Kynette were strong presentations of the needs of missionary work among the foreign masses in America.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society will hold their meeting July 25th, 26th and 27th. Dr. McDowell, of the Baltimore Conference, will preach Sundan morning.

The Interstate Prohibition Convention will meet Thursday, July 30th, at 8 p. m. and continue their sessions over Sunday. Some exceptionably able men will be present and address the convention. On Friday an Open Conference will be held at 10.00 a. m., and platform meeting at 3.00 p. m. On Saturday, Open Conference at 10.30 a. m. On Sunday, 9.00 a. m., Prohibition Love Feast; 10.30, address by C. N. Howard; 3.00 p. m., Platform Meeting, addresses by C. N. Howard and Oliver Stewart; 7.00 p. m. Hill Top meeting, and 8.00 p. m. address by Oliver Stewart, of Chicago.

Mr. Cilley, the patentee and builder of the Auditorium, has a force of workmen making repairs on that building.

Mr. John D. Hayden, who had his arm broken and elbow dislocated by a fall from a tree last week, is walking about, but it will be a month before he will have the use of his arm.

Mr. C. F. Dawson has the finest display of souvenir post cards on the Park. He also carries fine candies, fruits and soft drinks at his tent at the station.

From indications now great crowds will be here in August. More applications are being received for board than ever before in the history of the Park.

Cottages are in demand and many more could be rented if they were furnished with bath rooms.

We noticed among late arrivals Dr. Davidson and Miss Pollock and her assistant Miss Daugherty.

Mr. Dawson, of Westernport, Md., has temporary charge of the electric light plant.

The Park never looked better. The streets are nicely graded and the sidewalks and crossings in good condition. Chautauqua Park, with the new walks and closely cropped grass, looks more than usually inviting.

The people of the Park are hopeful of better times coming for our place. There are hopes that a change for the better will be inaugursted and that we will ere long have the greatest mountain resorts in America.

BITTINGER.

Professors Close, Norton and Simons' of College Park, Md., delivered addresses on agriculture before a gathering of farmers at this place last week.

T. B. Wiley and F. M. Bittinger made a business trip to Oakland early this week.

The frame of a large new barn on Daniel Yommer's farm, near Jennings, was raised on last Monday.

Myrtle Wiley, who has spent the past two weeks at her home here, returned to Cumberland the first of this week.

Mrs. G. W. Engle and children, of Baltimore, arrived here last Monday and will spend a few weeks at Patterson Engle's.

Mrs. Albert Brenneman went to Accident last Monday and will remain a few weeks to be treated by Dr. Boyer.

M. K. Malone, of Elizabeth, Pa., is spending his usual summer vacation in this section.

Mr. and Mrs. George Wiley are happy over the recent arrival of a son at their home.

Awakening of China Means Lasting Peace In the Far East.

By WU TING FANG, Chinese Minister to the United States.

NEARLY forty years ago Wen Hsiang, who was a minister of the tsungli yamen (the foreign office), in reply to a person who was complaining of the slowness with which China was moving, said that once she began to move she would do so with the rapidity and momentum of an avalanche, and today we are witnessing the realization of his words. There are many forces, some of which have been working quietly but none the less effectively for years, to which this awakening may be ascribed.

FIRST AND FOREMOST IS THE SPREAD OF EDUCATION, AND BY THIS I MEAN THE DIFFUSION OF GENERAL KNOWLEDGE, KNOWLEDGE OF MEN AND OF AFFAIRS OF THE WORLD.

It is a far cry from the time when high officials in Pekin to whom the wonderful performance of the Morse telegraph apparatus was shown and explained expressed simply their opinion that CHINA GOT ALONG WITHOUT IT FOR FOUR THOUSAND YEARS to the present day when every official residence and department in Pekin is connected by the telephone and every provincial yamen or administrative office is supplied with the telegraph service.

Repeated defeats at the hands of the foreign powers soon convinced our people of the FUTILITY OF MATCHING BOWS AND ARROWS AGAINST MODERN GUNS AND EXPLOSIVES, while our wooden junks went down before the onslaught of armored cruisers and battleships like wheat before the scythe. The inability of our former so called modern army and navy to encounter those of other nations demonstrated to us clearly that modern weapons of war without the properly trained men to handle them and without scientific leaders to direct and control are of no more value than bows and arrows and wooden junks.

The programme of reform initiated by the government also includes the extension of the postal system, the improvement of the telegraph service, the fostering of domestic and foreign trade, the education and protection of its subjects abroad, the simplification of social ceremonies and a hundred and one other items which will tend TO STRENGTHEN AND ENRICH OUR COUNTRY.

WHAT DOES THIS AWAKENING OF CHINA MEAN TO THE WORLD? TO MY MIND IT MEANS, IN THE FIRST PLACE, TRUE AND LASTING PEACE IN THE FAR EAST. THE MOMENT CHINA BECOMES STRONG ENOUGH AFTER HER AWAKENING TO MAINTAIN HER SOVEREIGN RIGHTS AND PROTECT HERSELF FROM AGGRESSION THE FAR EASTERN QUESTION WILL HAVE BEEN SOLVED. AGAIN, THE AWAKENING OF CHINA MEANS THE DEVELOPMENT OF COMMERCE, AND THE DAY IS NOT DISTANT WHEN THE PACIFIC OCEAN WILL RIVAL THE ATLANTIC WITH THE NUMBER OF SHIPS THAT SAIL ON ITS SURFACE. THE WORLD WILL THEN WITNESS AN EXPANSION OF TRADE NEVER BEFORE KNOWN IN ITS HISTORY, AND THIS TRADE WILL ALSO BE A SAFEGUARD IN THE INTERESTS OF UNIVERSAL PEACE.

Stop Eating Beefsteaks: Be Healthy and Happy.

By Senator CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW of New York.

SHAKESPEARE died at fifty-two, an age then considered old. We know plenty of vigorous and hearty men between seventy and ninety, but not one of them who is in his "second childishness," without teeth or eyes or taste or anything. The dental art has so far progressed that good teeth are the common property of old age.

In Shakespeare's time men were played out and senile at fifty because of their methods of living. Modern healthful ways of diet, cleanliness and hygiene were unknown. BATHS WERE SUPPOSED TO PRODUCE COLDS AND INFLUENZA. Water was regarded as necessary only for navigation and irrigation, and the pleasures of life were summed up in THE ABILITY TO CONSUME UNLIMITED QUANTITIES OF BEEF, beer and wine. Sanitation, so highly developed in our day, did not exist. There was plenty of godliness, but little of the cleanliness which ought to rank next; hence people between forty and fifty had wornout stomachs, palsied muscles and shattered nerves.

With our modern method of preserving health it is the rarest thing now to meet Shakespeare's kind of old men. The senate illustrates the PRESERVATION OF VIGOR by the habits of today. Alabama's two great senators, one at eighty-six and the other at eighty-four, Morgan and Pettus, who died last session, were to the end famous for physical and intellectual energy. There are three senators of eighty who are heads of great committees and surpass all the youngsters in the amount and value of the work which they do.

They have passed the spectacular period. They do not believe that all of legislation is criticism and denunciation which by their sensationalism give the orator standing room next to editorial matter in the press and large audiences from the platform, but they give their unequaled experience, their maturity of years and their ripe judgment to constructive policies which will permanently promote the best interests of the people and the stability of the government.

I NOTICE WHEN THE NEWSPAPERS SPEAK OF PEOPLE GIVING UP BEEF BECAUSE OF THE RISING PRICE THERE IS UNIVERSAL RIDICULE. I DATE MY FREEDOM FROM ALMOST CHRONIC RHEUMATISM TO THE DAY WHEN I STOPPED EATING BEEF, AND SLEEP, DIGESTION AND CLARIFIED VISION SUCH AS I HAD NEVER KNOWN BEFORE HAVE KEPT INCREASING AS I DISMISSED FLESH AND FOWL FOR VEGETABLES. WITH NINE-TENTHS OF THE WORLD THE GREATEST HAPPINESS IN LIFE IS THE TABLE PILED WITH THE THINGS ONE LOVES TO EAT AND DRINK AND THE PLEASURES OF A GORGE. BUT FOR THAT, FROM MY EXPERIENCE, THE HOSPITAL AND THE GRAVEYARD WOULD BE LARGELY OUT OF BUSINESS.

THE WORLD DISSATISFIED.

No matter how we strive or how we study
To make the world a place devoid of woes,
There's no such thing as pleasing everybody
Or giving to the fretful sweet repose.
If war could be abolished and if labor
Might cease to be imposed upon the race,
You might at once expect to hear your neighbor
Complain that earth was "such a dull old place."

If some great wizard, filled with kind emotions
And seeking to make life a long, sweet dream,
Produced a wand and waved it o'er the oceans,
Thus turning the salt water into cream,
The dairymen would rise in consternation
And ask that walls along the shores be made
And on the wizard heap loud condemnation
For basely seeking to destroy their trade.

If some wise person with the best intention
Could, after he had studied well, some day
Produce a great and glorious invention
For making wool from sawdust or from hay,
The farmers in each wool producing section
With mingled fear and hatred in their breasts,
Would rise, demanding adequate protection
For what they deemed their sacred interests.

If it befell that some one should discover
A means of making every girl as fair
As she appears to her devoted lover
If beauty could be given everywhere,
Still there would be sad looks and idle fretting,
And doubtless in a precious little while
Somebody might be found who'd be regretting
That plain, old fashioned girls were out of style.

No matter how we toil or how we study
To make the world a brighter, better place,
There's no such thing as pleasing everybody
Or banishing the frowns from every face.
There are so many women who must treasure
The foolish little cares that blight and scar,
The world is full of men whose dearest pleasure
Is finding fault with all things as they are.

—S. E. Kiser in Judge.

The "Green" Cook.

Norah, the "green" cook, poked her head in at the dining room door.

"Please, ma'am," she asked, "an' how will I be knowin' when the pudd'n' is cooked?"

"Stick a knife into it," said the mistress, recalling the cookbook instructions. "If the knife comes out clean, the pudding is ready to serve."

"Yis, ma'am."

"And, oh, Norah"—the mistress had an afterthought—"if the knife does come out clean you might stick all the rest of the knives into the pudding."

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 32. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, JULY 30, 1908. NUMBER 22

COPPER WILL BE USED.

sion as To Covering of New Court House Arrived at Monday.

Last Monday morning an adjourned meeting of the Garrett County Court House Commission was held at the Bar Association rooms which was attended by a majority of the Commission, the object of the meeting being to decide what material should be used for the roof of the building, slate being specified in the contract, which was annulled by some of the Commission and tin substituted. Other members of the Commission objected to tin, hence the meeting was called to arrive at some conclusion satisfactory to all.

The contractor had already covered a portion of the building with tin, said to be a low grade material, entirely unsatisfactory to all after it was found that it was of an inferior quality.

The Commission after going into the merits of the different materials used for the construction of roofs decided that the best for the building would be copper and a contract was made for the same which will add somewhat to the cost of the building but will eventually be the cheapest.

The Commission is to be congratulated for its decision to use this metal as it will last indefinitely and is really the only thing that will give satisfaction.

Annual Lutheran Reunion.

The fifth Annual Lutheran Reunion will be held at Mountain Lake Park, Friday, Aug. 7th, 1908. These gatherings are always largely attended so it is likely that Mountain Lake Park will be filled with Lutheran visitors from Pennsylvania, Maryland, West Virginia and other states. These reunions are always very interesting and this one promises to be no exception to the rule. The following is the program: In the Grove 12:30 to 2:00 p. m., informal reception: (a) picnic dinner; (b) general hand shaking; (c) music and five minute impromptu talks. Auditorium—2:00 p. m., doxology; invocation by Rev. Edmund Manges; anthem; prayer by Rev. C. F. Floto; hymn No. 154; offering; address "The Lutheran Church of To-day" by Rev. W. H. Dunbar, D. D.; ...hem; announcements; hymn No. 284, "Blest be the Tie that Binds;" benediction.

A Fireman Loses a Foot.

Mr. F. A. Ricker, a well known fireman on the Cumberland division with headquarters at Piedmont, lost a foot as the result of an accident on the Seventeen Mile Grade Sunday evening. Mr. Ricker was firing the helper on No. 1 up the mountain and when he jumped off to run ahead to open the switch, he fell and the engine passed over one of his legs, necessiting the amputation of the limb about two inches above the ankle at Keyser hospital.

MOUNTAIN CHAUTAUQUA WILL OPEN TUESDAY.

Twenty-Sixth Annual Assembly at Mountain Lake Park.

PROGRAM OF SPLENDID MERIT.

As Usual the Director Will be Dr. W. L. Davidson—Many Interesting News Items From the Famous Summer Resort.

The Mountain Chautauqua will begin Tuesday next with a concert at 8 p. m. by the Sylvan Glee Club, ten superb male voices; readings by Ladru M. Layton and Folk-songs in costume by Miss Rita Rich, closing with Moving Pictures. Wednesday at 11 a. m. Lecture-recital by Ladru M. Layton, and at 8.00 p. m. The Interstate Prohibition Conference will hold its first session Friday at 9 a. m. and at 3 p. m. an address will will be delivered by Clinton N. Howard, of New York. On Saturday, at 10.30 a. m., Mr. Howard will also address the Conference On Sunday there will be a Prohibition Love Feast at 9 a. m., and at 10.30 Mr. Howard will address the Conference. At 3.00 p. m., there will be a Platform Meeting with addresses by Oliver Stewart, of Chicago, C. N. Howard and the Prohibition candidate for Vice-President. In the evening at 7.00 a Hill Top Meeting will be held and at 8.00 Oliver Stewart will deliver an address. A large crowd is expected at this meeting especially on Sunday when the people in the immediate neighborhood will doubtless come in large numbers.

Dr. W. L. Davidson, Superintendent of the Mountain Chautauqua, who spent a week or two with his family at the Park, left here Saturday night for Chautauqua, N. Y., where he is billed to deliver two lectures this week. He will return to the Park on Friday or Saturday and have everything in readiness for the opening of the Mountain Lake Park Chautauqua on Tuesday afternoon, August 4th.

One of the most beautiful and picturesque cottages in the Park is that of Mr. and Mrs. Winchell, on Sixth street. The design is rustic, one-story, with a sun-parlor of glass. This room has a large open fire place where a cheerful wood fire may be seen blazing on cool mornings and evenings. Several thousands of dollars have been expended on this beautiful cottage and the grounds.

There are quite a number of people on the grounds looking for cottages for the balance of the season. A few cottages still remain unoccupied, but they are either undesirably located or are out of repair or scantily furnished.

The Bazar and Fete to be given by the Woman's Civic Club, Tuesday afternoon from 2 to 6 o'clock, in Chautauqua Park, promises to be a very enjoyable occasion and will be liberally patronized.

The Columbian Hotel is becoming quite popular under the management of Mr. C. W. Hopkins.

Mr. Cilley has completed the improvement to the Auditorium, and now there can be no question as to the absolute safety of the building.

Mr. S. C. Speers, of Speers, Pa., is here for a few days. Mrs. Speers and two grand daughters, have been occupying the family cottage for several weeks.

Mrs. Carpenter, of Connellsville, Pa., is again occupying the Carroll cottage with her two children and nurse. She will be joined this week by her sister and child.

Mrs. Farqher, wife of Dr. Farqher, of Donora, Pa., is in the Yoder cottage. She is accompanied by her little daughter and her sister Miss Hambrey.

Mrs. W. H. H. Sheets was quite ill Sunday. She is now much better.

Mrs. R. M. Sanks and her son Harold and family will occupy the Sanks cottage Tuesday next.

We are glad that Misses DeBerry and Wilson will have charge of our public school for the coming winter.

Mr. Welton Wilson, of the Park, was the successful contestant for the scholarship at the Maryland Agricultural College, College Park, Md.

Have you seen our new Chief of Police in his new uniform? He's always "Up" and doing.

Dr. Davis made a wise choice in securing Mr. J. A. Enlow as ticket agent for the Chautauqua. No more competent and courteous official could be found.

Superintendent Davis was called to Baltimore on business yesterday.

A petition is being numerously signed asking for Sunday mails here.

Mrs. J. A. Hayden went to Westernport on an early train this morning to visit her son Grant and family for the day.

Mrs. Anso Clement and daughter are occupying their cottage here.

Dr. Meadows has opened his book room in the Park.

The Woman's Civic Club of Mountain Lake Park is making extensive preparations for a grand tournament, to be held Monday afternoon, August 17, 1908. Major Burns, the president of the Community, is arranging for the affair. An invitation signed by all the Park officials was sent to Governer Crothers a few days ago, inviting him to be present and after the close of the tournament to deliver an address on the subject of good roads It is expected that an immense crowd of people will be present on that occasion.

These tournaments have become annual affairs at the Park. The object is to raise money with which to beautify the Park, which is a very laudable enterprise on the part of these ladies, and every friend of the Park should encourage it by their presence.

Many fine horses will be seen and there will be excellent exhibitions of horsemanship. There will also be foot races and sack races, with appropriate prizes for each.

THE DEATH RECORD.

J. W. TOMLINSON.

Mr. J. W. Tomlinson, some years ago one of the best known citizens of Frostburg, but who for the past ten or twelve years had been living on a farm, died at his home in Garrett county, west of Grantsville, Friday morning, aged 71 years. While in Frostburg Mr. Tomlinson was engaged in the wagon making business for a long period and some of his handiwork is to be seen there yet. He lived at the south end of Bowery street and engaged in the flower and vegetable gardening business as a means to employ his time and energy not otherwise taken up. He is survived by his wife and several children. The funeral took place Sunday.

MRS. AUGUSTUS BARNARD.

Died, at her home near Deer Park, Monday night at 9.30 o'clock after an illness extending over several months, the result of dropsy, Mrs. Augustus Barnard, aged 48 years. The deceased leaves beside her husband several children, the youngest an infant of less than a year.

GARRETT COUNTY FRUIT.

Exhibits For Horticultural Meeting Wanted by Senator W. McCulloh Brown.

To the Editor of The Republican.

I believe that the fact is generally known that in the fall of 1906 Garrett county took nineteen prizes for apples exhibited at the State Horticultural show in Baltimore, including the prize for the best collection from any county in the State. The taking of these prizes not only reflected credit upon the individual exhibitors, but attracted marked and general attention to our county as a fruit region of the best.

I am anxious once more to obtain a creditable exhibit from Garrett, but can only do so by and with the cooperation of the farmers through the county. As the apple season is now at hand I would ask that anyone who has perfect fruit would take the trouble to carefully pick and save not less than seven perfect apples of a kind, and either send them direct to me for packing or leave them in Oakland, informing me by letter of the kind, and where they were left. The fruit that is worthy of exhibit will be carefully packed, and sent free of expense to the owner, to the Baltimore Refrigerating & Heating Co., where it will be put in cold storage until December.

It may be of interest to some to know that our apples which were sent to cold storage in September, 1906, were kept until the December Exhibit, after which they were repacked and returned to storage until the following July, when they were taken out and exhibited again at Jamestown, still being in good condition.

There is not an orchard in the county but will contain some fruit worthy of exhibition if well selected. Absolute perfection, not size is the requisite.

I ask that each one who reads this letter will himself make an effort to aid in making a creditable collection for the county, so that we may again win first place in the State.

My post office address is either Oakland, Md., or Bayard, W. Va., the latter being more direct, and I will be glad to answer any questions over the telephone.

Yours truly,
W. McCULLOH BROWN.
Bayard, W. Va., July 28th, 1908.

To the Members of the Garrett County Teachers' Association.

The keynote was struck at the last Institute when we were told that the reason the teachers do not receive better salaries is because we do not ask for it. You will agree, then, that it is up to us to ask. But how to ask is the question.

The only organized body of teachers is the G. C. T. A., therefore it seems to me it devolves upon us.

Let me make a suggestion. At our next annual meeting we should decide what we want in the way of legislation, then someone should be selected to draft our bill. By standing together we could demand its passage. It is useless for one person to attempt it, but in union there is strength. I would like to see the teachers take this matter up and give us their views upon the matter. We should be ready for the Legislature of 1910.

Now just a word about the County Institute. We were told there would be none, but I noticed the announcement for one in THE REPUBLICAN last week. Will somebody please explain?

Just one more suggeseion. I believe a movement similar to the one several years ago, should be started, in which contributions were published in the newspapers. Whether prizes are give is immaterial.

Let the President see to this.

Yours for success,
A MEMBER.

Struck Dy Lightning.

The summer residence at Deer Park of G. W. Haulenbeek, of the Baltimore and Ohio law department, was struck by lightning during a terrific thunderstorm on Sunday afternoon. This disproves the theory that lightning never strikes the same object a second time, for the same dwelling was badley shattered by lightning six years ago.

The lighting on Sunday tore the shingles from the roof of the main building, descended to the cellar and set fire to the burlaps used as a wrapping to the water pipes. This was discovered to be smoldering some time after the damage to the roof. Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Haulenbeek and Mrs. G. W. Haulenbeek were the only ones in the house at the time, the others having gone on a drive to Eagle Rock, on the top of Backbone Mountain.

CHARGES WERE NOT SUSTAINED BY STATE

Garrett County's Main Industries Attacked Under the Pollution Law.

A GREAT TEMPEST IN A TEAPOT

Kendall Lumber Company and the Tioga Tanning Company's Representatives Arrested Charged With Polluting Streams.

A week or two ago a sensational article appeared in one of our local contemporaries calling attention to the alleged fact that the Youghiogheny River and its tributary stream, Snowy Creek, were running full of a black liquid thrown into it from the vats of the Tioga Tanning Company at Hutton, which corporation is the successor of Garrett Leather Company, and by intimation at least setting the wheels of justice (?) in motion by telephoning to the State Game Warden, one Charles Janoske, residing just north of the West Virginia line, resulting in the arrest of the representatives of the tanning company and also of the Kendall Lumber Company, charging these corporations with having placed deletrious matters in Snowy Creek and also in the Yough river, contrary to law.

The warrants for the arrest of these gentlemen were sworn out by Janoske before Justice Teats and they were served by Constable Maffett, Janoske appearing at the trial, which was held on Friday afternoon, as the prosecuting witness.

At the trial a bottle filled with a black liquid was exhibited by Janoske who alleged that he had gotten the liquid near tannery, in fact upon the tannery property, and that just below the tannery buildings in Snowy Creek he found two dead fish.

The Kendall interests were charged with polluting the Yough by dumping sawdust and other mill offal into the river.

The trial of the case lasted nearly all of Friday afternoon, witnesses being on the stand who testified that in an analysis of the liquid found in Snowy Creek a trace of sulphur was found but its source was of course only problematical, the mines at Corinth, just above Hutton draining into the Creek, and on further up is located the woollen mills at Terra Alta, over in another State.

The case against the Kendall company was based on the fact that the wrecking of the conveyor which carried the offal from the mill across the river where it was burned, the saw dust and slabs naturally were thrown into the water.

Justice Teats held the decisions in the cases sub curia until Saturday when he returned a verdict of not guilty in both cases, which meets with the approbation of every well thin ing and liberial minded resident in the county.

Mr. Thomas J. Peddicord appeared for the Tanning Company and Mr. G. S. Hamill represented the Kendall Company. The State was represented in the trial by Mr. J. C. Renninger.

BITTINGER.

There seems to be a news famine this week. Even the ever ready petty politician has lost his energy and always says Bryan with a yawn as though oppressed with that "tired feeling."

A representative of the Accident base ball team was in this village last Monday trying to arrange a match game with the Bittinger boys.

While driving near here on Tuesday evening of last week Rev. Yugel and his friend, Rev. Baren, of Cumberland, were thrown from their buggy and were considerably injured.

While on his way home from work on last Saturday evening, Samuel J. Brennemen fell and sustained injuries which have prevented him from going about his work.

Rev. Baren, of Cumberland, spent part of last week here as the guest of Rev. Yugel.

Jonas Bittinger and wife spent last Sunday with their daughter at Accident.

The heavy rains last week did some damage to partly cured hay in the fields.

All who enjoy a real old picnic will have but one opportunity of attending one at Bittinger this year and that will be on Saturday, August 8th.

Picnic at Bittinger.

The Lutheran people of this village will hold their annual picnic in Elliothorp's grove on Saturday, August 8th, It is the purpose of those in charge to make a full day of innocent and delightful enjoyment for old and young. The program will be pleasing and will begin at 10 o'clock a. m., and will consist of vocal and instrumental music, recitations and appropriate addresses by Rev. Manges of Oakland, and Rev. Wagoner of Frostburg. There will also be amusements, races and contests for prizes. Dinner and all kinds of refreshments, will be for sale on the ground. The proceeds of the day will be for the benefit of the church. All are cordially invited to attend and are assured of a hearty welcome.

NEXT DOOR TO THE POSTOFFICE OAKLAND, MD

Her First Trophy.

By J. LUDLUM LEE.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

Harriet Lake was indolent by nature. She knew it and admitted it. On warm mornings she preferred a rocking chair on the piazza to any outdoor sport. But Harriet at twenty-four was taking on flesh, and the specialist whom she consulted said, "Play golf, take long walks and eat no rich food." So Harriet went in for golf.

She had just driven her ball from the second tee, a very short and crooked drive, when a cry from the bushes reached her ears. She glanced at her caddie, and, as if having received a silent command, he started in the direction of the ball. Harriet's face wore a somewhat bored expression. Waits between drives were so long. The caddie returned breathless.

"You certainly did swat that gentleman one, Miss Lake," he announced. "Your ball hit him right on the back of the hand as he was pulling some bushes aside looking for his own ball."

"Lucky fellow!" replied Harriet. "I wish something would hit me on the back of the hand so I wouldn't have to trail around this green every day in the week!"

They had reached the fourth green when the skies suddenly clouded over. Glad of an excuse to stop, Harriet directed the caddie to take her sticks back to her locker, while she would cut across lots home for luncheon.

She walked slowly through the old orchard that adjoined the links and was startled by the rumbling of thunder. Realizing that there was no protection in sight, she hurried on until she reached a broad lane that must lead to a house.

Large drops of rain had begun to descend. Another clap of terrific thunder, and Harriet began to run. When the lightning flashed her ambition and energy seemed blighted by it. At the end of the lane stood an old barn. With renewed efforts she started for its sheltering roof and, breathless, reached the door and dashed in.

Her hat had blown off. Her black hair was falling in tiny ringlets about her forehead. Her petticoats were held at ankle length to lend fleetness to her strides. She certainly made a stunning picture as she stood in the barn door.

"MAYBE YOU CAN SAY 'YES.'"

What was that queer noise? It might be a horrid rat. But before she had time to decide she was confronted by a tall chap clad in white flannels.

"H'm—I beg pardon," he began. "Perhaps we are poaching?"

"We?" repeated Harriet. "Are there two of you?"

"Well, almost," said her companion. "That is, I am here intact, but my friend over there is a bit damaged by a blow he got on the links. Otherwise he's a very decent sort of chap. We ran in out of the rain, you know," he added.

Harriet glanced guiltily in the direction of the "friend," who seemed busy opening a basket.

"I ran in out of the wet, too," she announced finally. "You don't mind if I stay until the lightning stops, do you?"

"Mind? Well, I guess not!" assured the man, promptly turning host. "Come over and meet my friend, Mr. Burch, won't you? Billy, here's a lady come to our feast."

Billy rose and beamed on the unexpected guest. He was taking a most delicious looking lunch from a large automobile hamper.

"I wish I could shake hands with you, Miss—Miss"— he stammered.

"My name is Lake," supplied Harriet.

"Considering the day," said the chap in white flannels, "it's very appropriate."

"Shut up, Arthur, will you, and let me finish my speech?" Billy interposed. "What I was saying when my married friend, Mr. Ralston, interrupted"—considerable emphasis on the word married—"was that I cannot shake you by the hand owing to the fact that some clumsy gawk selected me as a target this morning. Really there should be a law preventing such persons running at large."

Harriet was getting up courage to confess when Ralston came to her rescue.

"Why talk about personalities, Billy?" he began. "Suppose you ask Miss Lake to share our repast?"

The three of them sat down, tailor fashion, on the floor of the old barn and made inroads on the luncheon. Nothing was wanting. Cold drink in patent bottles, sandwiches, salads, strawberries and a jar of cream. Such a feast! And when they had finished they were old friends.

"I say, Billy, Violet certainly does put up a fine luncheon," said Ralston.

"She's the greatest girl a man ever found," agreed Billy.

Violet! Who was she? Harriet could not explain why she felt a touch of disappointment on finding that Billy, too, was a married man.

"I guess I'll be running along," said she, after thanking the men for their hospitality. "Oh, no; you need not drive me over in the machine. The fact is I just live in that big shingled house beyond this fence." With a wave of her hand she was gone, and the men watched her slip under the fence and disappear behind the tall hedge on the other side.

The storm did not clear away entirely, and Harriet realized that the lawn dance which the Williamses were holding in honor of their first anniversary must be given indoors instead of on the lawn, so she donned her prettiest frock. Harriet was never on time for anything, and when she arrived the dance was in full swing. Mrs. Williams greeted her at the door.

"You do look peachy, Harriet," said her hostess. "What have you been doing to yourself? You are more lovely than ever. Oh, the poor, poor men!" added Mrs. Williams mockingly.

They stood together for a moment, and the beaming face of Billy Burch confronted them.

"Mr. Burch, this is Miss Lake," said Mrs. Williams. "I know you two will get along immensely. Poor Billy was hit in the hand today by some straggling lunatic who thinks she can play golf. But, barring his injured right hand, he's the dearest man in the world—except one."

At supper time Billy discovered a cozy corner in the conservatory, where they could "eat in peace without being interrupted by that married man, Ralston," as he expressed it. Harriet was eating salad and studying Billy with her big, dreamy black eyes.

"I wish Violet was here," Billy exclaimed as he tasted the salad.

"Really, Mr. Burch, I am sorry that I am not sufficient company."

Billy actually snickered, but Harriet was plainly in earnest, so Billy explained:

"You see, Violet is my colored cook that I brought up with me from the south, and if she were here she could taste this salad and then go home and make a better one. See?"

"But, Mr. Burch, I, too, have a confession to make."

"Spare me!" cried Billy. "I will run for Arthur if you wish a father confessor. He's listened to my sins for years and really borne with them very leniently."

But Harriet insisted.

"I want you to know that I am the 'clumsy gawk,' the 'straggling lunatic' who hit your hand today."

Billy beamed.

"That's not the only place you hit," he said. "That'll get well. But you gave my old heart such a blow that it is completely broken in two, Miss Harriet, and only you can mend it."

"But, Mr. Burch"— began Harriet.

"Oh, I know what you're going to say," interrupted Billy, "but don't say it yet. I'm in love, and I know it, though I don't expect you to fall in love with a cripple on sight; but some day, Harriet," he continued in softer and more earnest tones, "maybe you can say 'Yes.'"

Harriet looked once more into his clear, honest eyes. She, too, was in love, and she knew it. He had none the best of her there.

"I haven't said 'No,' have I?" she asked. And Billy felt that in time his heart would be mended.

A Cure For Despondency.

A large, fleshy man with whiskers told me of a sovereign cure for despondency the other day. He had a number of girls in his employ, among them one that he knew was in struggling circumstances and supporting a sick mother on a none too healthy salary. She had come into the store and laid her purse and somber widow hat on the counter while she did something about the place. The large fleshy man got between her and the purse, and when she was not looking he slipped a five dollar bill into it and moved unconsciously about his business. In the afternoon he noticed that she had a red spot in each cheek, and she was heard asking other girls if they believed in fairies. She never solved the mystery—it was two years ago—and never will unless she reads this. But the five dollar bill was very useful in its little way, and the large despondent man felt so good for two whole days that he hip-hopped on the sidewalk on his way home.—Minneapolis Journal.

Living on Next to Nothing.

Most people do not need the evidence of recently published statistics to prove to them that it costs more to live in London than it once did. But it is doubtful if any Londoner now living was ever able to do it on £30 a year, as Boswell's poor Irish painter did. "He allowed £10 for clothes and linen. He said a man might live in a garret at 18 pence a week. Few people would inquire where he lived, and if they did it was easy to say, 'Sir, I am to be found at such a place.' By spending threepence at a coffee house he might be for some hours a day in very good company. He might dine for sixpence, breakfast on bread and milk for a penny and do without supper." Of course expenses can always be reduced to a minimum by doing without things. The question is, Which of our various expenses is unessential? Boswell's Irishman hinted at one. "On clean shirt days he went abroad and paid visits," says his ingenious chronicler.—London Chronicle.

What a Good President Must Be and Do

By WILLIAM HOWARD TAFT, Republican Candidate For the Presidency, in Collier's.

IN the four years that I have been a member of the cabinet I have become familiar enough with the responsibilities and burdens of the presidency to know that no man can afford unduly to seek that great office. IF HE IS ATTRACTED BY HONOR AND POWER ALONE, WITHOUT THE HOPE OF BEING USEFUL, HE IS UNWORTHY OF THE HONOR and unfit for the use of power. He must prefer for the sake of his own peace of mind never to be president to being a poor president. Confident that the platform on which he stands is for the best interests of the nation, HE IS UNTRUE TO HIMSELF AND HIS SUPPORTERS IF HE DOES NOT FIGHT VALIANTLY FOR ELECTION AFTER HE ACCEPTS THE LEADERSHIP; but, of course, he must draw the line at any compact which will not leave him free of promises and of the control of any faction.

The president's duties, clearly outlined by the constitution, have grown broader in their interpretation with the growth of the country. HE SHOULD BE IN THE PRIME OF YEARS, HEALTH AND VIGOR. The capacity for hard work is a better equipment than genius in mastering the essentials of all the departments of the government and undergoing the strain of countless interviews.

HE SHOULD LOOK NOT ONLY TO THOSE IN OFFICE, BUT TO THOSE OUT OF OFFICE IN ALL BRANCHES OF PRIVATE ACTIVITY, FOR INFORMATION AND OPINION IN ORDER THAT HE MAY ARRIVE AT THE TRUTH WHEN HE IS SURROUNDED BY THE CONFLICT OF INTERESTS WHICH COME TO HIM WITH THE FAIR WORDS OF THE SPECIAL PLEADER.

In many senses, though the most sought after, HE IS THE LONELIEST MAN IN THE UNITED STATES. Elected directly by the people their representative head, from them, in the sober thought of the majority, he will get his best counsel.

ONCE CONVINCED THAT HE HAS DIVINED AND IS CARRYING OUT THEIR REAL WISH, NEITHER ELATED BY ANY EPHEMERAL OUTBURST OF APPLAUSE NOR DIVERTED BY ANY OUTBURST OF CENSURE, HE MUST PROCEED UNWAVERINGLY, ALWAYS BY LAWFUL METHODS, TO THE ACCOMPLISHMENT OF THE POPULAR WILL.

Are the Wealthy Idle and Vicious?

By WALTON T. BEVERLY of Boston.

THE most abused class of people anywhere are those who either through hard application to business or the chance of birth are the possessors of great fortunes. Whenever any orator takes occasion in public to vent his spleen on any one set of his fellow men he always chooses them as the brunt of his attack and is merciless in his denunciations.

Wealth is unquestionably productive of idleness and idleness of vice. The man or woman of wealth who, therefore, has nothing to occupy his or her time other than the frivolities of life is confronted with many pitfalls. But THE MAJORITY OF WEALTHY PERSONS ARE NOT IDLE. If they are not engaged in some business or profession they usually have other things to occupy their minds in the proper way. The majority of society women, for example, are interested in philanthropic or club work, and their devotion to the labor which it entails is genuine and faithful.

Comparatively speaking, it is safe to say that there is TEN TIMES THE AMOUNT OF VICE AMONG THE RANK AND FILE that there is among persons of great wealth. Money places restrictions on its owners which it is not necessary for others to observe, and the moral tone is accordingly just as high and generally higher.

War No Longer a Disciplinary Agent.

By CHARLES E. HUGHES, Governor of New York.

WE can no longer look to war for the development of either national or individual character. The heroics of war have been replaced by mathematical calculations. If it was ever anything else it is now UNMITIGATED HORROR EXHIBITING CHIEFLY FIENDISH ASPECTS of ingenuity and scientific skill in destruction.

Under our modern conditions of civilization the supposed beneficent results of war in the development of courage and stamina must in any conceivable extent be shared by so few of our teeming populations that even the most sanguinary must realize that the time has gone by when, by any stretch of imagination, it can be regarded as a general disciplinary agent.

In Defense of the Supreme Court

By ANDREW D. WHITE, Diplomat and Publicist.

MY feeling is that any weakening of the power of our great court is a strengthening of anarchy, and therefore of THE WORST OF ALL TYRANNIES POSSIBLE.

The history of mankind is before us to show how republics have perished, and no cause of such catastrophes recurs more frequently than the interference with the steady, strong rule of law during GUSTS OF PUBLIC OPINION originated by irresponsible masses of people.

I speak reverently when I say that the supreme court of the United States was designed and created by the founders of our republic IN A MOMENT OF DIVINE INSPIRATION, that it is the great original fundamental and central feature of the constitution and that WE INTERFERE WITH IT AT OUR PERIL.

HOMEMADE ROAD MACHINE.

The Department of Agriculture is Booming the Split-Log Drag.

The Public Roads Bureau of the Department of Agriculture, having figured out that there are 2,000,000 miles of earth roads in the United States, has hit upon an inexpensive way for their improvement. The split-log drag is its solution of the problem, and the bureau has set to work to tell the farmers how to make it.

The main thing needed is a dry red cedar log, although red elm and walnut are good, while box elder, soft maple or even willow may be used. Oak, hickory and ash are not recommended.

The log, 7 to 10 feet long and 10 to 12 inches in diameter at the butt, is split as near the center as possible, the larger place being used as the front of the drag, and sometimes being shod with iron along the lower or cutting edge.

The two slabs on edge and 30 inches apart are fastened together by stakes in such a way that when the drag is used on one side of the road the end of the back slab is about 16 inches nearer the center of the driveway than the end of the front slab. This gives what is called the setback. Between the heavy slabs and resting on the connecting stakes is a board on which the driver stands.

A team of horses is hitched to this completed drag in such a way that the drag unloaded will follow at an angle of about 45 degrees. The team should be driven with one horse on either side of the right hand wheel track or rut the full length of the part to be dragged, and made to return in the same manner over the other half of the roadway. Such treatment will move the earth toward the center of the roadway and raise it gradually above the surrounding level.

The department recommends the use of the split-log drag after heavy rains, when the road should be gone over once each way, but much depends on the quality of the soil, some roads requiring frequent treatment.

How economical the method is, is shown by figures of actual tests submitted to the bureau. In six counties in Kansas in 1906 the cost of maintaining ordinary earth roads without the aid of the split-log drag averaged $42.50 a mile. These figures were furnished by Prof. W. C. Hood of the University of Kansas, who secured them from official records of the counties.

Other figures are credited to F. P. Sanborn, and R. H. Aishton, general manager of the Chicago and Northwestern. Mr. Sanborn said, "the least expense per mile per annum for split-log dragging was $1.50, the greatest a little over $6, and the average expense per mile for five and a half miles a little over $3. I have lived along this road all my life and never in forty years have I seen it freer from dust and mud, despite the fact that during the season we have experienced the extremes of weather condition."

The testimony of Mr. Aishton is equally strong. Learning that a township in Iowa had been making an investigation of the split-log drag and had been experimenting with it for a year or two on twenty-eight miles of highway, he sent an agent to secure information. It was reported that, although the Town Board had paid the costs of making the drags and of hiring men to operate them, the total expense for one year averaged but $2 a mile, and the roads were reported to have been "like a race track" the greater portion of the year.

MISSION OF A TINY FISH.

To Destroy Mosquito Eggs and Save Inhabitants of Malarial Regions.

C. Kendrick Gibbons has discovered that all the pools and swamps in Barbados are stocked with swarms of millions of tiny fish, which gets its name from its vast numbers and which feeds on the larvae of the mosquito.

Some specimens have been taken to England successfully, flourishing there in the insect house at the Zoological Gardens. Mr. Gibbons has proposed that the millions be imported into malarial districts, and his suggestien has been acted upon, with happy results. The Health Board of Antigua, another island, being convinced of the useful part played by these fish in consuming mosquito larvae, has arranged for their systematic distribution throughout the ponds and streams of the island.

Like tidings come from Jamaica, says the Chicago Tribune whither a consignment of the fish was sent not long ago. The secretary of the Agricultural Society there writes that the tanks at a certain hotel are full of them and that he has been informed that here has been a marked dimunition of fever round about, the millions evidently accounting for the mosquito larvae. They have been sent to Colon and British Guiana. It is suggested that these useful fish get a trial in the malarial regions of Africa, if, like the malarial mosquity, the insects which carry the terrible diseases which are epidemic there pass the larvae stage of their existence in water.

The Swedish consul at Frankfort has discovered another small fish named the blue-eyed, which feeds on mosquito larvae. At the request of the Italian Government, some are to be sent to the Campagna, where so much has been done in recent years to diminish malaria.

Wounds on Trees.

The following mixture is recommended for wounds of any kind trees: Melt rosin and warm little crude petroleum in separate vessels, pouring into a third vessel three parts of rosin to one of petroleum. This seals the wound very effectively until grown over. It is said to not run in warm weather nor crack in cold, and cuts covered with it will not fail to heal.

Picture Postcard Romance.

By Frank H. Williams.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

I know it was wrong for me to read her postcards, but I sort of got in the habit of doing it when I was walking past those vacant lots to her home, so before I knew it I was right up to the hilt in a romance.

You see, it was this way. I caught on to the facts from what she told me occasionally. Oscar Reidel, her sweetheart, who was a civil engineer, got a job quite a distance away from her during the summer. Before he left Oscar and Alice—her full name was Alice G. Minor—had a quarrel. It wasn't a very bad quarrel, I guess, but anyhow she told him he mustn't write a word to her during the time he was away. Well, that made him rather spunky, and he said he'd do just as she said, but that he could send her picture postcards without writing a word to her, and he would send those.

Oscar was surely a "sender." At first the postcards came in fast and thick from him, and I used to wonder why it was he sent so many of them and no letters. That was before I knew about their quarrel and what she had said. The girl was as happy as a lark while she was getting so many of them, because she knew the man still cared for her. I could see easily enough that she liked him all right.

SHE HELD OUT THE POSTCARD WHERE I COULD SEE.

Then one day she handed me a postcard and sort of winked at me.

"I guess he'll sit up when he gets that," she said.

I looked at it when I got out of sight of the house. It was addressed to Oscar all right, and on the back was one of those printed postcard telegrams. The printing said:

"Am very busy. There's a new man in town!"

I tell you what—I hated to take that card to the office! I knew how badly it would make that young fellow feel away off in the wilds where he was. But I had to take it just the same.

You know you get sort of interested in people when you call on them the way I do every day, and I was anxious to see how Oscar would take the card. His postcards kept coming to her all right—they were views of the place where he was working and that sort of souvenir cards—and then they stopped all of a sudden. I reasoned that he'd quit sending them the day he got her card.

The girl was waiting for me, her face all shining with smiles, the morning that none of the cards showed up in the mail for her.

"No cards for you today, Miss Alice," I said as she met me at the door.

The smiles all left her face at once, and she looked at me as though she couldn't believe it.

"No postcards at all?" she cried.

"Not one," I said. "Maybe the party that's been sending them to you is hurt."

At that she cried.

"Hurt! No; he can't be hurt!"

"I don't necessarily mean physically hurt," I replied. "There's other ways of being hurt than physically."

She looked at me rather strangely at this, then tossed her head, marched into the house and slammed the door after her.

There were no cards for her the next day, but I think she half expected there would be, for I caught a glimpse of her watching me behind the curtains in the parlor as I walked past. The second day there were no cards, and again I saw her at the window. From the little glimpse I caught I thought she had been crying. The third day there was a single card, and before I thought I turned it over and looked at it. Then I wished I hadn't. The card was a photograph of Oscar looking lovingly at some pretty girl who in turn was looking lovingly at him. The girl, I surmised, belonged in the city where he was working, so I was mistaken in thinking it was such a wild place.

In the first place, I had no business to look at another person's mail. In the second place, it got me all tangled up worse than ever in the affairs of that couple. After seeing the card I had the hardest kind of a time bracing myself up to deliver it to the girl.

When I rang the Minor doorbell the girl fairly pulled it off the hinges, she was so eager to get it open.

"Oh," she cried, "you've got some postcards for me!"

"I've got one, miss," I said hesitatingly.

"Let me have it!" she cried and grabbed it from my hand.

She looked at it, and then I saw her white figure quiver. Then she straightened up, and without a word she went into the house and closed the door behind her.

I tell you I felt pretty bad about it. Not being married myself, I had got into feeling a sort of sense of ownership in that girl, and when she took it so to heart I felt that I ought to do something about it. I had no doubt that Oscar still cared for Miss Alice and had only hooked up with the other girl because he was mad at her postcard and thought that Miss Alice had given him the mitten. I was dead certain that Miss Alice still cared for him. I knew, though, that she was too proud now to do anything to settle up the quarrel. Consequently I saw it was up to me.

Finally I stepped into a drug store handy and bought a postcard telegram card myself. On the back of the card was printed:

"There's only one person in the world for me, and that's—you!"

I addressed this to Oscar in a handwriting that I know was almost identically the same as Miss Alice's. Then I mailed it.

The next few days passed mighty slow, I can tell you. I didn't know whether I had made matters better or worse, and I was mighty anxious about it. Poor Miss Alice seemed worn out each day when I passed her house. I kept hoping that I had made things all right with my card, and yet I was afraid.

And then one day in my route's mail I ran across a postcard for Miss Alice addressed in Oscar's hand and postmarked from the place where he was. That card would tell the tale!

My, how I wanted to look at that card! I don't believe I ever wanted to do anything so much as just to turn over that card and see what was on the back. Was it all right, or was it all wrong? In a moment I could see if I looked at her mail. But I reasoned it out that I had done enough wrong in doing it before. So I put the card in my bag without looking at the back of it and started out on my route.

I thought I never would get to the Minor house. My route never seemed so long before or since. Finally, however, I was on the block where the house was located. Slowly I worked my way up the street, and finally I rang the Minor doorbell.

"I have a postcard for you," I said.

A swift motion, half fear, half hope, dashed into her face.

"Oh, let me have it!" she cried.

I handed it to her. She turned her back to me as she looked at it so I couldn't tell from the way she looked whether it was good or bad news.

"He did as I told him," she said in a muffled voice, "to the very last. Even now he isn't writing a word."

I began to get nervous. She started to move inside the hall, and it looked as if I wasn't going to find out that day what the message was after all.

"I—I hope it isn't bad news, miss," I managed to stammer.

"Bad news!" she cried, wheeling around like a whirlwind. "Bad news! No, I should say not! The best of news—the very best of news! See here, you dear old postman!"

She held out the postcard where I could see. It was another postcard telegram. This was the message printed on it: "Expect me soon. Love you in the same old way!"

Four Courtship Sundays.

The four Sundays of November are observed as fete days in Holland. They are known by the curious names Review, Decision, Purchase and Possession, and all refer to matrimonial affairs, November in Holland being the month par excellence devoted to courtship and marriage, probably because the agricultural occupations of the year are over and possibly because the lords of creation from quite remote antiquity have recognized the pleasantness of having wives to cook and cater for them during the long winter.

On Review Sunday everybody goes to church, and after service there is a church parade in every village, when the youths and maidens gaze upon each other, but forbear to speak.

On Decision Sunday each bachelor who is seeking a wife approaches the maiden of his choice with a ceremonious bow and from her manner of responding judges whether his advances are acceptable. Purchase Sunday the consent of the parents is sought if the suit has prospered during the week. Not until Possession Sunday, however, do the twain appear before the world as actual or prospective brides and grooms.

Having Money and Not Having It.

"Well," said the old philosopher, "I don't see much difference in havin' money an' in not havin' it. When people know you've got it they're red hot to git it from you, an' when they know you hain't got it they're red hot to fetch in all the bills they've got ag'in you an' try to git it anyhow. So, you see, it's a mortal worry a-comin' an' a-gwine. Havin' it or not havin' it, you're 'twixt the devil an' the deep sea six days out the week an' no rest on a Sunday. It ain't nuthin' but printed paper an' yaller an' white metal, an' yit the worl' almost stops turnin' round to look at it. It says it'll be a friend to you and then don't stay with you long enough to git acquainted good. It's as deceivin' as Satan hisse'f, though I must say that jest about this time I'd like to see the deception of it come my way. Sich is human natur', for which we ain't responsible."—Atlanta Constitution.

American Flag Dishonored by Graft and Civic Indifference.

By Rev. Dr. CHARLES F. AKED In His Closing Sermon of the Summer at the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church, New York.

THE FLAG IS DISHONORED MORE BY THE CORRUPT POLITICIAN of the city or nation who debauches our institutions for graft and plunder THAN IT WOULD BE IF A FOREIGN FOE TRAMPLED IT BENEATH HIS FEET.

When you prefer your own selfish ease and comfort to discharging your political duties YOU CONFESS YOURSELF A CREATURE OF AN INFERIOR CIVILIZATION and unworthy of the blood from which you sprang.

THE MEN BEST EQUIPPED TO DO GREAT WORK IN THE WORLD TODAY ARE NOT DOING IT.

Is there to be a breakdown of democracy? While one of our most prominent men is writing about "triumphant democracy" others equally prominent are writing about the shame of the city. While the star spangled banner continues to wave a common incident of our daily life is the knowledge that our cities are run by thieves. WHAT IS IT TO BE, "TRIUMPHANT DEMOCRACY" OR "THE SHAME OF THE CITY," "THE LAND OF THE FREE AND THE HOME OF THE BRAVE" OR PLUNDER?

Ours is a democracy such as has never been seen under the sun before, and there is a tremendous meaning in it. What force is to inspire the incoming millions from lands that are neither free nor brave, from lands of darkness and oppression? It will not be sufficient to say that we can rely on education.

WHAT FORCES ARE AT WORK FOR RESTRAINT ON ONE HAND AND INSPIRATION ON THE OTHER? THE CHURCH OF THE LIVING GOD, OF GOD INCARNATE, SPEAKING TO THE PEOPLE OF THE EVERLASTING LAWS OF RIGHTEOUSNESS. THE CHURCH MUST SEE TO IT THAT WARD POLITICS ARE RESCUED FROM THE DEGRADATION INTO WHICH THEY HAVE FALLEN AND MUST LIFT POLITICAL AMBITIONS OUT OF THE OOZE AND SLIME AND PETTY CHICANERY AND MAKE OF POLITICAL EFFORT SOMETHING MORE THAN WIRE PULLING, LOG ROLLING AND GRAFT.

American Business Manners Are Capable of Improvement.

By WILLIAM ARCHER, London Critic.

I AM constrained to own that, on the whole, I find the American young man whom one meets in the way of business painfully lacking in the ordinary amenities of human intercourse. He is apt to be curt, careless, supercilious, determined not to move a hair's breadth out of his allotted track in order to be serviceable to you. The hotel clerk is perhaps the type of this class of young man, but there are in his case extenuating circumstances. He is doubtless apt to be very much worried and pestered, so that the only way to keep his nerves from becoming uncontrollably jumpy is TO GET INTO A MECHANICAL ROUTINE AND ACT AS THOUGH HYPNOTIZED.

So, too, with the ticket clerks and shopmen and shopgirls at the smaller stores. For the large department stores I cannot answer.

One of the MOST ELEMENTARY AND MOST OBVIOUS PRINCIPLES OF MANNERS, I take it, is that when you have to refuse a request you should SOFTEN THE REFUSAL as much as possible BY A DECENT SHOW OF REGRETFULNESS at your inability to comply. Twice recently it has happened to me to present a check at an American bank and to be refused payment. It appears that the rules here are very strict in demanding personal identification, and I dare say the refusal was in each case strictly justified.

But nothing could justify the manner of the two officials—in cities, I may mention, a thousand miles apart. If I had been begging for charity instead of approaching them on the ordinary business footing their refusal could not have been more curt and repellent.

Navies as Supporters Of Law and Order.

By Rear Admiral F. E. CHADWICK, U. S. N., Retired.

THE navy has no apologies to make to a certain class of minds either for its existence or its duties. The GREATEST SINGLE FORCE IN THE SUPPORT OF LAW AND ORDER today in the world is the navy. In speaking thus I include other navies as well as our own.

There is no use crying "Peace!" where there is no peace. The world moves from plane to plane chiefly by convulsions. We are NOW RAPIDLY APPROACHING ANOTHER CONVULSIVE PERIOD. There is certain before long to be a new readjustment. Shall this be bloody or peaceful? The army and navy are the great arms of conservatism. When you can arrange revolutions by academic discussion you may perhaps do without them, but as yet I see no signs of such an outcome.

Why, Oh, Why Can't We Have Good Coffee and Better Bread?

By President WOODFORD of the Carnegie Institution at Washington.

THE person who invents good coffee can make his or her fortune. WHY CAN'T WE HAVE GOOD COFFEE? There has been a great advance in every field of scientific research and intellectual study in the last ten or twenty years save in coffee making. Recently I rode from Washington to Pittsburg and was served in the buffet car with the same brand of coffee I got thirty years ago at Fort Worth, Tex. Why, oh, why can't we have better coffee?

There is also a fortune for each of you young men who can introduce BREAD to the common people THAT TASTES LESS LIKE COTTON BATTING than does the stuff now being sold for bread.

BOWSER STAYS HOME

Dons His Old Suit and Helps at Housecleaning.

IS ANNOYED BY CALLERS.

But the Old Philosopher Attends Strictly to Business and Stands Pat. Mrs. B. Breaks Down and Weeps With Gratitude and Anxiety.

[Copyright, 1908, by T. C. McClure.]

Mrs. Bowser wanted the bathtub enameled, some oilcloth replaced and three or four other things done, and when she had spoken of it Mr. Bowser replied:

"Business at the office is slack just now, and I will stay home tomorrow and fix things up."

She had not protested, but she wished she hadn't spoken. She also wanted bedsteads changed and bureaus moved, and she had been through many experiences with Mr. Bowser. He would go at it slambang and try to do a day's work in an hour, and if he twisted a bedstead out of shape or broke all the legs off a bureau he would try to hold her to blame. That night she dreamed of household destruction wholesale. She thought the gas meter blew up, the water pipes burst and that Mr. Bowser smashed all the furniture and made a bonfire in the back yard. Next morning she threw out hints that the enameling and other things could wait until spring, but he didn't take them. He donned his old suit and went to work so quietly and carefully that she was surprised.

At 9 o'clock a man called and wanted to know where Mr. Bowser's office was, so that he could go over and see him. Mr. Bowser cleaned the bathtub enamel off his fingers and went downstairs. It was a man that wanted to sell him a new milk cow. He was going on to state that it was a cow with four legs, two horns, a tail, and would give twelve quarts of milk a day, and Mrs. Bowser was trembling in her shoes when the reply came:

"You are in the wrong house. We do not buy either new milk cows or old milk cows here."

"But you are Mr. Bowser?"

"I am."

"And you—you are always buying new milk cows or something?"

"Nothing doing, sir. This is my busy day."

Just half an hour later and just when Mrs. Bowser was expecting that Mr Bowser would get mad at the bathtub and tear it out by the roots a second man called. His business was very important and couldn't wait. Mr. Bowser descended to find a man that wanted to sell him a half interest in a balloon. He had got as far as to say that it was a balloon built on the lines of a crow and must prove a great success when he was halted with:

"Excuse me, sir, but I take no interest whatever in balloons. Perhaps the butcher on the corner might invest."

"But there's $1,000,000 in this thing for you," replied the man.

"Yes, I know, but I don't care for it. Sorry that you went to the trouble of calling. Good day."

When the balloon man reached the gate he turned around and took a good look at the house, and then he asked a boy if Mr. Bowser really lived there. Mrs. Bowser was tickled and yet anxious. She started to compliment Mr. Bowser, but finally concluded not to. The enameling of the tub had just been completed when the third caller showed up. He had just invented and applied for a patent on a volcano extinguisher. It was a simple but effectual thing, consisting of an immense cast iron cover. When a volcano burst forth, 300 men were to get a grip on the cover and place it over the crater and smother the flames. The inventor had already corresponded with several governments and found that Italy alone would pay $1,000,000 a year for the use of his device. He stood ready to guarantee that he could choke old Vesuvius to death in thirty minutes, and then what heat was left in her could be run down into Naples in pipes and supply the houses. He talked for six minutes without a break, and then as he paused to rest his Adam's apple Mr. Bowser quietly replied:

"Too bad you called. I have just gone out of the volcano business. See the plumber up the street."

"But, my dear sir, I had you in mind when I invented this extinguisher."

"Yes, but there's nothing doing."

"I was sure you would take a half interest."

"I am very busy today—very busy. The plumber is no doubt the man you want to see."

When the man got out he had a scared and perturbed look, and as soon as he reached the corner he entered a saloon and tossed off a glass of beer and said to the bartender:

"I don't know whether you have got on to it or not, but I can tell you that old Bowser down the street is off his base and will be in a lunatic asylum in less than a month."

Mr. Bowser moved a bureau. Mrs. Bowser expected him to jump at it and jam and ram and push and batter and have it on its back within a minute, but he guided it along as tenderly as if it had been a walking baby. Tears of gratitude were about to spring to her eyes when there was another caller. He had invented an air compressor that must revolutionize the mechanics of the world. It was just the size of a pound box of peanut brittle, and yet it would propel an ocean steamship at the rate of thirty miles an hour. No more coal; no more engineers and firemen and stokers. Set the compressor going on leaving New York and stop it at Liverpool or London. Required no more attention than an old maid. Couldn't possibly get out of order and could be made for $7 apiece and sell for $100,000.

"Sorry—very sorry," replied Mr. Bowser as soon as he could cut in. "I believe the druggist on the corner is interested in such things, but I am not."

"What! You don't want to make tens of millions of dollars?"

"Not today, thankee."

"But I haven't got into the wrong house?"

"Oh, no! I am Mr. Bowser."

"And you buy Leghorn chickens, Devonshire pigs and all sorts of fire escapes and patent snow removers, and yet you won't go into this?"

"Please shut the gate as you go out."

The man pleased. He shut the gate with a bang, and halfway to the corner he stopped a pedestrian to say:

"I shouldn't care to come along here in the night. I'll bet that half the holdups around here are the work of that old Bowser."

Mrs. Bowser wanted to say something. She wanted to cry. She wanted to put her arms around Mr. Bowser's neck and tell him what a good man he was, but he was moving the bedstead, and she had to put it off. He didn't walk up to those bedsteads and yank the mattresses off and give the springs a fling. He denuded and disrobed them with gentleness. He didn't seize a bedstead by one post and yank and heave and pull and lay the whole thing flat on the floor in a brass and iron ruin.

He Was So Gentle!

Gently, tenderly, quietly, he took out the side pieces in the regular way and carried the head and foot pieces to the new spot and set them up again—not a mar nor a scratch, not a whoop nor a cuss word. As the show bills have it, there was nothing throughout the whole performance to offend the most fastidious. He had just finished when another caller arrived, and he had to go downstairs. It was a man with a patent device to prevent railroad accidents—that is, it was destined to prevent conductors and engineers from overrunning their time and bringing about head and rear end collisions. It was a No. 12 cowhide boot fastened on to a lever to be worked by steam from the engine. Every two minutes it gave conductor and engineer a kick and called their direct attention to a card on which was inscribed, "Look Out For the Dog!"

The "railroad kicker," as the inventor had named it, was the greatest thing ever invented. Railroads all over the country were crying for it. The public were demanding its use. It could save 10,000 human lives and $50,000,000 worth of property a year. It would render travel on the railroads as safe as on the sidewalks. It would—

But Mr. Bowser stopped him there by saying that he wasn't investing and by advising him to go to the coal man down the street. Five more men called during the day and seven during the evening. The last to call was a ward heeler, and he tendered Mr. Bowser the nomination for the presidency in exchange for a five dollar bill and the appointment of minister to St. James'. He followed the others outdoors and up the street and into the land of blighted hopes, and then Mrs. Bowser broke down and wept in her gratitude and anxiety, and the house was closed for the night. THE TEMPERANCE TIDAL WAVE.

Dr. Samuel J. Barrows, president of the International Prison Commission, has made a careful study of the recent temperance movement, and under the above heading has published in the Outlook a fairly full history of the great tidal wave, and its results up to date. The following is his summing up of the things established by the movement:

"To my mind, some things are well established by a study of the present great movement for the regulation of the liquor traffic:

"1. The sources of the movement are easily discernible. It is not due to local or ephemeral causes; it springs from a public conviction which the United States Supreme Court has well rendered: namely, that 'the public health, the public morals and the public safety are endangered by the general use of intoxicating liquors,' and that 'the idleness, disorder, pauperism and crime existing in this country are largely traceable to this evil.'

"2. A second public conviction is that expressed by the Supreme Court of Kansas, that 'probably no greater source of crime and sorrow has ever existed than social drinking-saloons.' In addition, the saloon has been the polluted sink of gambling, licentiousness and corrupt politics.

"3. Educative forces have been working for the last forty or fifty years. A new generation has grown up, and found that alcoholic drink are not necessary for health or happiness.

"4. In the movement for the regulation of the liquor traffic in the United States the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the Anti-Saloon League, and the federation of Christian churches have been great factors.

"5. Local option has proved to be the most effective legislative or elective measure. State-wide prohibition is a dangerous experiment until the way for it has been paved by local option. Restrictive laws can be enforced only when public sentiment has created them.

"6. When public sentiment demands it, liquor laws can be enforced as well as any other laws.

"7. A reduction in the liquor traffic is promptly followed by a reduction in crime and by greater social order and tranquility.

"8. The economic results are seen in new evidences of personal and civic thrift.

"9. Finally, if I am asked if this movement has come to stay, I may close by quoting the opinion of an interesting observer, a prominent leader of the distillers and brewers of this country, the editor of Bonfort's Wine and Spirit Circular: 'Modern civilization is groping, but it is reaching upward, and it has decreed after a fashion that slums and hopeless poverty and crime due to want and drunkenness shall give way before the doctrine of the brotherhood of man, and that those things and those resorts which degrade must have no place in the civilization towards which the leaders of thought are now aiming.'"

THE BATTLE GROUND.

A New York Sun correspondent has been touring the Middle West since the Chicago convention, writing impressions of political opinions. Subtracting nothing from the perspicacity of other analysts of popular feeling, it is but fair to say that this correspondent gives the impression of understanding most accurately the differences between the Eastern and the Western mind at this time. Primarily, the West and Middle West have grave doubts about the hard times which the cismontane East believes to exist. Prosperity is in full sway out West. They read of bad times East, but doubt; then they recall that the financial flurry of last fall has been called a manufactured panic, and Wall street promptly gets credit for it.

It appears that the West, instead of worrying about current conditions, is concerned about the future. It wants to know whether things are moving in the right direction. It has lost confidence in the Eastern diagnosis of economic and social diseases. It leans to the belief that on the whole a vague something which it aggregates together for conversational purpose as "interests" is getting more than its share of the output of wealth, while something else which it summarizes as "productive energy" is getting less. It is inclined to issue a declaration of independence; to emancipate itself from the intellectual leadership which the East has assumed. In Iowa this attitude of mind is typified in Cummins, in Wisconson in La Follette; but it develops that even in States which do not chance to possess towering personalities of protest the same sentiment prevails. Where they have no local hero to give it his name they call this sentiment of protest Rooseveltism. They are especially incensed because Congress would not enact all the President's policies. They inveigh against James Schoolcraft Sherman because he is esteemed to represent the influence which chiefly opposed enactment of those policies—namely the House organization. They demand to know what concession has been made to the free-thinking West in the Republican program for this year. They insist that the platform and the nominees are both of Eastern derivation, and want specifications as to where the West comes in. Then they point to the West as the originator of wealth and the conservator of prosperity, and inquire why it should be summarily set down as securely for a ticket and platform about which it has doubts.

That this analysis pretty correctly presents the feeling of the trans-Alleghenian country is well known by people whose horizon is not bounded by the sky-scrapers on the next street. It is known by Frank H. Hitchcock, for instance. Mr. Hitchcock found out about it during the time when he was managing a preliminary campaign for Mr. Taft, and it is most fortunate for the Republican party that it will have the full benefit of what Mr. Hitchcock learned during that fight. Mr. Hitchcock has had the chance to survey and define and weigh the elements in this situation. And what did he do?

He recognized the West as the battle-ground, announced that he would personally conduct Western headquarters, and then call a conference of Western political leaders in Colorado. Mr. Hitchcock understands. If the rest of the Republican leaders come to understand soon enough, they will be safe. If the don't, they may learn their error when too late.

HEARST AGAINST BRYAN.

Mr. Wm. Randolph Hearst, the publisher of several daily newspapers and eight years ago the ardent champion of Bryan and the Democratic ticket, is strongly against Bryan this year. Friends of Mr. Bryan made an effort to get him to come out for Bryan this year but he declined saying he had lost confidence in the Democratic party and in Mr. Bryan. He is one of the leaders of a new movement, called the Independence League.

FIRE AT KITZMILLERVILLE

Which Destroyed the Residence of Mr. Herbert L. Price.

The residence of Mr. Herbert L. Price, at Kitzmillerville, was destroyed by fire on Tuesday of this week.

The fire originated in the kitchen of the building when a window curtain was blown against an overheated stove, setting the curtain on fire which in turn communicated the flames to the woodwork.

The entire contents of the house were burned with the exception of three chairs. A considerable amount of money was also in the house, which was also destroyed.

Mr. Price's son, Addison, who was quite ill and confined to his bed, came very near losing his life, being assisted from his room through the smoke by his parents.

Sturgiss is Willing.

Congressman George C. Sturgiss, of Morgantown, has been talked of as a compromise Republican candidate for Governor in West Virginia. The Republican leaders say the state ticket is doomed unless a compromise is effected. It is believed he is willing to give up his seat in Congress should he be called to be the candidate for Governor. He has been renominated for Congress.

Little Wreck on 17-mile Grade.

An eastbound freight train wrecked on the 17-mile grade at Empire station a few miles west of Piedmont Sunday about 1 o'clock. Six freight cars were piled up and both tracks were temporarily blocked. None of the men were hurt. The cause of the wreck could not be ascertained. The wrecking crew was called out from Cumberland and the track was cleared by evening with four hours delay to traffic.

OPENING GUN IN MARYLAND

The Prohibitionists Will Begin Their Campaign at Mt. Lake Park.

The opening gun of the campaign of the Prohibition party in Maryland will be fired at the interstate conference of representatives from Maryland, Virginia, Pennsylvania and Eastern Ohio to be held in Mountain Lake Park from July 30 to August 2, inclusive, when plans and methods for conducting the fight for prohibition will be devised.

Mr. George R. Gorsuch, of Baltimore, chairman of the Maryland executive committee, states that while the Maryland delegates to the national convention held recently in Columbus, Ohio, had failed in their purpose of having their President and Mr. Aaron S. Watkins for Vice President, receive official notification of their nomination at Mountain Lake Park, they had succeeded in securing the presence of Vice President Candidate Watkins to deliver two speeches on Sunday, August 2, and they will constitute the opening of the Maryland campaign.

Speaking of the fact that their candidate for President, Mr. Eugene W. Chafin, will speak in every state of the Union during the campaign, Mr. Gorsuch said it would be impossible to say when Mr. Chafin would speak in Maryland, as that would be decided by an executive committee of nine chosen from members of the Prohibition national committee.

FIKE.

We have fine growing weather now, although it is very hot.

Mr. L. K. Fike was at church last Sunday at Markleysburg, Pa.

Messrs. Andrew Fike and Harvey Miller, of Tissue, Pa., were in this section last week selling lime.

Mr. John S. Fike has been making hay at William B. Frantz's last week.

If there be any truth in the statement of it being a hard winter when the hornets and yellow jackets build their nests on or near the ground, this winter will surely be a very severe winter for all such nests are built very low to the ground this year.

We have received letters from both Hon. Geo. A. Pearre and the fourth assistant Postmaster General that the Selbysport R. F. D. mail route will not go into effect until the extension which has been petitioned for be looked after by the Chief Inspector, and since it is in his hand we hope he will soon take up the matter.

On last Tuesday during an electrical storm lightning struck Mr. Flave Turney's barn, but it did no serious damage.

Mr. W. K. Umbel, of Markleysburg, Pa., put in a hay fork for F. T. Fike one day last week.

Mr. Amos Umbel and some of his family was in this section visiting his daughter one day last week.

CHAPTER IV.

The Waltz.

"DANCE with me!" repeated Sonia.

The faroff orchestra had struck up a dashing, gay Marsovian air. Impelled by the music and her glance of daring, Danilo sprang forward.

In an instant the two were whirling madly amid the intricacies of a wild Russian dance such as has for countless centuries been performed from Siberia's ice plain to Tartar steppes—a dance of youth, agility, utter abandon.

Yet as they came panting to a halt at the last crashing note of music the face of neither reflected the exhilaration the swift motion and stirring measures usually evoked. In fact, Danilo's brow wore a very perceptible scowl. Sonia, too, was downcast. Had her rash experiment failed?

"You didn't enjoy that," said she.

"Not especially," he confessed. "Did you?"

"No. You don't dance as well as you did."

"You've probably grown to prefer French partners," he replied, piqued at the reflection on his dancing.

"From all I hear," she retorted, "you have little right to reproach me on that score. You dance a good deal at Maxim's, don't you?"

"Now and then," he admitted.

"And with what sort of partners, I wonder?" she scoffed, a touch of scorn in her sweet voice.

"With polite ones," said Danilo icily.

She winced ever so little at the reproof and went on.

"I suppose you dance better with them than with me."

"Possibly," he agreed. "You see, I, too, may prefer French partners."

She raised her great dark eyes to his, a world of meaning in them.

"Do you?" she asked, almost in a whisper.

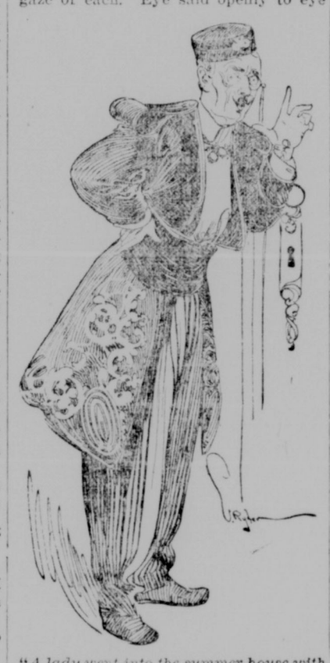
The distant orchestra had been playing again, this time not a native air, but a dreamy, infinitely sweet Viennese waltz. The opening notes of the haunting melody, though softened by distance, were wafted none the less distinctly to the listening couple.

Again their eyes met. With a mutual impulse they drew toward each other. Then began a dance as different from the stiffly conventional ballroom waltz as moonlight differs from a gasoline flare. With more than a hint of the free, marvelously graceful poses of Slavonic dancers, Danilo and Sonia began their wondrous waltz.

Throwing herself back into the strength of his circling embrace, the girl's outstretched arms swayed like wind blown lilies in rhythm with the music, her light step scarcely touching earth as the prince guided her through the mazes of the dance.

It was a strange, dexterous blend of east and west, of lissom oriental posturing and of gliding, modern waltz steps—the very poetry of motion. Nor from the first note until the last strain of music died away did either dancer's eyes leave the other's.

Love, eager and eternal, was in the gaze of each. Eye said openly to eye what sullen pride forced back from the lips.



"A lady went into the summer house with a gentleman."

The last dreamy chord and the music was hushed. Danilo and Sonia started, amazed, as though from some vision of paradise. The widow, fearful lest by impulsive word she might wreck her plan of bringing Danilo to her feet, darted breathlessly away to welcome a new group of guests. The prince, left alone, stared after her, open mouthed. A clapping of applauding hands aroused him.

"Bravo, bravo, my dear prince!" wheezed the ambassador, toddling forward. "What a delightful little dance! But is it customary to catch one's partner in a jiu jitsu grip like that, or is it a fashion that has come in since my waltzing days?"

The old bore's feeble jest brought Danilo quickly back to earth and to a sense of everyday surroundings.

"Were you looking for me?" he asked, none too civilly.

"Only to see if you had succeeded yet in finding who the lady is with whom De Jolidon is in love. She must be made to win him away from any ideas of marrying the widow."

"To blazes with that and all the rest of your silly plans!" shouted Danilo. "Don't worry any more about the widow. It's no use, I tell you. She is going to marry a Frenchman in spite of us all! And," he went on bitterly, goaded by the chagrin and abject disappointment in Popoff's face, "I'm going to dance at her wedding."

"Going to marry a Frenchman, is she?" yelled the distracted ambassador. "Preposterous! I'll find a way of stopping it! And it is De Jolidon she thinks of marrying?"

"What's that to me? I don't know who she's engaged to, and"—

But Popoff waited to hear no more. Catching sight of Nish, he rushed upon that unhappy clerk.

"Find M. de Jolidon!" he commanded. "Keep your eye on him all the rest of the evening. See if he makes love to the widow and report to me. I have already told Mme. Popoff to sound him on the subject. Among us all we ought to learn something before we're done."

"You'll learn 'something' if you keep on spying," muttered Danilo under his breath as he moved away. "But I'll bet a year's income it'll be something that will give you more surprise than pleasure."

Dusk was falling. Above the myriad colored lights that dotted the garden the moon was rising. Along one of the hedged paths leading to the summer house a man and a woman were strolling—Mme. Natalie Popoff and M. de Jolidon.

"And so your worthy husband set you the task of finding out whom I am in love with?" De Jolidon was saying.

"Yes," the ambassador's young wife answered. "He is afraid you will marry the widow."

"Why shouldn't I?" queried De Jolidon jokingly. "You told me to."

"But—but you won't, will you?" she pleaded. "Why don't you look at me? What are you looking at?"

De Jolidon's eye had fallen on the fan where it lay forgotten on the table.

"The fan you lost and that your husband pocketed," he said, handing it to her.

"Thank goodness!" Natalie exclaimed, seizing it; then:

"Lend me a pencil."

She wrote a sentence on the fan directly beneath the three words he had scribbled the night before at the ball.

"There," she sighed, handing it to him; "keep that as a reminder."

He held the fan up to the light and read:

"I—am—a—dutiful—wife."

"Remember that always," she adjured.

"Natalie!" he cried passionately.

"It is true—I am a dutiful wife. If I have been foolish enough to listen to your lovemaking, at least I have never encouraged it. I have always rebuffed you for conscience's sake. I am a dutiful"—

"Why remind me of the hopelessness of my love?" murmured De Jolidon. "You may refuse to reciprocate it, but you cannot prevent my telling you"—

"But I can. After this evening we must not meet again. My husband trusts me. This must be our farewell interview. Don't try to alter my purpose. I have made up my mind. After this evening I shall never"—

"Natalie, you can't mean"—

"I do. This is the last talk we two shall ever have together."

"Then," implored De Jolidon, "if it is really to be our farewell interview, why must we talk here in the garden, where at any moment others may come to claim your attention? Grant me a final half hour of your society all to myself. Let the talk be uninterrupted. Let us sit in the little summer house over there. See—it is empty."

They entered the little inclosed arbor. It was lighted by a string of Japanese lanterns, and two rustic chairs were at opposite sides of its round center table. There was a door at each end of the tiny room—an ideal spot for a tete-a-tete chat now that the moonlight had wooed most of the guests out of doors.

The light wicker door swung shut behind the couple. Natalie quite enjoyed the prospect of listening to her adorer's melodramatic words of farewell and of posing heroically as a self sacrificing, dutiful wife. In half an hour at most she would rejoin her husband with the righteous consciousness in her heart of having dismissed forever the one man besides Popoff who had ever made love to her.

So interested was Natalie in De Jolidon's parting speech that she did not hear the ambassador, just outside, declare excitedly:

"Nish, I'm sure I saw that summer house door close behind a lady's skirt! Let's see who is in there!"

"I'M AWAKE FROM MY CRAZY DREAM OF LOVE, AND I'M GOING BACK TO MAXIM'S."

CHAPTER V.

To the Rescue.

NISH, who had obediently followed De Jolidon and Natalie at Popoff's orders until they had entered the summer house, now wriggled forward in confusion on hearing the ambassador's voice.

"Did you call me, sir?" he asked.

"I most surely did call you, Mr. Nish!" cried Popoff. "And I told you I was certain I saw a lady, or, rather, a lady's skirt, disappearing into that summer house. Who was she?"

"I—I don't know, your excellency," tremblingly lied Nish.

"You ought to know!" scolded Popoff. "You were standing nearer the summer house than I was. Didn't you see her at all?"

"Yes, sir—yes, I saw her, if I may say so, but I don't know who she was, I really don't. I"—

"Was she alone?"

"No, your excellency, not quite alone. There was, if I may say so—there was a gentleman with her. At least he looked like a gentleman, but I didn't recognize him either."

"Well, well, well!" chuckled the ambassador, seating himself in a garden chair and eying the summer house with delightful interest. "A little flirtation, eh? Gone in there to whisper sweet nothings where no one can interrupt 'em. I wonder who they are! Now, I really wonder! Mr. Nish, I would not for the world have you think I am the least bit curious. But—I'll just sit here awhile, for a joke, and watch them come out. In the meantime, Mr. Nish, you might slip around to the rear of the summer house and see if there is another door there. If there is, you might lock it. Understand?"

"Ye-yes, your excellency!" mumbled panic stricken Nish, scuttling away among the bushes. The little clerk never paused until he had found Sonia. To her he poured forth the whole story, gazing with wild horror as she broke into a peal of uncontrollable laughter.

Suddenly she grew sober.

"Her husband will never forgive her," she murmured, half to herself. "He will never understand that it's just a silly, harmless, sentimental talk they're having."

Memories of the ways of jealous Marsovian husbands flashed into her mind. In that primitive fatherland wives had been beaten—yes, and murdered—for less. Something must be done, and done quickly."

"Don't worry!" she consoled the terrified Nish. "Say nothing to any one else. I'll get Mme. Popoff out of the scrape if I can."

Before Nish could reply she had disappeared down a path leading to the rear door of the summer house.

Meantime Popoff, his curiosity mastering him, had left his seat. Stealing forward on tiptoe, he put his eye to the keyhole of the wicker door.

He had scarcely bent over this when Danilo, happening to pass by on his way to the gate, paused in amazement at sight of the Marsovian ambassador thus assuming the role of Paul Pry.

"Why, hello, old chap!" cried the prince. "What are you up to?"

"Hush!" warned Popoff in an excited whisper. "A lady went into the summer house a few minutes ago with a gentleman. I can't see them very clearly. There's too much fluff in the keyhole. But they're sitting opposite each other with only a little table between them. The lady's back is to me, but it somehow looks familiar. The man is talking as earnestly as if he were trying to borrow money. Now he's bending across and kissing her hand, and she doesn't seem to mind. It's—why, bless my soul, it's that fellow De Jolidon? Well, well! Of all things! Now, if only the lady would turn her face so I could see her"—

"Come away, sir!" begged Danilo, the whole situation bursting upon his mind. He caught Popoff's sleeve, but the ambassador shook him off.

"Let me alone!" he whispered. "Can't you see what it all means? It means we've found the lady De Jolidon's in love with, the very woman we've both been looking for! And now if she'll just turn her head a little I'll be able to see her face, and then"—

"Then you don't know who she is?" queried Danilo.

"No. But I'll"—

"Then take my advice and don't try to find out. Let well enough alone. Come away, old chap, and"—

"No, no! There; you pulled my head away just as she was turning around. I'd have seen her in another second. They're getting up. Maybe they'll go out by the other door, and then I shan't be able to know who"—

"Let me do the looking," suggested Danilo. "If either of us has to play the eavesdropper I'll"—

"No. It is my place," asserted Popoff. "But I'll bet you a hundred francs it's Mme. Nova Kovitch."

"It would be like stealing a drunken man's watch. I won't take the bet. Come away, sir, and let the matter drop where it is. For your own happiness"—

But Popoff was once more at the keyhole.

"They're standing up to go," he reported. "Now she's beginning to face this way. It's— Oh, good Lord!"

The poor old man staggered away from the door as though struck between the eyes. Reeling to a chair, he collapsed and buried his face in his hands.

"No, no! It can't be! It can moaned. "And yet I could hardly be mistaken. My wife! And"—

"Brace up, your excellency!" entreated Danilo in genuine distress. "Pull yourself together. There are people coming along the walk. Don't make a scene. Perhaps you were mistaken."

"No; I saw her!" groaned Popoff. "My own wife and De Jolidon! And he kissed her hand."

"Oh, I dare say she was more kissed against than kissing!" Danilo observed consolingly. "But be careful, sir. A whole lot of people are within earshot."

"Then let them know the worst!" cried Popoff in a voice that brought a number of guests hurrying to the spot. "I'll denounce her before them all! Come out of there," he bellowed, rushing forward, "both of you! Come out!"

He threw the summer house door wide open and shrank back, incredulous, aghast.

On the threshold stood De Jolidon and—Sonia!

"What—what does this mean," gurgled the confused ambassador, "this—this change and"—

"You called to us to come out," returned Sonia calmly. "May I ask what you wanted of us?"

"Sonia!" gasped Danilo. And through the confusion of many excited voices she heard him and thrilled to the note of anguish in his half stifled cry.

"If—if it was you who were in there with M. de Jolidon," stammered Popoff, "where is my wife?"

"Here I am, dear," answered Natalie, stepping out of the crowd, with which she had mingled after her hurried exit through the rear door of the summer house. "Here I am! What is the matter?"

"Matter enough!" cried her husband. "I could have sworn I saw you sitting in that arbor with M. de Jolidon."

"My dear!"

Natalie's exclamation was a triumph of shocked propriety.

"He was kissing your hand, I thought," went on the dazed ambassador.

This time Natalie moved away from him in offended dignity. But Popoff hastened to throw his arm about her and draw her back.

"I was wrong," he assured her—"a blunder of eyesight! I apologize! I'm sorry. I"—

"I begin to understand," put in Sonia, stepping forward in fear lest Natalie overdo her pose of virtuous indignation. "It seems that the Marsovian ambassador has done me the honor to listen at a keyhole in hopes of overhearing my conversation. Sooner than disappoint him, M. de Jolidon, will you please repeat to him just what you said to me in there?"

De Jolidon understood. If Natalie was to be saved, if Sonia was not to be talked about, heroic measures were necessary.

"I asked Mme. Sonia Sadowa," said he, "to do me the honor to become my wife."

Danilo stood motionless, his lips set in a white line, amid the buzz of congratulations and laughter that followed De Jolidon's announcement. Sonia noted his agony and said joyfully to herself:

"My prince, I think I've won! You'll have to speak, soon or late, now, and when you do"—

"And Marsovia loses the twenty millions!" Popoff muttered, recovering his self possession and somewhat belatedly remembering his country's needs.

"Prince," called Sonia mischievously, "I haven't heard your congratulations yet. You don't look as happy as you might at the news."

"Happy!" echoed Danilo, with a scornful, mirthless laugh. "Why shouldn't I be? Accept my congratulations, my paternal blessing and anything else you choose to levy on me for. My own motto is, 'Love when you may, propose seldom and marry—not at all!'

"Let me tell you a little fairy story: There were once a prince and a princess. They loved each other. But the prince was poor and dared not tell of his love for fear of being thought a fortune hunter. His silence made the princess angry. So she went and promised her hand to another man, and they all lived miserably unhappy ever after. And the moral of that stupid little story is that I'm sick of respectability, and I'm awake from my crazy dream of love, and I'm going back to Maxim's, and you can all go to—Marsovia!"

"He loves me! He loves me!" panted Sonia under her breath.

THE JUNE GROOM.

Just now you're not
Of much account;
To very much
You don't amount.
If done without
You now should be,
Your sweaty face
No one would see.
Your big red hands
Would not appear
To mar the scene;
That's very clear.
If some one could
Devise a plan
To wed a maid
Without a man,
Your wilted collar
Would not seem
A blot upon
Love's perfect dream.
Your awkward poses
Would not make
The bride's relations
Want to take
You out and dump
You in the lake.
Don't think because
You hold her fan
You cut much ice,
You foolish man.
You're just the groom—
There by your side,
All radiant, fair,
Behold the bride.
She is the glorious
Show today,
And you, poor groom,
Are in the way.
You do not add
Unto this scene
One bit of color
'Cept it's green.
You are a super,
That is all.
And cut a figure
Very small.
No one inquires
Your name or stays
To look at you.
In singing plays
You'd lug a spear
Or hold a horse.
They tolerate you
Here, of course,
Because when done
With fuss and frills
You are the guy
Who'll pay the bills.

Tears stood in his eyes.

"Won't you be seated?" he asked.

She arose gracefully.

"What do you think of that get-up?" whispered her rival.

He offered her his hand.

"Thank you," she said sweetly, "but I hardly think I need another."

She stumbled awkwardly over a chair.

"I hope you enjoyed the trip," he remarked pleasantly.

He listened with bated breath.

"I want to catch every sentence," he explained.

She was forced to admit that she missed him.

"Ah," she sighed, "I am indeed an aimless creature."

He told her of his great love.

"When a belle is told," she whispered winsomely, "a ring generally follows."—Bohemian Magazine.

Man With the Monkey Wrench.

There is somebody else besides the man
Who sits at the steering wheel
And sends along on its wild career
The merry and mad 'mobile,
When the car is stopped with a broken spring
Or skids in a ditch to stay,
Oh, then the man with the monkey wrench
Is the hero who saves the day!

With a calm and a haughty face,
And away he flies like a shooting star

COL. J. C. M'GREW OF KINGWOOD. W. VA.

Oldest Living Ex-Member of Congress and is Still Active and Vigorous.

Francis B. Gessner, writing to the Wheeling Intelligencer, gives the following interesting account of a native West Virginian:

John C. McGrew, of Kingwood, W. Va., is the oldest living ex-member of Congress and on September 15 next he will be 95 years old. Only a few months ago, General E. R. Ecley, of Carrollton, Ohio, passed away leaving Col. McGrew the veteran ex-member of the entire country. John C. McGrew today is wonderfully vigorous for his years and keeps actively in touch with matters political and business affairs. He was born in Brandonville, in what is now Preston county, W. Va., and grew up the typical farmer's boy, keeping to the country school and the farm until 19 when a commercial life appealed to him and he took up work in a general store at Kingwood. Four years later he started a store of his own and his long life has passed in business pursuits, with politics mixed in. It is the proud remark of his declining years that although he has had many honors and offices he never offered himself as a candidate for office, never solicited a vote and was never defeated at an election.

His first political move was as a delegate to the famous secession convention of Virginia held at Richmond in February, 1861. He took part in the discussions of this convention but opposed secession, and with 54 other delegates voted nay on the proposition of leaving the Union, and then held a secret session ordinance, but to excite a demand for the partition of the State of old Virginia. This was another sort of secession and out of the movement planned and aided by McGrew there arose the present wonderful State of West Virginia. Of the 152 members of the famous Richmond secession convention Col. McGrew is the only survivor. In the new State of West Virginia he has ever been active and conspicuous. He was chosen a member of the First and Second Legislatures and is proud at this time to relate that he worked hard to establish the school and the State college at Morgantown.

He was elected to Congress in 1868 and re-elected in 1870 and declined to take a third term. He served in the House during the days of giants—men like Horace Maynard, Garfield, Bingham, Banks, W. D. Kelley, Ben Butler and the present Senator Hale of Maine, who with Congressman McGrew is one of the few survivors of the famous Congresses that met after the Civil War. Since leaving Congress Col. McGrew has led a quiet life but has not at any time relaxed his vigilance for the for the party. A Methodist since his early manhood he has taken interest in church affairs and in 1881 he was sent as a delegate to the great roumenical council held in London and while abroad he made the grand tour of Europe and the Holy Land, going also to India. He was fond of relating that he has bathed in the river Jordan and the Dead Sea, that he has stood on the back of the Sphnix and climbed the pyramid of Ghizeh.

To those who talk with this distinguished statesman and ask the secret of his long life and present health, the reply of the veteran is that he owes much to heredity as his ancestors lived many years and in health, but he adds that he owes much to his own method of spending much time in open air, and to his temperate habits as he has never used coffee, tea or alcoholic drinks of any sort. Nor has he used tobacco in any form and he thinks his abstemious methods have contributed wonderfully to the prolongation of his life far beyond the prohpet's limit of even four score years. He is proud, too, of his Scotch-Irish ancestry and he has been described by a friend as combining the caution of the Highlander with the impetuosity and boldness of the Irishman.

Mr. McGrew married Persis Hagans in 1854 and their married life was one long romance. They trod the path together for 54 years and since her death in 1893 he has lived with a married daughter, Mrs. Martha Heermans, of Kingwood. It is the sweet sentiment of Mr. McGrew when he speaks of his dear wife to credit her with what ever success he has had in life because of her wise counsels and womanly intuitions. His son, Major Wm. McGrew, is a business man of Morgantown, W. Va., and George H. McGrew, D. D., served ten years in India as a missionary. He is now rector of a church near Washington.

Today this grand old man of West Virginia lives in peaceful retirement in the home which he built many years ago for his bride. He is serene as he waits for the summons, happy with his books and with the memories of a life well spent, and when he talks of his past and the events in which he took part he expresses but one regret that he has not done more for the happiness and comfort of his fellow men.

ON HAVING A GOOD TIME.

BY CHARLES BATTELL LOOMIS.

Do you have a good time?

You ought to.

One of the reasons why you were put on this earth was so that you might have a good time.

There is absolutely no end to the ways in which you can have a good time, and that too at little expense.

It seems such a trite remark to make; and yet there are thousands of Americans who do not know what a good time means.

There are thousaods who would derive great pleasure from reading if they had ever cultivated a taste for it. The love for it is latent in them, but they have never discovered it, and they wander around the house in the evening or go to a cheerful and warm saloon and kill time when time and they might be the best of friends. Give one spare time, and there are countless ways in which to amase oneself.

Cant is never pleasant, and I may be suspected of cant if I say that a good time may be obtained in doing another person a kindness but it is a fact that thousands never ascertain for themselves between the cradle and the grave. And many of them are people eminently fitted to make good times for others, only it never occurs to them to do it.

The new generation is wiser than any generation that has preceded it, because it has been taught that riches alone are not entitled to respect.

When you and I were boys we were taught to look up to the successful man with something bordering on veneration. He might be prompous and selfish and snobbish, but we must look up to him because he had managed to gather together more dollars than any other man in town.

Let us thank the much-abused muck-rakers for changing all this. Now if a man is rich, he has got to prove that he has legitimate claims on our respect, and we no longer teach our boys that the only way to success is by the road that is paved with dollars.

And yet some of these rich men have had good times in accumulating wealth. It is usual to think of a man who devotes all his time and energy to business as a slave with his nose to the grind stone, but if a man is temperamentally fond of business, he is never so happy as when he is working hard at his particular line.

The successful farmer whose crops are always the first ones gathered in his community, who always plows at the right time, and who never gets caught with unprofitable fruit; depend upon it that he is not to be pitied. He is having a good time. Work, hard, manual labor is congenial to him. Perhaps he is happier as he plows his straight furrows all of a spring morning than he ever would be over a book or before a picture or at a concert. His heart is in his work, and having the best possible time.

There are men who plow and sow and cultivate and reap because they have to, and would starve if they didn't. Some of them like to fish and to hunt. Don't gainsay them if they take a day off and go a-hunting, even if they have to work overtime to catch up with their harrowing. They will never have a good time while working, and it is their due to have a good time somehow.

Father, see to it that you make it possible for your children to have a good time through life.

Once upon a time there were fathers who, having sons with a decided literary literary or musical bent, made lawyers or merchants of them; tried their best to kill their desire to express themselves in terms of art.

Nowadays fathers are so wise that when a boy shows that he has artistic talent he is at once allowed to cultivate it, and thus the boy is enabled to throw his soul into his work and he is sure of a good time. He may come near starving but he will be happy. He may never arrive, but he will be successful. He may never satisfy himself, but he will be happy starving; he will have had a good time when life comes to an end.

And it is worth while thinking of this fact; artists live to be older than almost any class of men except farmers.

Wall Street men die young.

And yet I have heard that Wall Street men have good times. Only their good times are generally paid for by bad times on the part of a good many others, and that's a poor way to have a good time Let your good times benefit others as well as yourself.

Have a good time with your children. Never forget that it is only an accident that you were ahead of them. They might have been born ahead of you. In other words, while you will do well to see to it that they respect you, don't try to make them think that you are a superior being. Thirty years ago you were a dirty-faced little boy disobeying your father. Remember that when you are among your children, and make companions of them. Then you'll all have a good time together, and when you are old you'll have chums in your own family.

Oh, it offends me to the soul to see a solemn father doing the pompous act when he is in the presence of his children, trying to make them think that he is of superior clay. Half the time they are "on." Children can tell a hawk from a hand saw.

Mothers, learn to have good times with your daughters. Don't grow old. There is no need to grow old unless you wish to. Remember that a spirit that grows old has missed the whole point of its reason for being on earth. Spirits are immortal, and youth is immortal, and a spirit should personify immortal youth.

Its a knack that is harder to get, the longer you neglect trying for it. Having a good time helps to keep the spirit of youth with you. Making hard work of life, no matter what your duties may be serves to bow the spirit as if it were giving an imitation of Atlas.

If you can't have a good time any other way be good. Have you ever tried it? Yes we have all tried it and cynics to the contrary notwithstanding one can have a good time being good. You needn't be afraid that you'll be good so long that it will hurt.

Try to get work that you can do with your whole heart and if you don't have a good time, there's no such thing as human nature.—From Smith's Magazine.

TAFT OUTLINES PARTY POLICIES

Acceptance Speech Keynote of Campaign.

HIGH PRAISE FOR ROOSEVELT.

Republican Candidate Rebukes Opposition's Stand on Philippine Independence—Promises Steps Toward Tariff Reform Immediately After Inauguration if Elected—Believes In Income Tax by Statutory Law if Necessary For Revenues Rather Than by Amendment to the Constitution—Rights of Both Organized and Unorganized Labor Should Be Impartially Upheld.

Senator Warner and Gentlemen of the Committee: I am deeply sensible of the honor which the Republican National Convention has conferred on me in the nomination which you formally tender. I accept it with full appreciation of the responsibility it imposes.

Gentlemen, the strength of the Republican cause in the campaign at hand is in the fact that we represent the policies essential to the reform of known abuses, to the continuance of liberty and true prosperity, and that we are determined, as our platform unequivocally declares, to maintain them and carry them on. For more than ten years this country passed through an epoch of material development far beyond any that ever occurred in the world before. In its course, certain evils crept in. Some prominent and influential members of the community, spurred by financial success and in their hurry for greater wealth, became unmindful of the common rules of business honesty and fidelity and of the limitations imposed by law upon their action. This became known. The revelations of the breaches of trust, the disclosures as to rebates and discriminations by railways, the accumulating evidence of the violation of the anti-trust law by a number of corporations, the overissue of stocks and bonds on interstate railways for the unlawful enriching of directors and for the purpose of concentrating control of railways in one management, all quickened the conscience of the people, and brought on a moral awakening among them that boded well for the future of the country.

What Roosevelt Has Done.

The man who formulated the expression of the popular conscience and who led the movement for practical reform was Theodore Roosevelt. He laid down the doctrine that the rich violator of the law should be as amenable to restraint and punishment as the offender without wealth and without influence, and he proceeded by recommending legislation and directing executive action to make that principle good in actual performance.

President Roosevelt directed suits to be brought and prosecutions to be instituted under the anti-trust law, to enforce its provisions against the most powerful of the industrial corporations. He pressed to passage the pure food law and the meat inspection law in the interest of the health of the public, clean business methods and great ultimate benefit to the trades themselves. He recommended the passage of a law, which the Republican convention has since specifically approved, restricting the future issue of stocks and bonds by interstate railways to such as may be authorized by Federal authority.

Chief Function of Next Administration

The chief function of the next Administration, in my judgment, is distinct from, and a progressive development of that which has been performed by President Roosevelt. The chief function of the next Administration is to complete and perfect the machinery by which these standards may be maintained, by which the lawbreakers may be promptly restrained and punished, but which shall operate with sufficient accuracy and dispatch to interfere with legitimate business as little as possible. Such machinery is not now adequate.

Physical Valuation of Railways.

Some of the suggestions of the Democratic platform relate really to this subordinate and ancillary machinery to which I have referred. Take for instance the so-called "physical valuation of railways." It is clear that the sum of all rates or receipts of a railway, less proper expenses, should be limited to a fair profit upon the reasonable value of its property, and that if the sum exceeds this measure, it ought to be reduced. The difficulty in enforcing the principle is in ascertaining what is the reasonable value of the company's property, and in fixing what is a fair profit. It is clear that the physical value of a railroad and its plant is an element to be given weight in determining its full value; but as President Roosevelt in his Indianapolis speech and the Supreme Court have in effect pointed out, the value of the railroad as a going concern, including its good will, due to efficiency of service and many other circumstances, may be much greater than the value of its tangible property, and it is the former that measures the investment on which a fair profit must be allowed. Then, too, the question what is a fair profit is one involving not only the rate of interest usually earned on normally safe investments, but also a sufficient allowance to make up for the risk of loss bot. of capital and interest in the original outlay. These considerations will have justified the company in imposing charges high enough to secure a fair income on the enterprise as a whole. The securities at market prices will have passed into the hands of subsequent purchasers from the original investors. Such circumstances should properly affect the decision of the tribunal engaged in determining whether the totality of rates charged is reasonable or excessive. To ignore them might so seriously and unjustly impair settled values as to destroy all hope of restoring confidence and forever end the inducement for investment in new railroad construction which, in returning prosperous times, is sure to be essential to our material progress.

From what has been said, the proper conclusions would seem to be that in attempting to determine whether the entire schedule of rates of a railway is excessive, the physical valuation of the road is a relevant and important but not necessarily a controlling factor.

I am confident that the fixing of rates on the principles suggested above would not materially impair the present market values of railroad securities in most cases, for I believe that the normal increase in the value of railroad properties, especially in their terminals, will more than make up for the possible overcapitalization in earlier years. In some cases, doubtless, it will be found that overcapitalization is made an excuse for excessive rates, and then they should be reduced; but the consensus of opinion seems to be that the railroad rates generally in this country are reasonably low.

Conclusion That There Should Be Physical Valuation.

I have discussed this, with some degree of detail, merely to point out that the valuation by the Interstate Commerce Commission of the tangible property of a railroad is proper and may from time to time be necessary in settling certain issues which may come before them, and that no evil or injustice can come from valuation in such cases, if it be understood that the result is to be used for a just purpose, and the right to a fair profit under all the circumstances of the investment is recognized.

National Control of Interstate Commerce Corporation.

Another suggestion in respect to subordinate and ancillary machinery necessary to carry out Republican policies is that of the incorporation under National law or the licensing by National license or enforced registry of companies engaged in interstate trade. The fact is that nearly all corporations doing a commercial business are engaged in interstate commerce, and if they all were required to take out a Federal license or a Federal charter, the burden upon the interstate business of the country would become intolerable.

It is necessary, therefore, to devise some means for classifying and insuring Federal supervision of such corporations as have the power and temptation to effect restraints of interstate trade and monopolies. Such corporations constitute a very small percentage of all engaged in interstate business.

Construction of Anti-Trust Law.

The possible operation of the anti-trust law under existing rulings of the Supreme Court has given rise to suggestions for its necessary amendment to prevent its application to cases which it is believed were never in the contemplation of the framers of the statute. Take two instances: A merchant or manufacturer engaged in a legitimate business that covers certain States, wishes to sell his business and his good will, and so in the terms of the sale obligates himself to the purchaser not to go into the same business in those States. Such a restraint of trade has always been enforced at common law. Again, the employees of an interstate railway combine and enter upon a peaceable and lawful strike to secure better wages. At common law this was not a restraint of trade or commerce or a violation of the rights of the company or of the public. Neither case ought to be made a violation of the anti-trust law. My own impression is that the Supreme Court would hold that neither of these instances is within its inhibition, but, if they are to be so regarded, general legislation amending the law is necessary.

The proposal to compel every corporation to sell its commodities at the same price the country over, allowing for transportation, is utterly impracticable. If it can be shown that in order to drive out competition, a corporation owning a large part of the plant producing an article is selling in one part of the country, where it has competitors, at a low and unprofitable price, and in another part of the country, where it has none, at an exorbitant price, this is evidence that it is attempting an unlawful monopoly, and justifies conviction under the anti-trust law; but the proposal to supervise the business of corporations in such a way as to fix the price of commodities and compel the sale at such price is as absurd and socialistic a plank as was ever inserted in a Democratic political platform.

Advantage of Combination of Capital.

The combination of capital in large plants to manufacture goods with the greatest economy is just as necessary as the assembling of the parts of a machine to the economical and more rapid manufacture of what in old times was made by hand. The Government should not interfere with one any more than the other.

What Is an Unlawful Trust?

When, however, such combinations are not based on any economic principle, but are made merely for the purpose of controlling the market, to maintain or raise prices, restrict output and drive out competitors, the public derives no benefit and we have a monopoly. It is important, therefore, that such large aggregations of capital and combination should be controlled so that the public may have the advantage of reasonable prices and that the avenues of enterprise may be kept open to the individual and the smaller corporation wishing to engage in business.

Many enterprises have been organized on the theory that mere aggregation of all, or nearly all, existing plants in a line of manufacture, without regard to economy of production, destroys competition. They have, most of them, gone into bankruptcy. Competition in a profitable business will not be affected by the mere aggregation of many existing plants under one company, unless the company thereby effects great economy, the benefit of which it shares with the public, or takes some illegal method to avoid competition and to perpetuate a hold on the business.

Proper Treatment of Trusts.

Unlawful trusts should be restrained with all the efficiency of injunctive process, and the persons engaged in maintaining them should be punished with all the severity of criminal prosecution, in order that the methods pursued in the operation of their business shall be brought within the law. To destroy them and to eliminate the wealth they represent from the producing capital of the country would entail enormous loss, and would throw out of employment myriads of workingmen and workingwomen. Such a result is wholly unnecessary to the accomplishment of the needed reform, and will inflict upon the innocent far greater punishment than upon the guilty.

Destructive Policy of Democratic Platform.

The Democratic platform does not propose to destroy the plants of the trusts physically, but it proposes to do the same thing in a different way. The business of this country is largely dependent on a protective system of tariffs. The business done by many of the so called "trusts" is protected with the other business of the country. The Democratic platform proposes to take off the tariff in all articles coming into competition with those produced by the so called "trusts," and to put them on the free list. If such a course would be utterly destructive of their business, as is intended, it would not only destroy the trusts, but all of their smaller competitors. The ruthless and impracticable character of the proposition grows plainer as its effects upon the whole community are realized.

To take the course suggested by the Democratic platform in these matters is to involve the entire community, innocent as it is, in the punishment of the guilty, while our policy is to stamp out the specific evil. This difference between the policies of the two great parties is of especial importance in view of the present condition of business. After ten years of the most remarkable material development and prosperity, there came a financial stringency, a panic and an industrial depression. This was brought about not only by the enormous expansion of business plants and business investments which could not be readily converted, but also by the waste of capital, in extravagance of living, in wars and other catastrophies.

Republican Doctrine of Protection.

The Republican doctrine of protection, as definitely announced by the Republican convention of this year and by previous conventions, is that a tariff shall be imposed on all imported products, whether of the factory, farm or mine, sufficiently great to equal the difference between the cost of production abroad and at home, and that this difference should, of course, include the difference between the higher wages paid in this country and the wages paid abroad and embrace a reasonable profit to the American producer. A system of protection thus adopted and put in force has led to the establishment of a rate of wages here that has greatly enhanced the standard of living of the laboring man. It is the policy of the Republican party permanently to continue that standard of living. In 1897 the Dingley Tariff Bill was passed, under which we have had, as already said, a period of enormous prosperity.

Necessity For Revision of Tariff.

The consequent material development has greatly changed the conditions under which many articles described by the schedules of the tariff are now produced. The tariff in a number of the schedules exceeds the difference between the cost of production of such articles abroad and at home, including a reasonable profit to the American producer. The excess over that difference serves no useful purpose, but offers a temptation to those who would monopolize the production and the sale of such articles in this country, to profit by the excessive rate. On the other hand, there are other schedules in which the tariff is not sufficiently high to give the measure of protection which they should receive upon Republican principles, and as to those the tariff should be raised. A revision of the tariff undertaken upon this principle, which is at the basis of our present business system, begun promptly upon the incoming of the new administration, and considered at a special session with the preliminary investigations already begun by the appropriate committees of the House and Senate, will make the disturbance of business incident to such a change as little as possible.

Labor and What the Republican Party Has Done For It.

We come now to the question of labor. One important phase of the policies of the present Administration has been an anxiety to secure for the wage-earner an equality of opportunity and such positive statutory protection as shall place him on a level in dealing with his employer. The Republican party has passed an employers' liability act for interstate railroads, and has established an eight hour law for government employees and on government construction. The essence of the reform effected by the former is the abolition of the fellow-servant rule, and the introduction of the comparative negligence theory by which an employee injured in the service of his employer does not lose his right to recover because of slight negligence on his part. Then there is the act providing for compensation for injury to government employees, together with the various statutes requiring safety appliances upon interstate commerce railroads for the protection of their employees, and limiting the hours of their employment. These are all instances of the desire of the Republican party to do justice to the wage-earner. Doubtless a more comprehensive measure for compensation of government employees will be adopted in the future.

To give to employees their proper position in such a controversy, to enable them to maintain themselves against employers having great capital, they may well unite, because in union there is strength and without it each individual laborer and employee would be helpless. The promotion of industrial peace through the instrumentality of the trade agreement is often one of the results of such union when intelligently conducted.

There is a large body of laborers, however, skilled and unskilled, who are not organized into unions. Their rights before the law are exactly the same as those of the union men, and are to be protected with the same care and watchfulness.

In order to induce their employer into a compliance with their request for changed terms of employment, workmen have the right to strike in a body. They have a right to use such persuasion as they may, provided it does not reach the point of duress, to lead their reluctant co-laborers to join them in their union against their employer, and they have a right, if they choose, to accumulate funds to support those engaged in a strike, to delegate to officers the power to direct the action of the union, and to withdraw themselves and their associates from dealings with, or giving custom to those with whom they are in controversy.

What Labor Cannot Lawfully Do.

What they have not the right to do is to injure their employer's property, to injure their employer's business by use of threats or methods of physical duress against those who would work for him, or deal with him, or by carrying on what is sometimes known as a secondary boycott against his customers or those with whom he deals.

It has been claimed that injunctions do not issue to protect anything but property rights, and that business is not a property right; but such a proposition is wholly inconsistent with all the decisions of the courts. The Supreme Court of the United States says that the injunction is a remedy to protect property or rights of a pecuniary nature, and we may well submit to the considerate judgment of all laymen whether the right of a man in his business is not as distinctly a right of a pecuniary nature as the right to his horse or his house or the stock of goods on his shelf; and the instances in which injunctions to protect business have been upheld by all courts are so many that it is futile further to discuss the proposition.

It is difficult to tell the meaning of the Democratic platform upon this subject. It says:

"Questions of judicial practice have arisen especially in connection with industrial disputes. We deem that the parties to all judicial proceedings should be treated with rigid impartiality, and that injunctions should not be issued in any cases in which injunctions would not issue if no industrial dispute were involved."

This declaration is disingenuous. It seems to have been loosely drawn with the especial purpose of rendering it susceptible to one interpretation by one set of men and to a diametrically opposite interpretation by another. It does not aver that injunctions should not issue in industrial disputes, but only that they should not issue merely because they are industrial disputes, and yet those responsible for the declaration must have known that no one has ever maintained that the fact that a dispute was industrial gave any basis for issuing an injunction in reference thereto.

The declaration seems to be drawn in its present vague and ambiguous shape in order to persuade some people that it is a declaration against the issuing of injunctions in any industrial dispute, while at the same time it may be possible to explain to the average plain citizen who objects to class distinctions that no such intention exists at all. Our position is clear and unequivocal. We are anxious to prevent even an appearance of any injustice to labor in the issuance of injunctions, not in a spirit of favoritism to one set of our fellow citizens, but of justice to all of our fellow citizens. The reason for exercising or refusing to exercise the power of injunction must be found in the character of the unlawful injury and not in the character or class of the persons who inflict this injury.

The man who has a business which is being unlawfully injured is entitled to the remedies which the law has always given him, no matter who has inflicted the injuries. Otherwise, we shall have class legislation unjust in principle and likely to sap the foundations of a free government.

Notice and Hearing Before Issue of Injunction.

I come now to the question of notice before issuing an injunction. It is a fundamental rule of general jurisprudence that no man shall be affected by a judicial proceeding without notice and hearing. This rule, however, has sometimes had an exception in the issuing of temporary restraining orders commanding a defendant in effect to maintain the status quo until a hearing. Such a process should issue only in rare cases where the threatened change of the status quo would inflict irreparable injury if time were taken to give notice and a summary hearing. The unlawful injury usual in industrial disputes, such as I have described, does not become formidable except after sufficient time in which to give the defendants notice and a hearing. I do not mean to say that there may not be cases even in industrial disputes where a restraining order might properly be issued without notice, but, generally, I think it is otherwise. In some State courts, and in fewer Federal courts, the practice of issuing a temporary restraining order without notice merely to preserve the status quo on the theory that it won't hurt anybody, has been too common. Many of us recall that the practice has been pursued in other than industrial disputes, as, for instance, in corporate and stock controversies like those over the Erie railroad, in which a stay order without notice was regarded as a step of great advantage to the one who secured it, and a corresponding disadvantage to the one against whom it was secured. Indeed, the chances of doing injustice on an ex-parte application are much increased over those when a hearing is granted, and there may be circumstances under which it may affect the defendant to his detriment. In the case of a lawful strike, the sending of a formidable document restraining a number of defendants from doing a great many different things which the plaintiff avers they are threatening to do, often so discourages men always reluctant to go into a strike from continuing what is their lawful right. This has made the laboring man feel that an injustice is done in the issuing of a writ without notice. I conceive that in the treatment of this question it is the duty of the citizen and the legislator to view the subject from the standpoint of the man who believes himself to be unjustly treated, as well as from that of the community at large. I have suggested the remedy of returning in such cases to the original practice under the old statute of the United States and the rules in equity adopted by the Supreme Court, which did not permit the issuing of an injunction without notice. In this respect, the Republican Convention has adopted another remedy, that, without going so far, promises to be efficacious.

Effect of Jury Trial.

Under such a provision a recalcitrant witness who refuses to obey a subpoena may insist on a jury trial before the court can determine that he received the subpoena. A citizen summoned as a juror and refusing to obey the writ when brought into court must be tried by another jury to determine whether he got the summons. Such a provision applies not alone to injunctions, but to every order which the court issues against persons. A suit may be tried in the court of first instance and carried to the Court of Appeals, and thence to the Supreme Court, and a judgment and decree entered and an order issued, and then if the decree involves the defendant's doing anything or not doing anything, and he disobeys it, the plaintiff who has pursued his remedies in lawful course for years must, to secure his rights, undergo the uncertainties and the delays of a jury trial before he can enjoy that which is his right by the decision of the highest court of the land. I say without hesitation that such a change will greatly impair the indispensable power and authority of the courts. Securing to the public the benefits of the new statutes enacted in the present Administration, the ultimate instrumentality to be resorted to is the courts of the United States. If now their authority is to be weakened in a manner never known in the history of the jurisprudence of England or America, except in the constitution of Oklahoma, how can we expect that such statutes will have efficient enforcement? Those who advocate this intervention of a jury in such cases seem to suppose that this change in some way will inure only to the benefit of the poor workingman. As a matter of fact, the person who will secure chief advantage from it is the wealthy and unscrupulous defendant, able to employ astute and cunning counsel and anxious to avoid justice.

The administration of justice lies at the foundation of government. The maintenance of the authority of the courts is essential unless we are prepared to embrace anarchy. Never in the history of the country has there been such an insidious attack upon the judicial system as the proposal to interject a jury trial between all orders of the court made after full hearing and the enforcement of such orders.

The Currency System.

The late panic disclosed a lack of elasticity in our financial system. This has been provisionally met by an act of the present Congress permitting the issue of additional emergency bank notes, and insuring their withdrawal when the emergency has passed by a high rate of taxation. It is drawn in conformity with the present system of bank note currency, but varies from it in certain respects by authorizing the use of commercial paper and bonds of good credit, as well as United States bonds, as security for its redemption. It is expressly but a temporary measure and contains a provision for the appointment of a currency commission to devise and recommend a new and reformed system of currency. This inadequacy of our present currency system, due to changed conditions and enormous expansion, is generally recognized. The Republican platform well states that we must have a "more elastic and adaptable system to meet the requirements of agriculturists, manufacturers, merchants and business men generally, must be automatic in operation, recognizing the fluctuations in interest rates," in which every dollar shall be as good as gold, and which shall prevent rather than aid financial stringency in bringing on a panic.

Postal Savings Bank and Its Advantages.

In addition to this, the Republican platform recommends the adoption of a postal savings bank system in which, of course, the Government would become responsible to the depositors for the payment of principal and interest. It is thought that the Government guaranty will bring out of hoarding places much money which may be turned into wealth producing capital, and that it will be a great incentive for thrift in the many small places in the country having now no savings bank facilities which are reached by the Post Office Department. It will bring to every one, however remote from financial centers, a place of perfect safety for deposits, with interest return.

Objections to Democratic Proposal to Enforce Insurance of Bank Deposits.

The Democratic platform recommends a tax upon National banks and upon such State banks as may come in, in the nature of enforced insurance to raise a guaranty fund to pay the depositors of any bank which fails. How State banks can be included in such a scheme under the constitution is left in the twilight zone of States rights and Federalism so frequently dimming the meaning and purpose of the promises of the platform. If they come in under such a system, they must necessarily be brought within the closest National control, and so they must really cease to be State banks and become National banks.

The proposition is to tax the honest and prudent banker to make up for the dishonesty and imprudence of others. If the proposal were adopted exactly as the Democratic platform suggests, it would bring the whole banking system of the country down in ruin.

The Republican party prefers the postal savings bank as one tried, safe, and known to be effective, and as reaching many more people now without banking facilities than the new system proposed.

Philippines.

In the Philippines the experiment of a national assembly has justified itself, both as an assistance in the government of the islands and as an education in the practice of self-government to the people of the islands.

The proposition of the Democratic platform is to turn over the islands as soon as a stable government is established. This has been established. The proposal then is in effect to turn them over at once. Such action will lead to ultimate chaos in the islands.

The Rights and Progress of the Negro.

The Republican platform refers to these amendments to the Constitution that were passed by the Republican party for the protection of the negro. The negro, in the forty years since he was freed from slavery, has made remarkable progress. He is becoming a more and more valuable member of the communities in which he lives. The education of the negro is being expanded and improved in every way. The best men of both races, at the North as well as at the South, ought to rejoice to see growing up among the Southern people an influential element disposed to encourage the negro in his hard struggle for industrial independence and assured political status. The Republican platform, adopted at Chicago, explicitly demands justice for all men without regard to race or color, and just as explicitly declares for the enforcement, and without reservation, in letter and spirit of the Thirteenth, Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments to the Constitution.

Publicity of Campaign Contributions and Expenditures.

Another plank of the Democratic platform refers to the failure of the Republican Convention to express an opinion in favor of the publicity of contributions received and expenditures made in elections. Here again we contrast our opponents' promises with our own acts. A resident of New York has been selected as treasurer of the Republican National Committee, who was treasurer of the Republican State Committee when Governor Hughes was elected in New York, and who made a complete statement within twenty days after the election, as required by the New York law, of the contributions received by him and the expenditures made by him or under his authority in connection with that election. His residence and the discharge of his duties in the State of New York subject him to the law of that State as to all receipts of the treasury of the National Committee from whatever source and as to all its disbursements. His returns will be under the obligations and penalties of the law, and a misstatement by him or the filing of a false account will subject him to prosecution for perjury and violation of the statute. Of course, under the Federal law, he is not permitted to receive any contributions from corporations.

Income Tax.

The Democratic platform demands two constitutional amendments, one providing for an income tax, and the other for the election of Senators by the people. In my judgment, an amendment to the Constitution for an income tax is not necessary. I believe that an income tax, when the protective system of customs and the internal revenue tax shall not furnish income enough for governmental needs, can and should be devised which under the decisions of the Supreme Court will conform to the Constitution.

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 32. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, AUGUST 6, 1908. NUMBER 23

LINCOLN'S BRIEF SPEECH OF ACCEPTANCE.

Comparison Made Between It and The Speech Made Recently by Mr. Taft.

To the Editor of The Republican.

The minds and thoughts of many people are exercised over the prolonged, complicated and ponderous proceedings of the two great political parties in nominating and putting forth their Presidential candidates. Thoughtful persons thing there has been too much formality, method and ceremony in a Republican country, such as this. These things are well enough to a reasonable and proper extent, but should not be indulged in to an extent that savors of European or monarchial formalities and methods. Nominating proceedings forty or fifty years ago were very different, much simpler, more prompt and in accordance with true Americanism.

Let us refer to the case of the great Abraham Lincoln. His first nomination was made in the month of May, 1860, at Chicago. On the 23rd of that month a committee went to Springfield, Ill., his home, to inform him of his nomination. His letter of acceptance contained only twelve lines and one hundred and fifty words as found in H. J. Rayman's Life of Lincoln. It was merely one of thanks, acceptance and approval of the Chicago platform.

He was renominated by the Republican convention in Baltimore June 27, 1864. He was waited on by a committee, headed by Gov. Wm Denison of Ohio, at the White House, to inform him of his second nomination, unanimous, for the Presidency. His reply, as before, was by letter containing twenty lines and two hundred words. He simply accepted the nomination with grateful thanks, with an approval of the platform upon which his nomination was made. His language was direct, explicit, and clear, with a meaning which none could fail to understand, and even feel. Such was Lincoln at all times and upon all occasions. But what can the many do with the letters or speech of acceptance of W. H. Taft, our candidate, consisting of 14,000 words? Who has the time to read them?

This paper is not intended as a criticism of the doings at the present day of the two great political parties, but rather to show how much more simple similar proceedings were conducted in former times, and thus show the contrast between now and then.

This comes from one who has voted at sixteen Presidential elections in the good old State of Maryland, always one way. Only a few such alive.

MOUNTAIN CHAUTAUQUA OPENED TUESDAY NIGHT

With An Excellent and Varied Program of the Highest Class.

ATTENDANCE WAS VERY LARGE

For the First Night of The Season—What The People Are To Expect The Succeeding Nights During The Month of August.

The Twenty-Sixth Annual Session of the Mountain Chautauqua at Mountain Lake Park, which has brought wealth and fame, intellectual and spiritual uplift to the thousands of people patronizing it in the years gone by, opened on Tuesday evening with a high-class and varied program of music, readings and moving pictures.

In addition to the published program Dr. W. L. Davidson, the Superintendent made an address to the audience, which was larger than for many years past on the opening night. He outlined the great amount of labor necessary to secure the lecturers and others who are to appear on the platform and said that an amount approaching the sum of $5,000 had been expended in making the program for this year, all done upon faith that the people would respond with their patronage and thus reimburse the management and the Association.

Dr. Davidson was followed in his remarks by Dr. Chas. W. Baldwin, President of the Association, who uttered many warm words of welcome and predicted that the year 1908 would be a record breaker. Dr. Davis, superintendent of the Association and also Dean of the Summer Schools, appealed for the support of the people in maintaining the various schools already organized at the Park.

With the people of Garrett county, who are largely benefitted by the Chautauqua, seconding the admirable endeavor made by the management in selecting and arranging the program for this season so as to provide not only an attractive and popular means of entertainment, but also a high class and intellectual one, such as would appeal to Chautauqua frequenters and lead to the support due the effort, Garrett county could have within her borders the best Chautauqua in the country.

The entertainment Tuesday night was highly enjoyed by those present.

The prominent features on the program for the week are as follows: Friday the Annual Lutheran Reunion, with a lecture at 11.00 a. m. by Rev. A. Wirt Lowther, on "The Art of Seeing Things," and at 3.00 p. m. a lecture, "Snakespeare as An Apostle of Christianity," by Frederick Warde, the great actor. At 8.00 a grand evening entertainment of music and readings. Saturday, 11.00 a.m., lecture, "The Mission of the Poet," Rev. Lowther; at 2.00 p. m., lecture, "Peep at Parliament Through a Woman's Eyes," by Mrs. Philip Snowden, London, England, and grand musical entertainment in the evening. On Sunday at 11.00 a. m. Mrs. Philip Snowden will preach and at 7.00 p. m., grand eventide concert. No charge for admission on Sunday. Monday, at 8.00 p. m., Rosani, the famous juggler, and music by the Dailey Quartette. Tuesday, at 8.00 p. m., lecture, "Robert E. Lee," Dr. Richard Wilkinson, a great Southern orator. Wednesday, 11.00 a. m., lecture, "The 20th Century Man," by Dr. Wilkinson, and at 8.00 p. m. grand concert. Thursday at 11.00 a. m., lecture, "George Washington," by Rev. H. C. Millington, of McKeesport, Pa., and at 8.00 p. m. lecture, "Little Jack Horner," by President Carl G. Doney, of West Virginia Wesleyan University, Buckhannon, W. Va.

The greatest question of the season at Mountain Lake Park was "settled" Tuesday night by a generous rain. We mean the dust question.

The bazar and fete given by the ladies of the Civic Club, Tuesday afternoon, was a great success.

If there was doubt in the mind of any one as to the success of the present Chautauqua it was dispelled by the appearance of Mr. Stewart Ingles, of Uniontown, Pa. We have noticed that we have had a successful season every year that Mr. Ingles was present.

The advance sale of season tickets this year was the greatest in the history of the Mountain Chautauqua.

The Prohibition Conference which was in session here from Friday until Monday was largely attended. The speakers were all eloquent and forceful and the large audience on Sunday were delighted with the addresses of Messrs. Stewart, Watkins and Howard. On Sunday night a great audience was held for over two hours by the eloquence and humor of Mr Howard. The candidate for Vice-President on the Prohibition ticket made a good impression.

Mr. Lee N. Hayden and wife spent Sunday in Westernport, Md.

Mr. Hamill Spedden and family, of Fairmont, W. Va., are occupying a cottage in Cosy Row for the season.

The Kindergarten, under Miss Susan P. Pollock and her assistant, Miss Daugherty, started with a large class of little ones and a number of normal scholars.

Mrs. R. M. Sanks and son Harold and family are occupying the Sanks cottage.

Mr. and Mrs. U. A. Clayton are in their beautiful cottage.

Mrs. M. A. Yost is a guest of her sister, Mrs. Cornwall, at the Pennsylvania cottage on E street.

Mr. William Mallette and family, of Pittsburg, Pa., are in their cottage opposite the ticket office.

Messrs. John D. Hayden and Albert White have been out for several days scattering ten thousand handbills giving the program of the great excursion day, tomorrow. The programs were distributed in Cumberland, Fairmont and Clarksburg and intervening points. A great crowd is expected in the Park on that day.

Don't forget the preaching service at the M. E. church Sunday evening.

Mr. Alexander Lower, one of the best known citizens of our community died at his home two miles south of Mountain Lake Park Monday and was buried on Tuesday after services in Wesley Chapel conducted by the pastor, Rev. E. J. Westfall. Mr. Lower was born and spent all his life in this immediate vicinity. He was universally esteemed by all who knew him. His age was 66 years 5 months and 11 days.

A movement is on foot to increase the stock of the Mountain Lake Park Association to $100,000, the proceeds to be used to largely extend the limits of the lake and make other improvements. The contemplated extension would bring the lake down to the railroad station, covering most of the ball grounds and make a body of water that could be called a lake. This and the other improvements contemplated would cost in the neighborhood of $50,000 to $75,000 and would make Mountain Lake Park an up-to-date summer resort.

Most of our hotels and boarding houses are full and still the people are coming on every train. Let them come and they will be taken care of. Many of our summer residents and cottagers throw open their houses to furnish additional room in case of unexpected crowds.

A HIGH PRICE OBTAINED FOR ROAD BONDS

Members of the State Board of Public Works Pleased Over Sale.

Maryland's financial credit was demonstrated to be all right Saturday, when the Board of Public Works received and accepted a bid of the Safe Deposit and Trust Company of Baltimore for $100,000 of the state's stock at $100.05. This is the first sale of the $5,000,000 stock authorized by the last legislature for good roads. The bid, which was the only one submitted, was at the rate of one-half per cent. above par. The stock bears interest at the rate of 3½ per cent. per annum.

The sale of stock will be followed by other sales, as money is needed from time to time to meet expenditures for improvement of public roads. Of the total issue of $5,000,000 authorized by the General Assembly the $1,000,000 will be turned over to Baltimore and will be expended in improving the turnpikes leading into the city from the country.

Governor Crothers, Comptroller Hering and Treasurer Vandiver, who constitute the Board of Public Works were greatly gratified at the bid of the Safe Deposit and Trust Company. While it was the only bid, they believe that it has fixed the price for bids which will be submitted for later issues of state stock. The high price is all the more gratifying, according to Treasurer Vandiver, because at this time there is no demand for state securities by trust companies as a guarantee as required by law.

The bid is viewed wholly as an investment, and as such it takes rank with United States bonds which pay 3 per cent. Government bonds are, however, in extraordinary demand for national banks for circulation purposes.

When Maryland went into the market, two years ago, to buy state stock as an offset, under the Constitution, to the sale of the state's interest in the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, and later of the state's interest in the Washington branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, that stock was bought at a figure somewhat below par. Hence, the greater qualification yesterday that the stock was sold above par.

In 1904 the state stock sold at 102.16⅔ the annual interest rate being 3½, but those were the times when there was an extraordinary demand for state securities. The income from the sale went at once into the state's sinking fund.

When all of the $5,000,000 stock for road improvement shall have been disposed of the state will have a total indebtedness of about $12,000,000. Against the state debt there is a sinking fund of over $4,000,000. When viewed from all sides of the total state debt, plus the issue of $5,000,000 for roads, will only be slightly in excess of the new loan, for the Northern Central annuity of $90,000 and other investments by the state must be taken into consideration.

FIKE.

Cutting oats is the work of the farmers at the time.

The weather last week has been extremely nice for all kinds of outdoor work.

A couple of horse traders passed through this place with a number of horses.

Mr. Lloyd K. Fike expects take a pleasure trip to Keyser some time in the near future.

Messrs Joseph Bowser, George Bowser and Wm. L. Fike made a trip to Pittsburg, Pa., on last Sunday and they say they had a good time.

Mr. Jacob Dellinger, wife and little daughter, were in this section last week picking huckleberries.

It seems that Mr. L. K. Fike feels very proud of his new horse and buggy for he drives out so much that every one who don't have a horse and buggy to drive should get one at once.

The air of the evenings is now filled with the voices of the Katy-dids and by what the old people say we can expect frost in the next six week.

Wm H. Thomas helped Geo. W. Van. sickle put up a big stack of hay on last Friday.

Miss Nellie Thomas came home a short time ago from Pittsburg, where she had been working for a while.

GARRETT COUNTY DAY AT MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK

Wednesday, August 12th, Set Apart For Our Own People.

SOME GARRETT COUNTY TALENT

Will Appear and Assist In the Entertainment of the Local People in Addition to the Assembly Talent Heretofore Engaged.

Wednesday, August 12th, will be a great day at the Mountain Chautauqua. Besides Rev. Hilas H. Miller, at 9 a. m., Dr. Richard Wilkinson on "The Twentieth Century Man," at 11 a. m., Miss Mary Brevard Roberts, at 4 p. m., there will be a grand concert at 8 o'clock in the evening. A special features of the day will be the appearance of a number of talented Garrett countians on the program.

The management at this time is unable to definitely announced the names of those selected, but the residents of Garrett county may rest assured that Dr. Davidson, the superintendent, will very gladly recognize talent wherever it exists, and he will do what he can to set high the ideals before the young people of this county.

Mountain Lake Park has meant much to Garrett county, and we are sure that the people of Garrett county will be glad of this opportunity to show their appreciation of the same. Let the people of the county set Wednesday, Aug. 12th, apart as Garrett County Day. Put aside for the day the ordinary avocations of life, and from every part of the county let there come up to Mt. Lake Park a large company of those interested in intellectual things.

A special Band Concert at 2 o'clock will be given in honor of the residents of Garrett county that may be present.

The day's program will have as its crowning feature the Grand Concert in the evening. The Daily Quartette, without a rival in America; John Cheshire, the world's greatest harpist; Mrs. Zoe Pearl Park, contralto; Prof. Emanuel Schmauk, cellist will delight and entertain the audience with their choicest selections. In addition to these great artists, several numbers will be given by resident Garrett countians.

We suggest that the people of the county make this a great county basket picnic

$50 Reward.

I will pay a reward of $50 to anyone for evidence of the guilt of the person or persons who have written letters and mailed the same, the language used therein having a tendency to point to me as the author.

FEW SEEK HONOR TO OPPOSE PEARRE

Republicans Likely to Have Things Easy in Sixth District.

ROCKVILLE, Aug., 3—The Democratic nomination in the Sixth Congressional district to oppose Col. Geo. A. Pearre seems to be going a-begging. With the nominating convention but three weeks off, there are no avowed aspirants for the honor, and it begins to look as if some difficulty will be experienced in inducing anyone to make the race. The party leaders in this county are perfectly at sea as to what the nominating convention will do. They say this county will present no candidate to the convention, and stands ready to support any good man.

It was at the request of Gilmore S. Hamill, a Garrett county lawyer, that it was decided to hold the convention at Oakland, and the leaders see in this a hope that a Garrett county man may be induced to make the fight. H. Dorsey Etchison, of Frederick, and Clerk Young of the Circuit Court for Allegany county are also considered possibilities.

The present indications are that no matter whom the Democrats name, Colonel Pearre will have the easiest fight of his career.

Fatal Accident To J. A. Davis.

Mr. J. A. Davis, of Beryl, near Bloomington, met with a fatal accident at Dill, on the Western Maryland railroad Saturday evening. While on duty as fireman, a switch signal post struck him, cutting his side very badly. He was removed to Hoffman Hospital, Keyser, but nothing could be done to save his life. His remains were taken to his home Friday morning and interment made at Bloomington, on Tuesday evening. A wife and three children survive him, together with a mother, four brothers and four sisters. He was born and reared near Long Run, W. Va., but had been an honored resident of Beryl for several years.

Lawn Fete.

On Thursday evening, Aug. 6, the ladies of the Presbyterian church will hold a lawn fete at the home of Mrs. S. T. Jones, Second street. Supper, ice cream, cake, candies and fancy article for sale. Gate open at five o'clock. Should rain prevail the affair will be postponed till Friday evening, Aug, 7. A liberal patronage is solicited.

Send In Your Samples.

All land owners, in or near the Youghiogheny River valley, are requested to send samples of all the coal, iron ore, fireclay, kaolin, glass sand, lime and building stone, or other minerals found on their lands, to the office of the Youghiogheny Light and Power Company, room 14, First National Bank Building, Oakland, Md., where they will be labeled for exhibiton.

Let Us Restore the Old Idea of Personal Responsibility.

By Judge GEORGE GRAY of Delaware.

WE HAVE GOT TOO FAR AWAY FROM THE OLD IDEALS OF INDIVIDUAL LIBERTY AND OF PERSONAL RESPONSIBILITY. THERE IS TOO MUCH CLAMOR FOR A RADICAL CHANGE IN THE CHARACTER OF OUR INSTITUTIONS AND THE OBJECTS OF OUR LAW. THE OLD PRINCIPLES CAN BE USED TO CONTROL MODERN BUSINESS METHODS AND PREVENT THE GOVERNMENT FROM ENGAGING IN INDUSTRIAL ENTERPRISES.

The law can be brought into play to deal with transactions rather than with methods of business, and through it we can reach the individual who is responsible for unlawful combinations. It can force corporations to analyze their organizations and NAME THE INDIVIDUALS RESPONSIBLE for each class of their transactions.

People have absorbed the idea that, as corporations have grown much larger than the states and beyond the control of the latter, therefore they must be dealt with by a federal system of regulation with which the states must not interfere. THERE IS NO SUCH THING AS CORPORATE PRIVILEGES AND STANDING out of the realm of ordinary citizenship and individual responsibility.

As the result of a confused thinking and jumbling of ideas and theories have been born IMPOSSIBLE PRINCIPLES OF LAW. As soon as we reject these things and substitute common sense and feasible law we will introduce a comprehensible policy into business

Like President Wilson of Princeton, I believe we shall never moralize society by fining or even dissolving corporations. We shall only inconvenience it. We shall moralize it only when we make up our minds as to what transactions are reprehensible and bring those transactions home to INDIVIDUALS WITH THE FULL PENALTIES OF THE LAW.

WE ARE TO KEEP OR LOSE OUR PLACE OF DISTINCTION AMONG THE NATIONS BY KEEPING OR LOSING OUR FAITH IN THE PRACTICABILITY OF INDIVIDUAL LIBERTY.

A New Home In a New Country For the Old Indian of Old Ideas.

By ALEXANDER POSEY, Creek Indian Poet and Editor.

THE palmy days of the Indian were twenty years ago, BEFORE THE WHITE MAN INVADED the land of the Five Civilized Tribes. Every Indian owned his own cabin in the midst of free woods and open ranges. The deer ranged in the near hills, and in the creek bottoms his cattle and hogs increased and fattened on the never failing mast and grass. Horses were plentiful and cheap. A small patch furnished corn, beans and pumpkins in abundance.

This was happiness for the Indian. The licensed traders were few and select, and of other white men there were none.

Then came that ADVANCE AGENT OF A HIGHER CIVILIZATION known as the lightning rod man. He found that the Indian had both money and credit and that his word was as good as his note. He took money and left the lightning rod. The next comer was the sewing machine man. He left a machine in the Indian's hut that made music like a busy bee and took what cash the lightning rod man left.

THEN CAME THE PASTURE MAN, THE GREATEST EVIL OF ALL, FOR HE CORRUPTED THE TRIBAL GOVERNMENTS, FENCED UP THE RANGE, KILLED OFF THE GAME AND RAN OFF THE INDIAN'S YEARLINGS. THE FLOODGATES WERE NOW OPEN, AND THE CALENDAR CLOCK MAN, THE GALE HARROW MAN, THE BUGGY MAN, THE FAMILY TREE MAN AND THE RANGE COOK STOVE MAN POURED IN LIKE A MILL RACE FROM THE FOUR POINTS OF THE COMPASS. THE INDIAN'S CABIN WAS FULL, BUT HIS LARDER AND HIS PURSE WERE EMPTY.

Only allotment of lands and statehood were wanting TO COMPLETE HIS WOE, and these already were appearing on the horizon no larger than a man's hand. The signs grew into the Dawes commission, the commission into the carpetbagger. They were both fruitful and multiplied, and soon the material for another state was at hand.

A million and a half white men cried unto congress for statehood, and statehood came in accordance with the American principle, the greatest good to the greatest number.

But THE INDIAN IS THE SAME INDIAN of twenty years ago. He has an allotment, but no farm; he has citizenship, but no trade or profession; he has property and franchise, but he can neither dispose of one or use the other to advantage. We speak thus of the full blood Indians. They are 1,000 years behind the civilization which has engulfed them.

Regardless of the fact that he has let the calendar clock run down, that he has let the steel range cook stove, which he could not get in his cabin, rust under the brush arbor and that he has let the Gale harrow fall to pieces in the fence corner, he is expected to pick up the white man's burden and walk off with it.

THE ONLY SOLUTION OF THE INDIAN PROBLEM IS A NEW HOME IN A NEW COUNTRY, AND THE GOVERNMENT SHOULD AID THE INDIAN IN GETTING IT.

Build Up Schools Rather Than Armies.

By Vice President FAIRBANKS.

I WOULD rather see the people spend their money in BUILDING UP GREAT SCHOOLS, colleges and universities, churches and cathedrals than see them spend unduly for expanding armies and navies. The armies of young men and women who are trained in schools, colleges and universities are the armies which are DESTINED TO WIN THE VICTORIES OF THE FUTURE which shall most dignify and glorify American achievement. It is in the fullest degree essential that the schools should teach the beneficence of American institutions.

SONG BIRDS ARE A NATIONAL ASSET

Not a Sentiment, But Estimated in Dollars and Cents.

One idea in the wealth of the country that is seldom considered is the value of song birds. Some may say this is purely sentimental and that the pleasure their songs and bright colors give cannot be reckoned in dollars and cents.

Nevertheless, it is not difficult to show that the birds have an actual money value.

In his war against insects man's most valuable ally is the birds.

The greatest number of birds live on insects. Even those which live on seeds when fully grown, are fed on insects while in the nest. As young birds grow fast, it takes many a worm to satisfy their hearty appetites.

A feature in the warfare of birds on bugs is the system with which it is carried on. Nothing is haphazard, but each species of bird has its own field of work and in many instances certain insects to which it is partial. In winter, when there seems to be no activity on the part of the insects, one might expect the birds to take a rest, but there is no cessation in the work of those which live on insects found on the bark of the trees.

Watch a flock of chickadees, says Albert A. Johnson in the New York Evening Post. They alight in trees and examine each twig for grubs or eggs, the little black eyes rarely missing a mouthful of food. Birds even swing head down from the branches that the under side may not escape inspection. Nuthatches and brown creepers explore the trunk and with their long, sharp bills dig many an insect from its winter quarters.

The woodpeckers have a work all their own. The small downy woodpecker is a good representative of his family. His bill is strong and sharp, his tail feathers are stiffened to serve as a brace while he clings upright against the trunk. He cocks his head to one side, and his quick ear hears a borer under the bark. A few blows with the bill and a hole is dug, then a long tongue barbed at the tip is shot out and the borer is speared and snatched from its resting place.

As insects increase with the coming of warm weather, birds return from the south to fight them. One watches the cheerful robin hopping over the lawn. He listens an instant, then pokes his bill deep into the ground. Up comes his head and he has captured a worm. The flicker though a woodpecker, is an imitator of the the robin. He is fond of ants and his big bill makes a good pick to dig them from their hills. Meadow larks and quail live entirely on insects found close to the ground. Were these birds strictly protected in the southwest, instead of being hunted, the boweevil might not have things so much his own way in the cotton fields.

The trees, when in foliage, are full of birds. Small warblers and viroes take care of eggs and little worms while thrushes, orioles and catbirds attend to those of larger size. The rose-breasted grosbeak earns the fight to favor by the way he eats potato bugs. Some bugs are a choice delicacy to the cuckoo, which slips quietly through the trees, as it hunts for them.

Insects on the wing are not safe: for swallows and swifts in rapid flight skim back and forth over the meadows, and without pausing catch many a small gnat. The birds called flycatchers also take their prey on wing, but they remain quiet on a perch and only swoop down on insects, which come near at hand.

Many birds have for years been the victims of a bad reputation, given to them unjustly. The crow is one. Investigation has shown that he is not so black as he is painted and, while he spoils some corn, he makes up for this in the noxious life he destroys. Hawks and owls have also been condemned, and merciless war has been waged on them. Now it is known that only a few species of hawk touch chickens and that both hawk and owls in the amount of ermin they kill are entitled to the friendship and protection of the farmer.

Some birds while not insect destroyers, do good work as scavengers. Those who have been in the South know the turkey buzzard. High over head he soars. His keen eyes sweep over miles of country. Let a dead animal come within his sight and he is on the spot. He is soon joined by others, who aids him in disposing of what would soon become offensive. Along the northern beaches the gulls do a similar work in keeping them clean.

FASTEST THINGS IN THE WORLD.

Automobiles, Locomotives, Motor Boats and Flying Machines Are Listed.

The world is in a hurry. Wherever we go we see trains whirling by, autos speeding in clouds of dust, men striving on foot, on wheel, on horse or in water, to make speed records. So writes Thomas D. Richter in the Technical World Magazine for July. But do we realize what may be done while the minute hand of the clock revolves or in an hour of the twentieth century haste?

Standing at the cross-road, we see a mere black speck in the distance growing with seeming sloth. We hear a purring sound, increasing, developing, then leaping into a roar like thunder. Volumes of dust rise like smoke from the mouth of a firebreathing monster and the twentieth century dinosaur flies, screams past—merely an automobile racing at a rate of from 80 to 120 miles in an hour.

We stand at the railway crossing. In the distance an indistinct object winks into view, far beyond where the two lines of shining rails meet together upon the track bed. On it comes with a swift spreading circumference: it whizzes by in a breath-taking rush and is gone almost before we realize that it is a modern electric train. Such a train in Germany has been run at the rate of 130.4 miles an hour.

On the seashore we hear a scream, thin and piercing. A boat siren shrills its warning. Sometimes rises from the water, snorting, splashing and tearing frantically through the ocean waves. It is past and ere we get our glasses to bear upon it it is distant again. Merely a racing motorboat, trying to make more than thirty miles an hour on the watery turf.

Let us pause and take breath. Are we speed crazy? Sit back and take a bird's-eye view of this old earth and you surely must conclude that something is the matter. Some strange and potent germ has got into the blood of the denizens of this planet, inoculating us with a mania—speed mania. It has fairly turned the brain of Mother Earth.

A discussion of the speed craze and its results follows, illustrated with photographs of the "fastest thing in the world."

NEXT CENSUS IS TWO YEARS HENCE.

An Army of Seventy Thousand People Will be Requieed To Do the Work.

It will require an army of 70,000 people to take the thirteenth census in 1910.

The task of making the enumeration of the 99,000,000 of people in the United States, Alaska, Hawaii, and Porti Rico and in Guam, Samoa and the Panama Canal Zone will be one of enormous proportions. It will be the most gigantic work of enumeration that has ever been attempted in this or any other country, and it is intended to reach the acme of correctness and thoroughness. Not merely a count and compilation concerning the population alone, it will include a census of agriculture, manufactures, mines and quarries.

Director S. N. D. North, of the Census Bureau, is already getting ready for the thirteenth census. He has been planning it for a year or more.

It was hoped by Mr. North that the Crumpacker bill to provide for the thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses would be passed the last session of Congress. But it failed of enactment along with numerous other measures of importance by reason of the rush at the close of the session and the anxiety of the Congress leaders to hurry the session to an end.

The Crumpacker bill, however, will doubtless be passed early the next session. It is the first bill of high privilege on the House calendar, and it is expected it will be taken up the first or second day of the session and disposed of by the House. It has not yet been acted on by the Senate Committee on Census, that committee having held back until the House had opportunity to pass the measure. No delay in the Senate, either in committee or on the floor, is anticipated.

It will cost about $14,000,000 to take the thirteenth census, but this is not carried in the Crumpacker bill, as it is on the House calendar. It was in the bill at first, but the Speaker and Chairman Tawney, of the House Committee on Appropriations, thought it unwise to make so large an authorization a year before it would be used, and there was also a feeling that the appropriation should be put in one of the regular appropriation bills, as the legislative, executive and judicial bill. The coming session of Congress, will no doubt appropriate liberally for census purposes.

A census of the Phillippines will not be included in the coming decennial census, for the reason that one was taken in 1903, and it is doubtful whether the Philippine Government would care to bear the cost of another enumeration so soon.

Important changes in the taking and compilation of the census and in the method of publication of the returns will be made. For one thing, the returns will be greatly condensed. The twelfth census required 10 volumes. It is the expectation of Director North that the thirteenth census will be published in six volumes or seven at the outside. The mortality statistics of the last census will be dropped. They were found unsatisfactory as collected at the last decennial census. The reduced number of volumes will considerably lower the cost of the thirteenth census.

A change that is believed to be in the interest of accuracy and completeness will be made as of April 15 instead of June 1, as has been the case heretofore. The reason for this is interesting. The population of the United States is exhibiting more and more a tendency to go to the seashore and the mountains and the lakes to avoid the hot weather, and it is going much earlier than formerly. The result is that enumerators who are set to work June 1 are certain to find many houses deserted and their occupants gone away for the summer. It is thought April 1 will be a much more satisfactory date for this reason. At that time of the year the exodus to the resorts will not be begun.

Provision will be made for 336 district supervisors and there will be several thousand in the clerical force in the Census Bureau establishment in Washington. The number of enumerators will be 65,000. As already mentioned, the total force needed to do the work will approximate 70,000.

The clerical force will be under civil service, but it is thought to be impracticable to attempt to mak the enormous force of enumerators subject to the civil service requirements. Mr. North considers it out of the question to try to select the enumerators by civil service methods, though objections have been raised by friends of the civil service to the proposition that its workings should not be extended to census enumerators.

Is is apparent that those politicians who are hostile to the civil service see excellent opportunities in the selection of a vast body of enumerators in the old-fashioned way, through political preferment, but there is unquestionably room for doubt whether a workable civil service scheme could be devised to meet the situation.

Life used to have a rosy hue,
But now it's turning green.
A measly verdance meets my view
In each domestic scene.
I'm pretty sure I never thought
I had the self restraint
That I have shown since Mary bought
That gallon can of paint.

She bought it to renew a chair
That age and use had worn,
And ever since with blank despair
And rage and grief I'm torn.
The color isn't to my taste,
The odor makes me faint,
But Mary doesn't like to waste—
She's using up that paint.

Perhaps a pint had been enough,
Perhaps a little less,
But there's a gallon of the stuff
That causes my distress.
She's freshened this and freshened that
Till it would vex a saint.
It's green as grass all through the flat
Since Mary bought that paint.

The Affair of the Count.

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

"Of course I do not wish to marry the count," said Miss Bernard petulantly. "If Aunt Dorinda gave you to understand"— She paused significantly.

"She did give me to understand that the affair was settled," muttered Emory, his gloomy eyes fixed on the flashing sails in the harbor. "In fact, she intimated that Americans cut no ice in the matter."

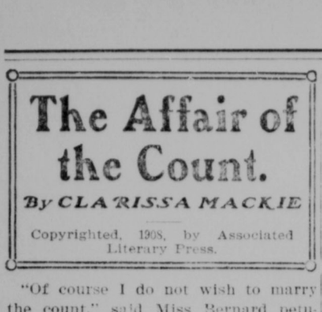
"Poor auntie loves a title," sighed Jean, ruffing her pretty hair distractedly. "Why couldn't she marry the count herself?"

Emory got upon his feet with sudden alacrity. There was fire in his red brown eyes and determination in the lines of his strong jaw.

"If Miss Leigh marries the count, will you marry me, Jean?" he asked delightedly.

Miss Bernard stared; then she laughed merrily.

"Why not? With auntie's craving for a titled position satisfied, I believe I might— Don't—not yet!" She warded off Emory's impulsive movement and sought refuge behind a high back-



"WHY—WHY," STAMMERED MISS LEIGH CONFUSEDLY—"WHY NOT?"

ed chair. "And now be off about your business, Mr. Marriage Broker!"

She smiled derisively at him. Emory picked up his hat and ran down the steps.

"What are your engagements for this evening, Jean?" he asked calmly.

"The dance at the Bicknells', of course!"

"And Miss Leigh—and the count?"

"They dine with Mrs. Frake and come to the dance afterward."

"I will see you at Bicknells', Jean. Come early, dear," he said brazenly.

"Run away, you bold, bad, mere American!" retorted Miss Bernard saucily; then she watched him as he strode down the path and on to the shore road, a warm light in her gray eyes. "I would whether auntie married the count or not," she murmured mysteriously.

* * * * * * *

"Eet ees ze beautifulness of ze evening zat appeals to my lovaire soul," gurgled Count Leon Despagne as he joined Miss Dorinda Leigh on the veranda of the Frake mansion.

Miss Leigh adjusted a lorgnette to her high bridged nose and peered up at the star jeweled sky and then over the moonlit bay, with its hundred anchor lights vaguely indicating the whereabouts of pleasure craft.

"It is very pleasant," she replied practically, "but of course it cannot compare with your own country! The romance, the beauty, the stateliness of the old chateau"— She sighed luxuriously.

"Ah, eet ees glorious, ze vale de Loire, ze magnificent Chateau Despagne. Ah, mademoiselle, what ees all of eet without your beautiful niece? You haf been so kind, so gracious, you are quite—sure?" His voice quavered doubtfully.

"There is no doubt about it, count," returned Miss Leigh in a tone of decision. "Of course Miss Bernard is quite young, but I assure you she is not as thoughtless as she may appear, and I am quite sure that your affection is reciprocated."

The count grasped her thin white hand with an ecstatic cry. At that moment a servant approached them. "A note for Miss Leigh," he said.

Miss Leigh went to the drawing room window and perused the note in the stream of light that sifted through the lace draperies. When she turned her face was quite white and her hands shook tremulously.

"Order my car around, please," she said to the servant, and as he departed she whispered to the count: "This is terrible! I have just received news that my niece has eloped with that villainous young Emory! Will you join me in the pursuit, dear count?"

"Sacre!" muttered the count bitterly as he followed Miss Leigh to the drawing room to make their adieus. Five minutes later they were seated in the tonneau of the huge vehicle and whirling rapidly along the shore road toward the east.

As the miles curled out from under the tires Miss Leigh gasped scanty particulars of the flight.

"It was an anonymous letter, from some friend, I suppose. They eloped from the Bicknell dance in his automobile, going toward the east."

"Zere are so many cars," wldimpered the count, turning up the collar of his light overcoat, "we cannot identify ze villain." His thin voice shook with rage.

"It is a white car. There are not many going this way. You see we are meeting some. None of them is white. I have ordered Francois to spare nothing to make the time." The chauffeur, bending low over the steering wheel, let out the speed a little more, and the machine swayed from side to side with a zipping, tearing grind that precluded any further conversation.

Watchful and observant, Miss Leigh and her guest sank into silence, and an hour passed as they whirred their way through town and village, eluding vigilant constables with reckless daredevilry on the part of Francois, who was drunk with a lust of speed. On the outskirts of the city Miss Leigh ordered him to slow down, and presently the machine panted motionless at the roadside while Miss Leigh and the count took counsel together.

At that instant, out of the darkness behind them, there shot a triangular ray of light, and a white car swooped down and stopped beside them.

"Oh, Aunt Dorinda! How could you?" came Jean's reproachful young voice.

"Count, I am sure you can make some explanation!" thundered Emory in stentorian tones.

"How could I what? What do you mean, Jean? Such impertinence on your part, Mr. Emory! Why—I understood—I received a note saying that you and Jean were eloping, and of course—of course—the count and I were pursuing you!"

"It didn't look like it, Miss Leigh," said Emory in a muffled voice. "It would be most ridiculous for Jean and me to elope, for Jean is going to marry me anyway, but as soon as we heard of your el—er—that is, as soon as we heard that the count had kidnaped you"—

"Eet ees a lie! I haf not done zat thing!" vociferated the count's voice out of the darkness. "Eet ees ze young mademoiselle zat I lofe! Without her I am—deespairing beggar for lofe!"

"You are making a scene, count," remonstrated Miss Leigh coldly. "As for you, Jean, you have broken my heart. I did not know you were so deceitful! When I spoke about the chateau and"—

"Mademoiselle," whispered the count with passionate intensity, "why not conzole my loneliness—and go wiz me? We will enjoy ze plaisure—ze beauty of Loire"—

"Why—why," stammered Miss Leigh confusedly—"why not?"

Learn to Obey.

Learn to obey! By obedience I do not mean a merely outward submission to outward force and authority, but the voluntary subordination of one's own will under the will of a better and higher intelligence. He who has not learned to do this in childhood will have great difficulty in learning it in later life; he will rarely get beyond the deplorable and unhappy state that vacillates between outward submission and uproarious rebellion. No greater wrong can be done to childhood than the one caused by our desire to spare it the necessity of obeying. Whoever conceives the duty of the educator to consist in giving in to all desires of the child, in gratifying all its wishes, makes himself guilty of the gravest sin toward his child. He denies it what, in view of its future mission, it cannot afford to lose—namely, the exercise in voluntarily subordinating its own will under necessity, be it a natural or a social one.—Professor F. Paulson, University of Berlin, in Educational Review.

Strange Feats of Eye and Hand.

An expert who prided himself upon the smallness of his writing sent the president of the French academy a grain of wheat on which he had written 221 words. A Polish poet wrote all of Homer's "Illiad" on a piece of paper which could be rolled up small enough to go into a nutshell.

In the sixteenth century a man named Mark offered to Queen Elizabeth a gold chain of fifty links. The chain was so fine it could not be seen unless it was put on a sheet of white paper. To prove its lightness Mark tied it to a fly, which flew away with it. The most curious fact in this matter, which required so extraordinary a facility of touch for making this ornament, was that Mark was a blacksmith, accustomed to all kinds of heavy tools all day long.

A Spaniard, Joseph Faba, made a carriage as large as a grain of wheat. Under a magnifying glass it was possible to see the interior fitted up with seats, every detail being carried out to perfection.

Sure of Water.

Sir Joseph Prestwich had bought in 1864 a small estate near Sevenoaks, on which he built a residence, but it was high up on a dry and treeless chalk down. Where was water to be found?

So confident was Prestwich in respect of water supply that he at once engaged an old well digger to sink a well 168 feet deep. The boring proceeded, but when a depth of 166 feet was reached the two workmen went to the city and sought an interview with their employer, whom they found at his desk. They explained that there was no sign of water and that in their opinion it was useless to bore to a greater depth. "Go on," was the quiet rejoinder. "You will come upon water tomorrow. You are within two feet of it." Next day it proved exactly as Prestwich had foretold, and ever after, among many of the denizens of the valley, he had the reputation, much to his amusement, of not being quite "canny."—"Life and Letters of Sir Joseph Prestwich."

Pursuit of Happiness a National Peril.

From President Hadley's Baccalaureate Address to the Graduating Class at Yale.

THE number of philosophies of life which have been devised is as great as the number of different varieties of human character. But to the civilized man of the present day there are four, and I believe only four, that appeal strongly, those of THE EPICUREAN, THE ASCETIC, THE STOIC AND THE CHRISTIAN. The Christian philosophy is the stoic philosophy with the human element added. "Whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's the same shall save it."

THE PHILOSOPHY OF CHRIST CALLS FOR NO LESS SACRIFICES THAN THE PHILOSOPHY OF THE STOIC, BUT IT CALLS FOR THEM IN WORDS WHICH READ NOT LIKE A JUDGMENT, BUT LIKE AN INSPIRATION.

Keep as much of the stoic view of life as there is in you. These are days when we have far too little of it. But superadd to it the Christian appeal to the whole man, the Christian recognition of comradeship, the Christian conception of personality, where GOD IS REVEALED IN ALL MEN BROTHERS TOGETHER, and most of all in our own elder brother Jesus Christ the righteous, who was in all points tempted as we are, yet without sin.

Not many of you will choose the philosophy of the ascetic. More, but not so many more, will seek to find their salvation in some form of stoicism. THE GREAT CHOICE LIES BETWEEN EPICUREANISM AND CHRISTIANITY. These are the two philosophies which are today contending with one another in close and not unequal strife. Much there is for the moment that favors the epicurean. The great extension of the fields of human happiness, the positive benefits to the community derived from the exercise of commercial self interest, the downfall of certain beliefs which until a few years ago were deemed essential parts of Christianity—all these tend to give a philosophy of calculated selfishness an advantage over the appeal of personal devotion.

Yet I firmly believe that THE SELFISH PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS MENACES ALIKE THE EFFICIENCY OF OUR INDIVIDUAL CITIZENS, THE STABILITY OF OUR INSTITUTIONS AND THE POWER OF RESISTANCE OF OUR COUNTRY TO DANGERS AND CALAMITIES and that the fate of the American people—nay, the fate of the whole civilized world—is bound up with the possibility of mantaining amid all these difficulties an essentially Christian philosophy of life.

GOD GRANT THAT LIGHT MAY BE GIVEN YOU TO SEE THESE THINGS IN SUCH FORM THAT AS EACH MINOR CHOICE ARISES YOU MAY REGULATE YOUR LIFE BY THE CHRISTIAN VIEW RATHER THAN THE SELFISH ONE, SO THAT WHENEVER THE GREAT DAY OF TRIAL COMES YOU MAY STAND FORTH AS LEADERS FOR THE SALVATION OF YOUR FELLOW MEN.

Eat Less, Drink Less, And "Cheer Up."

By Dr. HARVEY W. WILEY, Uncle Sam's Food Expert.

THOUSANDS of people are made sick in summer because they do not know how or what to eat. But the same criticism applies to the winter season as well. Few people follow definite rules.

MODERATE EATING, MODERATE DRINKING, MODERATE EXERCISE IN THE OPEN AIR AND CHEERFUL FRIENDS WILL KEEP ANY GOOD MAN ALIVE THROUGH THE SUMMER.

Eating in summer should be diminished by about one-quarter, inasmuch as the heat energy is one-quarter less than in winter.

EAT MEAT IN MODERATION. SELECT THE LIGHTER MEATS.

Fruits and vegetables are the normal diet for summer, provided they are cooked. If eaten raw, they should not be contaminated with pathogenic bacteria.

THE FESTIVE HIGHBALL AND THE MORE PLEBEIAN "SCUTTLE OF SUDS" ARE TO BE PUT ASIDE. Alcohol when oxidized is nothing but heat, and these summer days are hot enough. Should more alcohol be used than is oxidized the user gets poisoned. It is hard to tell during the heated season when the alcohol imbibed is going to stop oxidizing, so the safest plan is to cease imbibing.

Care should be taken against overindulgence in very cold drinks or frozen relishes. ON HOT DAYS NO BEVERAGES BELOW 60 DEGREES IN TEMPERATURE SHOULD BE TAKEN. Otherwise they are apt to produce what physicians describe as ice water dyspepsia. SODA WATER AND ICE CREAM ARE ALIKE BAD WHEN TAKEN IN LARGE QUANTITIES. Observe the law of moderation and eat and drink slowly.

FINALLY, BE CHEERFUL; IT MIGHT BE WORSE.

A Plea For a Business Man's Tariff.

By Senator A. J. BEVERIDGE of Indiana.

FOR the first time in our history American manufacturers are demanding a change in tariff methods. For the first time the manufacturing interests are in accord with all other great producing interests on the tariff—in accord with the stock growers, the meat packers, the farmers.

You want the tariff to be made modern. IT IS THE BUSINESS MEN WHO MUST DO BUSINESS UNDER THE TARIFF AND NOT THE POLITICIANS, and therefore you want a business man's tariff and not a politician's tariff. You want a scientific tariff, just to all interests and to all men, and not a log rolling tariff that does injustice to some interests in order to do more than justice to other interests. You want a tariff which will open the doors of foreign markets to your products, and, above all, you want a TARIFF BASED ON FACTS AND NOT ON SUPPOSITIONS.

Hubby Is Given Another Reminder by His Good Wife.

RECALLS A SAD OCCURRENCE

Remembrance of It Makes Her Want to Smash Things—Tells of Promises That Were Not Kept by the Head of the Household.

[Copyright, 1908, by T. C. McClure.]

Mr. Perkins had been out in the back yard trimming the scraggly limbs off a lone peach tree and trying to feel like a farmer when he noticed that Mrs. Perkins had a very serious look on her face.

"Aren't you feeling well, my dear?" he solicitously inquired.

"As well as usual," was the reply.

"Has any recollection of a sad event come over you?"

"Yes, sir, there has. I have just remembered a sad event that took place last December. I think it was about the 20th of the month. The remembrance of it makes me want to smash things."

"So? Let us see. I have my diary with me. We will turn to December.

THE SHELTER OF CATS AT NIGHT.

Here are the 18th, 19th and 20th. Um! I find that on the evening of the 20th it was snowing and blowing great guns. We were huddled about the cold stove and wondering if we should live to see spring. Um!"

"Well, what else?"

"You began to plan how we should fix up the grounds in the spring in case we did live, and I find that I promised you as follows:

"First.—To resod the lawn.

"Second.—To set out at least a dozen shade trees.

"Third.—To erect a grotto.

"Fourth.—To put up a tinkling fountain.

"Fifth.—To erect a greenhouse.

"All those promises are written down here, Mrs. Perkins, and divided off into paragraphs as I have given them to you. Do you wish to indulge in any appropriate remarks?"

"Yes, sir, I do!" she spicily replied. "Are you making any move to carry out a single one of the promises of December? You have gone out with an old dull jackknife and trimmed a half dead old peach tree—beyond that nothing. Were you deliberately lying to me when you made those promises?"

Did Not Expect Outburst.

"My dear Mrs. Perkins, to say that I have not expected this outburst for a week past would be to speak an untruth. To say that I am glad it has finally come and the agony is over with represents the bald facts. As the matter has been broached we will now discuss it from an unbiased standpoint."

"Oh, yes, you are going to wriggle in some of your philosophy to help you wriggle out of the situation, but I notify you that it won't go down, Mr. Perkins, you stand convicted."

"You speak of wriggling, my dear. I never wriggle. Worms wriggle, and I am no worm. I am guilty of using philosophy, but the earth and all therein are run on philosophic lines. Philosophy begins at the mouse trap and ends in glimpses at Mars. Let us now take up the matter of my promises."

"It will be of no use whatever."

"It was the night of Dec. 20, Mrs. Perkins, when you suddenly sprung the matter of improvements upon me. I was glad of it. I was not going to buy a Christmas present, and I hoped to make promises answer instead. Likewise it is a far cry from December to April. During the interval even the world might be wiped out."

"You expected to wriggle out," said Mrs. Perkins, with a severe look.

"The word 'wriggle' again. We will pass it, however, while I say that I consulted a gardener and found that it would cost about $200 to grade and sod the lawn. Even then he would not guarantee that it would not grow up to thistles, burdocks, plantains and the like. It was a financial risk that I did not think it wise to take. Besides the financial part of it, think of your disappointment had you stepped out on the new lawn some morning to find yourself surrounded by a hundred bull thistles!"

"Humph!"

Those Shade Trees.

"I promised you a dozen shade trees. When I came to make inquiry I was informed on all sides that shade trees set out in the spring were almost certain to die. No one would guarantee that they would live. There was $50 at risk. Besides that, suppose you had gone out some evening to sit beneath the umbrageous shade of the twelve and found them all as dead as doornails! Mrs. Perkins, there is imagination here as well as philosophy."

"Yes, I think there is a heap more of it!"

"I promised to erect a grotto. I read up on grottoes. I talked with coopers, blacksmiths and plumbers about grottoes. I had grottoes on my mind for a week, and then I gave it up. It was the consensus of opinion that a grotto served but the one purpose—the shelter of cats at night. We are charitable toward cats, Mrs. Perkins, but not so charitable as to build grottoes for them. Let them pass their nights in the wood shed or the vestibule."

"Yes, Mr. Perkins—lay it to the cats! You'll probably tell me that you are not going to put in a fountain because you fear that a whale may get into it!"

"No, Mr. Perkins; I shall tell you the bare truth. You wanted a fountain that would tinkle. There is a big difference between a fountain that squirts and one that tinkles. A tinkling fountain should tinkle all day and all night. The sound is soothing; it is romantic. The Romans had the tinkling art to perfection, but it has been lost in the shuffle. I must tell you that of the dozen plumbers consulted not one would guarantee a tinkle. They stood ready to guarantee a gush or a squirt, but a soft, melodious tinkle—no. Then why have a fountain at all? Why go to a great expense to get something disappointing? It wasn't for the want of talking tinkle that you won't see a tinkling fountain in the yard this summer. No; a whale did not enter into the case at all, but might have done so had I gone further into it."

She Gets Sarcastic.

"And the greenhouse, Mr. Perkins?" she sarcastically asked.

"I shall have to make a longer explanation regarding that. First, there is no place to build one without cutting off our light and view; second, the expense would be so great that every flower grown would cost us a quarter of a dollar; third, it would be to invite dampness, mold and moths, to say nothing of sickness; fourth, the advanced doctors and chemists declare flowers unhealthy; sixth, suppose we had a greenhouse, and you entered it some day when I was absent and then the door locked itself against you and I came home and found you dead! All these things and one more must be taken into consideration, my dear. That one more thing is green paint. It has become a scarce article, and the price is outrageous. We go ahead and build a greenhouse and then find that we can get no green paint. Is a greenhouse a greenhouse unless painted green? If painted any other color it may well be mistaken for a carpenter shop, a cobbler shop or a stable. I can imagine your feelings should we have a greenhouse painted sky blue and one of your lady friends came along and asked you if we were going to keep a pig!

"In conclusion, Mrs. Perkins, let me say"—

"Oh, you have wriggled along to the end, have you?" she interrupted.

"Mrs. Perkins, the word wriggle"—

"Just fits your case! Please excuse me for the rest of the evening. The strain on your intellect must have been tremendous!"

For five minutes after she left the room Mr. Perkins sat and stared into vacancy. Then he aroused himself, slapped his leg and exclaimed:

"I do and shall ever contend that a husband who won't promise in December to do certain things in April or May of the next year has no philosophy in his makeup!" M. QUAD.

THE REPUBLICAN

BENJ. H. SINCELL, EDITOR.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 6, 1908.

FOR PRESIDENT,
WILLIAM H. TAFT,
OF OHIO.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT,
JAMES S. SHERMAN,
OF NEW YORK.

FOR CONGRESS,
GEORGE A. PEARRE,
OF ALLEGANY COUNTY.

GARRETT COUNTY DAY.

By announcement appearing elsewhere in THE REPUBLICAN today it will be seen that the Mountain Lake Park Association, recognizing the important part played by the citizens of Garrett county in building and developing Mountain Lake Park into the leading summer resort of the country, Wednesday, August 12th, has been set apart as "Garrett County Day," upon which occasion all residents of the county, their visitors and friends are invited to assemble at the Park to hear the good things in store for them.

In addition to the regular Assembly talent which is to appear on the platform that day a number of talented Garrett countains will also be present and assist in the entertainment of their fellow-citizens. A special band concert will be given in the afternoon at two o'clock and at night some of the finest platform workers to the country will be presented.

We urge upon the readers of THE REPUBLICAN to respond in great numbers to the invitation extended by the management of the Park, thus giving the Association the encouragement it has so nobly won by the untiring energy displayed by its executive officers. Let all attend and make next Wednesday a day long to be remembered by Garrett county's noble citizens.

THERE is gratifying evidence that the War Department in Washington is making preparations for constructing ships for war in the air. The question is whether this belongs to the army or or navy department, since the aeroplanes, if successful, threaten to make war on the high seas obsolete and convert the naval monster of all nations into mere junk.

MR. BRYAN has never dared to assert his position on the negro question. For if he should say anything calculated to win the support of the negroes in the Northern States, where the negro vote counts for something, the white Democrats of the South would be up in arms against him. His only indiscretion was when he wrote that article in the Commoner standing squarely with the President on the Brownsville issue. Mr. Bryan and his party by tradition are opposed to the negro's participation in politics, and our colored citizens can expect nothing at the hands of the Democratic party. They owe allegiance to the Republican party not only for their emancipation, but for the friendly attitude that the party has always manifested toward the negro. Not as a member of a race, but as a citizen should the negro vote.

MAYBE MR. WARFIELD WILL HAVE HIS SUSPICIONS

"We could not ask Governor Warfield to go on the [Bryan] committee when it was first organized," said Mr. Field, "because he was not in favor of the nomination of Mr. Bryan, but he is too good a Democrat not to stand by the party now that its candidates have been named."—From an Interview with S. S. Field.

Which suggests the query, How many times is it necessary to throw a man downstairs to make him wonder if his room is not better than his company? Mr. Bryan is fond of telling the old story about a cowboy who while wearing a monumental "jag" attended a party to which he had not been invited. He was promptly thrown out, whereupon he promptly came back. Thrown out again and still the third time he picked himself up brushed himself off and remarked. "Those fellows can't fool me: they don't want me in there." To the Democratic organization of Maryland Mr. Warfield is a fine old packhorse, good enough to help pull the party along when it gets stalled, but who is considered presumptuous if he indicates any hankering for the good things which ought to be the portion of the man who does the work. If Mr. Warfield will consent to labor and when the task is finished go " 'way back and sit down" he will doubtless be regarded all round as one of the finest fellows in the land.

TAFT AND THE COLONIES.

Judge Taft pointed out in his letter of acceptance of the Republican nomination the direct benefits to the country's insular dependencies of the establishment of colonial relations. He also pointed out the common error with regard to the amount of expenditure upon the Philippine Islands. This, in fact, is not more than six millions a year. It is inconceivable that anyone should question the wisdom of the work done through Mr. Taft for the promotion of the well being of the natives, the development of their capacity for self-government, the establishment of law and order upon a firm footing and begrudge the money spent to achieve these results. The general benefit to humanity has been more than full compensation.

The Phillipines are well on toward self-support, and under a more favorable tariff relation will become abundantly productive for their own needs. Only when under the stress of severe crop failures for a single year did they fall short of the high average of productivity they have maintained under American rule. While this is all very gratifying, the fact remains that whatever the commercial worth of the islands, their chief value will ever be as a military post. The relations of this country to the East gives this character to the Philippines. Without their possession the United States would be impotent in Asia. They are therefore, of more practical worth than the lamp of Aladdin or any of the golden keys of fable that opened doors of treasure trove.

Mr. Taft in his Shanghai speech made it very clear that this country has no purpose to dispose of the islands, and that they were held not simply for their commercial value, but rather as a pledge that the open door in Asia would be kept open, and that the territorial integrity of China would be preserved. As president, Mr. Taft would make this policy emphatic. There is no possibility that any power would seek to test the sincerity of the man who has been the principal promoter of the destinies of the United States in the world relations. He is the greatest colonial expert in the world. He is a diplomat whose every effort has been crowned with success. So that as wise statesman, wise military expert, as colonial secretary—for that he virtually was—Mr. Taft is a singularly equipped character. It would be difficult to exaggerate the importance to the country of the presence of Mr. Taft in the White House; not simply for his present service, but also for his influence upon the future.

A decade or two is not a long time to look ahead. Yet in the course of two decades the South will be replete with the most active coal and iron industries in the world, and there will be centered in the Gulf States a collection of manufacturing cities with activities as great as those of Pittsburg and Burmingham, England. The Far Pacific will be the most valuable market of the Southern section. Already the South is producing cotton to the value of $700,000,000 annually. China is a large taker of this commodity, and the market in the Orient is absolute incalculable in extent. This is to be made almost wholly an American market.

But the story of trade need only be touched upon to indicate that the wand of destiny has been swung over the Orient and the future is big with promise for American enterprise. This supremacy of America may be challenged by its Asiatic rival, when the strategic worth of the Philippines would be made clear. Mr. Taft is the man to give the proper trend to the country in relation to colonial enterprise with reference to the tremendous world achievements of the American merchant. As a commercial asset he is worth the support of every man who has money invested in business. The right emphasis at the present moment is needed. Taft has struck the colonial keynote, and the country wants him to train it to sing the chorus of American enterprise across the Western seas.

SEVEN parties have placed presidential tickets in the field. The last nominated is that of the Independence party, with Thomas L. Hisgen, of Massachusetts, for President and Col. Jno. Temple Graves, of Georgia, for Vice-President.

The seven candidates for the Presidency are as follows:

Republican—William H. Taft.
Democratic—William Jennings Bryan.
People's Party—Thomas E. Watson.
Socialist—Eugene V. Debs.
Prohibition—Eugene W. Chafin.
Socialist Labor—Martin R. Preston.
Independence—Thomas L. Hisgen.

Four years ago there were six tickets in the field and the total votes were:

Republican, 7,623,485.
Democratic, 5,077,971.
Prohibition, 258,536.
Socialist, 402,283.
People's, 117,183.
Socialist Labor, 31,249.

What the total will be this year is an unknown quantity, but it is safe to predict that the Independence party will poll a vote larger than has ever been cast by a small party. This vote will largely come from Democrats. It is Hearst's party: Hearst was sometime Mr. Bryan's most ardent supporter. He now as ardently desires his defeat. Hearst received 178 votes in the St. Louis Democratic Convention in 1904 for the nomination for President. Bryan turned him down. Hearst and his friends have good memories. It is significant that the second place on the ticket is given to the Georgian. Democrats of Georgia and of South Carolina could not be expected to vote for Taft, but they may hail with joy an opportunity to vote for one of their own sons and thus rebuke Mr. Bryan for his vacillation in dealing with the one question that the South deems all important. Mr. Bryan's egregious blunder in attempting to coquette with the negro vote must meet with rebuke both at the hands of intelligent negro votes in the North and of Southern white men.

THE NEW PARTY.

Some of the leading newspapers of the country look upon the new Independence party with more or less seriousness, while others regard it as an ephemeral affair destined to cut no other figure in this campaign than to take a few votes from both the Republican and Democratic parties, without increasing or adding to its own strength as a party. In his denunciation of the Republican and Democratic parties in his speech as temporary chairman of the Independence League convention at Chicago Monday night, William Randolph Hearst has laid himself open to the charge of individual hatred of both parties. He declares there is need of a new party. The people want argument. They do not want bombast and abuse. The Daily News agrees with the New York Tribune, that "there seems no reason why the Independence party should be taken seriously except by Mr. Bryan."

New and powerful parties have sprung up in the past history of the country, and it is the custom of Mr. Hearst and his writers of his political broadsides to point to the analogy of the Republican party as an inspiration to the hesitating. But new parties of real strength come into being in response to a genuine need, when important issues are before the public which the existing parties have not the courage or the intelligence to face squarely. But a search of the Independence party's many declarations of principles hitherto published fails to reveal any definite thing for which it stands and for which the other parties do not stand as well or better. It has no vital issues which has been neglected by the two other parties.

It is hard to guess at just what is the object of Mr. Hearst and his advisers in entering the national field with independent nominations. It is suggested that the motive is a desire to be revenged upon Mr. Bryan for failing to support Mr. Hearst in 1904. But if the New Yorker has further ambitions in the Democratic party such a course will merely sow future enmity in his pathway. It may be that the Hearst successes in Massachusetts last year and in the New York Mayoralty campaign of 1905 have been viewed too optimistically by him, and that a sensationally large vote is expected from the entrance of the party upon a larger field, a vote which will inevitably stamp the party as one of the future. It may be, too, that Mr. Hearst and his advisers expect, as many others have expected, the break-up of the Democratic party, and that he hopes to put its successor in the field. That is a poor speculation. The Democratic party may decay, to be sure, if in one campaign the radical wing controls it and in the next the conservatives try their fortunes with it. No party can preserve the respect of the people through such an oscillation of convictions. But if the Democracy makes one more such experiment as that of 1904, waiting for its death and the inheritance of its place will be long and frurtless.—Cumberland News.

BUMPER CROPS FOR THE SOUTH.

Southern farmers and business men have every reason feel good over the outlook for crops this year. Returns from early fruits and vegetables are larger than ever before, and both producers and merchants are now enjoying the good times ushered in by the marketing of those crops. Tobacco, corn, hay and other products of the soil will add millions to the wealth of the South. But cotton of course is the big crop and the real basis of prosperity. The crop is a little backward in a few sections due to weather conditions, but as a rule the elements have dealt kindly with the growers.

Estimates as to the extent of the yield vary from 12,000,000 to 14,000,000 bales. Should the latter figures be realized, and figuring on 9 cents a pound for cotton, or $45 a bale, Southern farmers will receive approximately $630,000,000 for their cotton. Added to this the proceeds of other crops grown in that section, the total returns would considerably exceed $700,000,000. With such evidence of returning prosperity before them, it is no wonder that Southern business men are in a happy frame of mind.

The South is no longer entirely dependent upon agriculture for business activity. It is rich in iron, coal and timber, and every day it is becoming more of a manufacturing section, according to experts. For years the cotton industry has been leaving the East and establishing itself where the raw material is grown. The South now produces a larger quantity of coarse cotton goods than any other section, and manufacture of the finer grades is gradually increasing. More attention is also being paid to finished woods and other industries.

In brief, the outlook for the South is relatively more encouraging than for any other section, chiefly because development there has only begun, while the natural resources of the East have been almost exhausted.

THE daily accident roll suggests that Americans are committing race suicide by the automobile route. Twenty deaths a day, with the chauffeur as executioner, seems to be the current record. Here is a hint for those who are seeking a substitute for the Marathon race. In any Olympic game Americans could win first, second and third places at an automobile suicide contest.

Conditions Still Improved.

The month of July just passed, while far from being the most successful one for the coal trade, will show an enormous gain over the conditions during the month of June. Operators are sanguine in their belief that the markets will continue to improve later in the summer and fall and that business will have reached normal ere the lake ports close on account of extreme cold weather. A large tonnage of coal has been shipped recently to the lake ports from Fairmont and Clarksburg, and the output in this region has been greater than at any time during the current year, but the aggregate is still far below the corresponding month last year. Increasing shipments will, it is believed, call very soon for additinal equipment from the B. & O. railroad.

WORRIED ABOUT OUTLOOK.

Scherr and Swisher May Both Withdraw.

HUNTINGTON, W. Va., Aug. 1. The Advertiser has the following:

Word comes that the Republican party in West Virginia at large, alarmed at the almost assured success of the Democratic ticket in the approaching election, is ready to bury all its differences and present a united front to the Democracy.

Swisher and Scherr and their respective supporters realize that neither has a chance to win victory over the united Democracy, led by Louis Bennett and the withdrawal of neither would improve the situation from a Republican standpoint, but now the proposition that both withdraw has assumed definite form. Senator Scott came to town Wednesday. The senator wants to be re-elected. Unless the Republican differences are settled his chances are small. Senator Scott has plenty of money and, therefore, the difference will be settled.

This is the present plan: Both Swisher and Scherr will withdraw, but will be given nice appointments. George C. Sturgiss will be named for Governor provided he will accept, which is doubtful as he is already the nominee for Congress in the Second district. In case of refusal, the place will go to Judge Holt, of Grafton. Holt, is not a strong candidates but is considered preferable to either Swisher or Scherr. This is the Scott plan.

To what extent it will be actually carried out remains to be determined. The Democrats do not care much. Their belief is that whatever the outcome of the Republican mixup affairs in the Republican party have come to such a pass that Democratic success is assured

Tourists From Deer Park.

Miss Daisy Grant, who spent several weeks at Webster Springs, West Va., recuperating her health, returned to her home in Oakland last Friday somewhat improved.

Ex-County Treasurer Horace R. DeWitt, who removed recently from his residence in Oakland to his farm near Hoyes, was in the city last Saturday on business.

Mr. James B. Frazee and wife, of Glade Farms, were visiting friends at Hoyes, Md., Friday, Saturday and Sunday and made a trip to Oakland Saturday last on business.

V. V. Washburne, of Brunswick, Md., who spent last week in Oakland returned to his home Monday. Mrs. Washburne, who accompanied her husband to Oakland, will remain here a few days.

Mr. Lee R. Mason, son of Mr. and Mrs. G. M Mason, of Oakland, left here Monday afternoon for Cincinnati, O., where he will take a course in embalming, expecting to be absent several weeks.

Mr. Elias Orendorf, accompanied by Mrs. Orendorf, of Bittinger, spent Saturday and Sunday at the home of their son, Mr. Daniel Orendorf, near Oakland, returning to Bittinger Monday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. George W. Fleming and little daughter, of near Wilmington, N. C., arrived in Oakland last Friday evening to remain indefinitely as the guests of Mrs. Fleming's mother, Mrs. George L. Bosley.

Mr. Cortez H. Jennings, of Jennings, this county, accompanied by three of his friends, arrived in Oakland yesterday in a touring car and will remain here a few days. They are registered at the Commercial Hotel.

Messrs. Helbig and West, who recently purchased the City Roller Mills from Messrs. Mason & Painter, took charge of their newly acquired property Monday morning and are now engaged in making some necessary repairs to the machinery preliminary to the fall rush of work which will ensue. "Jack" Enlow has taken charge of the Dixon & Keiso warehouse which was formerly in charge of Mr. R. H. West.

HEAT RECORD BEATEN.

Mercury Climed to Ninety Degrees In Oakland Tuesday.

Sunday, July '19th, 1908, when the thermometer registered 89 degrees, was the highest ever attained in Oakland until Tuesday of this week, where the Govermenet thermometer at the Sturgiss Pharmacy, made a new record, registering ninety degrees.

Mrs. Samuel D. Brady left this afternoon for Bloomington, Md., where she will spend some time. She will also visit at other points in Maryland and the eastern section of West Virginia.—Parkersburg State Journal.

FOR RENT—A good farm. About 50 acres under cultivation; twenty acres in grass; good barn and house; plenty of wood for fuel; about two miles from Oakland. For further particulars address "Farm," Republican office, Oakland, Md. 22-4t

Mr. J. A. Kelly has purchased the Capt. Hayden property on Liberty street and will probably erect a large livery barn on the rear portion of the lot this fall. He will otherwise improve the property by repairing the dwelling house.

Rev. Dr. A. Wirt Lowther, who will appear on the lecture platform at the Chautauqua tomorrow, spent a few days last week with Dr. and Mrs. R. B. Ward at their home in Oakland. Dr. Lowther and Dr. Ward were class mates in their younger days.

A party composed of Mr. and Mrs. Bowie Johnson and Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Sincell and two boys, are camping down on the Big Yough River, five miles west of Oakland. The camp was visited Sunday by a number of Oakland people, among them being Mr. John A. Grant and son Will.

A band of genuine Roumanian gypsies, traveling in five wagons, well appointed and fitted up with all the necessities for an outdoor life, arrived at the base ball grounds in Oakland last Monday afternoon, remaining there until yesterday when they removed their camp to a point near Mountain Lake Park.

Hon. Julius Scherr, of Charleston, W. Va., after spending a few days here visiting his daughter, Mrs. Julius C. Renninger, went to Eglon, his old home, yesterday afternoon. On the political situation in West Virginia Mr. Scherr expresses himself very freely. He is thoroughly convinced that his brother, Hon. A. C. Scherr would have received the regular Republican nomination had a square deal been given him. Mr. Scherr, according to his brother, has no intention of getting off the Lincoln Republican ticket unless his opponent on Regular ticket does likewise and the right given Mr. Scherr and his friends to name a majority of the State Committee.

THE DEATH RECORD.

ALEXANDER LOWER.

Died, at his home near Wesley Chapel, Monday, after a prolonged illness, Alexander Lower, in the 67th year of his age. The deceased was a prominent farmer of his section of the community and was highly respected. For many years he was a consistent member of the M. E. church. He leaves two sons, David M. and John, and two daughters, Mrs. D. H. Riley and Mrs. J. Murray White. His funeral took place from Wesley Chapel on Tuesday.

SPEED ORDINANCES ENACTED

Automobiles and Other Vehicles Limited to Six Miles Per Hour.

The Town Council at its meeting held Monday night of this week passed an ordinance limiting the speed of automobiles within the corporate limits to six miles per hour and prescribing a fine from $1 to $25 or 30 days in jail for the violation of its provisions.

Garrett County Peaches.

Yesterday ex County Commissioner E. W. Kelso left at this office a number of peaches which were grown in his orchard east of Mountain Lake Park. The fruit was juicy, well flavored and beautifully colored. Other horticulturalists in the county have planted peach trees within the past few years and indications are that this will eventually become as great peach producin section as it is now an apple producing country.

A Fire Alarm.

Tuesday afternoon an alarm of fire was given, caused by a chimney in the residence of Mr. D. E. Bolden being on fire. The department turned out within a remarkably short time but before it arrived at the scene the flames were extinguished.

Lawn Fete.

A lawn fete will be held on the lawn of the New Germany M. E. church August 15th, for the benefit of the church. The evening will be devoted to serving ice cream and all kinds of refreshments. There will be a balloon ascension on the lawn at twelve o'clock. Everybody welcome.

The Merry Widow

By ALBERT PAYSON TERHUNE

CHAPTER VI.

At Maxim's

MAXIM'S after midnight—the show restaurant whither sight-seeing Americans and other tourists flock and whose dizzy, machine made merriment they solemnly believe to be a part and parcel of true Parisian life.

On the night of Sonia's garden party one group of men and women who entered the jolly restaurant were so different from the usual habitues of the place as to come in for not a few amused glances from their neighbors. They were Mme. Natalie Popoff, Mme. Nova Kovitch and Cascada and St Brioche. The visit was Natalie's idea

At Maxim's.

She had heard Danilo's wild speech of goodby to Sonia and his announcement that he was off to Maxim's. Hence the ambassador's wife, with a feebie yearning to atone in some way for the false position into which the widow had been thrust for her sake, had resolved to follow in the hope of securing a word in private with Danilo and setting matters right again.

Natalie had not confided her plan to her husband, and now as the party were ushered to a secluded table in an alcove she glanced at the riotous scene about her with a delighted nervousness. The delight vanished suddenly, however, and the nervousness waxed to a panic fear as a familiar voice smote upon her ear.

Popoff had just come in and was standing not ten feet away from the secluded table where his wife sat trembling.

"I want to see Prince Danilo at once," he said to the head waiter. "Has he arrived?"

"Not yet, sir," was the reply, "but he will be here very soon. There is a supper party waiting for him over there," waving to a tableful of gayly appareled girls with tired eyed men.

"Really!" exclaimed the ambassador. "I'll just join them till he comes."

He toddled off to the distant table, where, to Natalie's jealous eye, he seemed to make himself at home with a phenomenal ease and quickness. He was scarce seated when Danilo strode in. The whole table rose to give the prince noisy greeting.

"Why, hello, your excellency!" cried Danilo. "This is queer company for a monument of respectability like yourself to wander into!"

"I came only to see you," protested the ambassador, drawing him aside. "I was bound I'd come here and wait till you appeared if"—

"Oh, I see," cut in the prince, thoroughly enjoying his confusion. "Fools rush in where"—

"I didn't rush in," fumed the ambassador; "I crept here in a measly cab, and I sneaked into the place like a pickpocket for fear some one would recognize me. I sacrificed myself to my country. Suppose my wife should hear of it! I came to implore you, to cast myself on your mercy, to beg you once more to prevent the widow from"—

"I must see his excellency," insisted a portly man behind them, his voice booming through the whole room. "He is here, and I— Oh!" he broke off on sight of Popoff. "Here you are! I"—

"My dear Nova Kovitch," pettishly interrupted the ambassador, "is it necessary to hunt for me with a brass band? Couldn't you'—

"I'm sorry to interrupt you," answered Nova Kovitch, "but here's a dispatch from the Marsovian ministry. It seemed to me important, and I brought it on."

Popoff took the slip of paper and read aloud:

"If Mme. Sadowa's twenty millions are allowed to leave Marsovia we are a bankrupt country."

"There, Prince Danilo," continued the ambassador, turning on the young man in melodramatic appeal; "you see it's right up to you! Your country appeals to you to save it! You are Marsovia's last hope. Marry the widow and"—

"I'll marry no one!" flared up Danilo. "To the deuce with matrimony and Marsovia and myself! I'm done with silly dreams of love and all that nonsense. I'm free, and I'm going to make a night of it. I"—

He paused and stood silent, dumfounded. Down the little flight of stairs leading into the room a woman was advancing alone.

"Sonia!" exclaimed Danilo.

With a word of excuse to the others, he hurried across and met the widow as she reached the foot of the steps.

"You're here," he muttered in horrified wonder—"here alone?"

"Yes," replied Sonia coldly. "Is it any affair of yours?"

"First the summer house," he went on as in a daze, "then Maxim's."

"Quite so. Is that all you have to say?"

"No," he retorted; "I have one thing more. You should not marry De Jolidon."

"No? Why not, pray?"

"Because I"—

He checked himself. She finished the sentence for him.

"Because you love me?" she suggested.

He broke into a discordant, miserable laugh.

"Don't laugh that silly way!" she reprimanded sharply.

"I am sorry you don't like it," he observed. "It's the only way I know."

"Then don't laugh at all. The laugh is on my side, anyway."

"On your side?"

"Yes. You are angry at what happened this evening. But it wasn't I who was in the summer house with M. de Jolidon."

"But I saw you there," he declared. "I"—

"I took another woman's place to get her out of an awkward scrape with her husband—with M. Popoff. She was"—

"And I never even guessed it!" cried Danilo, his sullen face breaking into a smile of utter relief. "What a fool I was! I was green and yellow with jealousy. I"—

He caught himself up, but it was too late. Sonia's eyes danced.

"But since you don't love me," she asked, "why were you yellow and green with"—

"Because green and yellow are our national colors. I am nothing if not patriotic. You see"—

"Mme. Sadowa—prince!" gurgled Popoff, trotting up to them, unable longer to restrain his anxiety. "I hope it is all settled. All nicely arranged, eh?"

"No, not exactly," said Natalie, who at sight of the fatal trinket had left her table and run forward. "It's all a horrid mistake. I can explain. I"—

"Silence!" commanded Popoff in his most magisterial manner. "Madame, under section 4 of the Marsovian code I hereby divorce you. This fan is sufficient evidence."

As Natalie started back, dumb with horror, Popoff turned impressively to Sonia and, to the widow's amused dismay, sank on one knee before her.

"Mme. Sadowa," he declaimed, "I am free, and in the name of our fatherland I beseech you to become my wife!"

Sonia was seemingly blind to the white misery in Natalie's face and the look of angry surprise in Danilo's. She answered, with perfect composure:

"My dear M. Popoff, I am deeply honored by your proposal, but before I accept it is only fair to tell you that if I marry again I lose all my fortune."

"Madame, I hereby divorce you."

The ambassador scrambled hastily to his feet.

"I—I was perhaps just a wee bit hasty," he stuttered, looking sheepishly about for a way of escape.

Natalie came forward and handed him the fan.

"Did you read the words I wrote on it?" she asked timidly.

"I—am—a—dutiful—wife!" spelled out the ambassador. "Forgive me! I didn't understand. Shall we let bygones be bygones?"

Danilo, who had stood silent during the odd proposal, now stepped past Popoff and faced Sonia, a new light in his eyes.

"Is it true you will lose all your money if you marry again?" he asked in a voice he tried in vain to keep steady.

"Yes," she admitted; "it is true."

"I LOVE YOU, SONIA," HE WHISPERED.

"Same old I idly opening his eye vaguely
Natalie had don's avowal, he
"My wife's handwriting! Then it was my wife after all!"

"Sir," quoted Nova Kovitch, "Caesar's wife should be above suspicion."

"But Caesar never brought his wife to Paris!" wailed Popoff. "This is bad for me."

"If you mean is madame to marry De Jolidon," answered Danilo, "she is not."

"But this evening," ejaculated Popoff, "in the summer house!"

"She took another woman's place," replied the prince, disregarding Sonia's warning gesture.

"Dear me!" squealed Popoff, his curiosity reviving. "Who was she?"

"Excuse me, your excellency," re-

THE WORLD DISSATISFIED.

No matter how we strive or how we study
To make the world a place devoid of woes,
There's no such thing as pleasing everybody
Or giving to the fretful sweet repose.
If war could be abolished and if labor
Might cease to be imposed upon the race,
You might at once expect to hear your neighbor
Complain that earth was "such a dull old place."

If some great wizard, filled with kind emotions
And seeking to make life a long, sweet dream,
Produced a wand and waved it o'er the oceans,
Thus turning the salt water into cream,
The dairymen would rise in consternation
And ask that walls along the shores be made
And on the wizard heap loud condemnation
For basely seeking to destroy their trade.

If some wise person with the best intention
Could, after he had studied well, some day
Produce a great and glorious invention
For making wool from sawdust or from hay,
The farmers in each wool producing section,
With mingled fear and hatred in their breasts,
Would rise, demanding adequate protection
For what they deemed their sacred interests.

If it befell that some one should discover
A means of making every girl as fair
As she appears to her devoted lover,
If beauty could be given everywhere,
Still there would be sad looks and idle fretting
And doubtless in a precious little while
Somebody might be found who'd be regretting
That plain, old fashioned girls were out of style.

No matter how we toil or how we study
To make the world a brighter, better place,
There's no such thing as pleasing everybody
Or banishing the frowns from every face.
There are so many women who must treasure
The foolish little cares that blight and scar,
The world is full of men whose dearest pleasure
Is finding fault with all things as they are.

The "Green" Cook.

Norah, the "green" cook, poked her head in at the dining room door.

"Please, ma'am," she asked, "an' how will I be knowin' when the pudd'in' is cooked?"

"Stick a knife into it," said the mistress, recalling the cookbook instructions, "if the knife comes out clean, the pudding is ready to serve."

"Yis, ma'am."

"And, oh, Norah"—the mistress had an afterthought—"if the knife does come out clean you might stick all the rest of the knives into the pudding."

Redney and the Lady.

By FRANK HOWE.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

Archibald Harris, better known to his one time friends as "Redney," in graceful allusion to his brightly colored thatch of hair, gazed disconsolately into the shop window while the warm, enticing odor of freshly baked bread came through the grating beneath the window.

He was debating whether to buy a loaf of bread and make an evening meal or to save his sole remaining dime for a bed after he should have had a cup of coffee and a thick slice of bread on the "bread line." The bread line did not open until 1 o'clock, and Redney decided in favor of supper immediately. He was used to sleeping in the open, but he was unused to going hungry.

He half turned to go inside the bakery when his attention was attracted to a girl who had joined him before the plate glass. She was not uncomely, in spite of a certain shabbiness, and something seemed to stamp her as one of the homeless. With quick sympathy Redney turned to her.

"You hungry, too, sister?" he demanded.

The girl sprang back at the sound of his voice and made as though to move on, but the "too" was a common bond of sympathy, and she nodded silently.

"Ain't had nothin' since last night," she affirmed. "The landlady threw me out because I owe three weeks' board, and there ain't a chance in town for a job."

"Come on in," he invited, leading the way to the door. The girl stood silent while Redney purchased a loaf of bread and half a dozen cakes, depositing the last dime. Then he led the way to one of the small parks and divided the loaf and the cakes with her.

Both devoured the bread ravenously, and neither spoke until the last crumb

"YOU BET I AIN'T," WAS THE FERVENT ASSURANCE.

of cake had been eaten. Then the girl turned to her companion.

"You're all to the good," she declared gratefully. "What you goin' t' do now?"

"Nothin'! There's nothin' to do," he declared, with light humor. "No one seems to want me for odd jobs, and there's no chance for my regular job in these parts."

"What's that?" she demanded.

"Ridin' range," he answered, with a laugh, "tendin' cows."

"You are a cowboy!" she gasped. "You a real cowboy?"

Redney nodded his head.

"I guess that's what," he assented.

"You c'n throw a lasso?" she demanded, her eyes growing bright. Redney nodded again.

"I c'n fix you up," she declared. "Got your lassos?"

"They're at the place where I bunked last night," he assented. "I came east to try the theaters, but the theater fellows say they're all booked up, which means that they are some few shy of jobs for me. I'd go back west, but I'm busted."

"I'll show you," declared the girl. "You know amateur nights?"

Redney shook his head.

"That's a strange brand," he said.

"It's for the yaps," explained the girl. "They have 'em at all the theaters. If you're the biggest hit you get $10. It's a cinch if there's a girl with you. I'll let you throw the ropes at me, and we'll cop the coin."

"Where do they have 'em?" asked Redney, growing interested.

"All over." The girl made a sweeping gesture with her hand to indicate the scope. "They're all the go now. They have to have 'em on different nights because there ain't enough amateurs to go around. We can play the lot. Come on and get your things, and I'll show you."

She sprang to her feet, and Redney followed after. He was doubtful of ultimate success, but he was willing to do anything that would permit him to enjoy the cheering society of the girl for a couple of hours.

They went over to the lodging house where Redney had stored the valise containing his spare shirt and his ropes, all that was left of the outfit he had brought east. The rest had gone to the pawnshops.

The good natured clerk permitted them to go into the empty dormitory to practice, and presently the girl dragged him toward a theater whose big sign entreated the passerby not to forget that it was amateur night.

After a short parley with a gray coated special officer in the lobby they found themselves herded in a cellar under the auditorium with an odd assortment of "talent."

It was a long wait before the amateurs were marshaled upon the stage, but at last the chance came, and with the girl's final admonition to do his best ringing in his ears Redney followed her out upon the stage.

The lights bothered him a bit, and he was glad that he was not obliged to talk above the babel of noises, but the catcalls and hoots elicited by his appearance died down when it was seen that he was able to do strange things with a rope. When at last the turn was ended and he sought the comparative dusk of the wings the girl's warm "You done great" thrilled him with satisfaction.

Then the amateurs all lined up on the stage, and there was a lot of applause, and the stage manager thrust ten one-dollar bills into his trembling hands, and, with the girl's prompting, Redney bobbed his head in thanks and backed off the stage.

In the wings a man with a fur lined coat was waiting to lead him over into a corner. Presently Redney beckoned for the girl.

"This is the manager of the show that's here this week," Redney explained. "He says he'll give us jobs with the show. You get eighteen in the chorus, and I get thirty-five for doin' my rope act. I'll give you five to help me out. Want to come?"

"Do I?" echoed the girl. "Watcher want t' ask me for? Why didn't yer say 'Yes' before he changed his mind?"

"I'm not going to change my mind," assured the fur coated one, with a laugh. "Come around at 11 tomorrow."

He turned away, leaving the two face to face. Redney looked into the girl's glowing eyes. There lay knowledge of privation and of toil and of the ways of the world, but they met his fearlessly, and Redney was satisfied.

"Thirty-five and eighteen makes fifty-three," he said softly. "Wouldn't you rather share the fifty-three with me, Bess?"

"Sure," was her assent, half laughing, half bashful. "The manager's eighteen and your five makes twenty-three, and that ain't no sort o' luck. Besides," she added, as her face grew tender, "you're a white boy, kiddoo, an' yer ain't ever goin' t' be ashamed o' yer wife."

"You bet I ain't," was the fervent assurance. "I knew it was you I wanted out there in front of the bakery. Let's go and get somethin' real to eat, cow meat and coffee and sweet truck."

"Just as you say," Bess assented meekly. "It's up to you now." And she followed him toward the stairs up which they had climbed an hour before with such different feelings.

Bounced Through.

Sergeant Wilkins once defended a breach of promise case for a singularly ugly little man, which case he told the defendant, after reading his brief, must be "bounced" through. And the sergeant did bounce it through.

"Gentlemen of the jury," he said at the close of a most eloquent speech, "you've heard the evidence for the plaintiff, and, gentlemen of the jury, you have admired that most bewitching lady, the plaintiff herself. Gentlemen, do you believe that this enchanting, this fascinating, this captivating, this accomplished lady would for one moment favor the advances or listen with anything save scorn and indignation to the amorous protestations of the wretched and repulsive homunculus, the deformed and degraded defendant?"

His client looked up from the well of the court and piteously murmured:

"Mr. Sergeant Wilkins! Oh, Mr. Sergeant Wilkins!"

"Silence, sir!" replied the sergeant in a wrathful undertone. "Gentlemen," he continued, bringing his fist heavily down on the desk before him, "do you think that this lovely lady, this fair and smiling creature, would ever have permitted an offer of marriage to be made to her by this miserable atom of humanity, this stunted creature, who would have to stand on a sheet of note paper to look over twopence?"

Instant verdict for defendant.—London Globe.

Notices Which Make You Smile.

There is quite a rich crop of humor, usually unconscious, to be reaped by the observant in the notices displayed in shop windows, of which the following announcement by a south end bird fancier is not at all a bad example: "Doves for sale, cheap. Eat nearly anything. Fond of children." Not long ago a Farrington road butcher had in his window this notice: "Wanted, a respectable boy for beef sausages." An east end publican announced, "Billiard tables upstairs, 1 shilling per 100." A well known High Wycombe tobacconist proclaims from his shop window, "This shop is open on Sundays from 9 a. m. to 9 p. m., in spite of Charles II." "Wanted, a warehouseman," ran another similar notice. "Applicants must be accustomed to rigorous discipline. Only the offers of such candidates will be entertained who have served in the army or been married for a considerable length of time."—Westminster Gazette.

'Twould Be Easy Then.

McJigger—It's all well enough to tell us to forgive our enemies, but I tell you it's a hard thing to do.

HEARST ADVERTISING SCHEME.

William Randolf Hearst is a great advertiser He conceived and constructed the Independence League out of those elements that are chronically at variance with anything their party does. He saw in those malcontents the nucleus for an organization that he could govern and at the same time use to promote his own interests. It is not ancient history in regard to his selling out to Tammany to gain the Democratic nomination for governor of New York. The barter and sale of the incident is well known. Now comes the national convention of this great advertiser, and he gives out an outlandish platform that he himself does not believe in, but it serves his purpose of radicalism where the Democratic party has been timid. It is a strain on the intelligence of the well informed American people to accept as earnest the propaganda of Mr. Hearst and the seriousness of the candidacies of his nominees for the presidency and vice presidency. Mr. Hearst had the wisdom to refuse when he could have had, and in this he shows the advertising instinct he has always displayed.

In other words he has paid freight for goods that he knows now he cannot sell at auction and recover the cost, but knows that he can keep them in storage for his own glory, profit and notoriety.

His dominance of the convention will increase the circulation of his papers, drop dollars in his pocket and keep alive for some years a journalism that is peculiar to himself and foreign in instincts to others in the same business who have regard for their word, and who do not hold their reputation cheaply.

No one knows anything of the head of the Hearst ticket, but every intelligent reader knows something of John Temple Graves, the candidate for vice president, and who aspired for first place. Mr. Graves is also an advertiser for his Atlanta paper, and if he can get a few more subscribers by his freak action it will not trouble the body politic nor detract from the excellency of the Republican ticket. Possibly it may help, probably it will encourage people to stand by the tried principles of the Republican party.—Weeling Intelligencer.

His Visit to Florida.

Mr. EDITOR:—I noticed in the columns of your valuable journal, THE REPUBLICAN, under the date of July 23rd, the continuance of my Florida letters. Thanking you for the space occupied, I will continue these letters. The writer hopes to interest the many intelligent readers of THE REPUBLICAN with a short write-up of the East Coast of Florida, beginning at St. Augustine, the oldest town in the United States.

St. Augustine is 37 miles south of Jacksonville, located between the Matanzas side of Bay, and the Labechian river on the west, and is a well equipped modern city, it has asphalt pavements, gas and electric lights, artesian water system, fire department, well stocked markets and stores, elegant churches, an increasing number of residences, and palatial hotels, which are famous the world over and on whose registers are written the names of more than 50,000 guests every winter and spring. It is the fashionable winter resort of the United States. Visitors find every convenience and luxury, and a trolley car system.

The town is renowned for its healthfulness, the climate is equitable and has given lease of life to thousands who have come from the north and west. The great attraction for tourists is Fort Marion.

September 5, 1565, St. Augustine was settled, and the building of Fort Marion begun by Menendez, a brave military chief, who was appointed by his King, the hereditary Governor of the Floridas, on the condition that he should expel the French, conquor the natives and plant a colony there. The fort and defenses of St. Augnstine were 191 years in construction, and cost the Spanish government over thirty millions of dollars. Since it came into the possession of the United States it has been very materially strengthened, which has made it a very formidable defence. The fort at St. Augustine was named Fort Marion in honor of General Francis Marion, of Revolutionary fame. To realize the greatness of this ancient structure, it has to be seen. There are many other attractions at St. Augustine that I cannot describe in this letter.

A few years ago Henry Flagler, the millionaire benefactor of the East Coast country, begun the construction of the East Coast railroad from St. Augustine to Miami, a distance of 330 miles, which opened up the East Coast region to settlement. Land was cheap and enterprising people were attracted there and bought land and cleared it up and planted oranges, grapes, fruit and pineapple groves, and the growing of vegetables of all kinds are of large acreage from point to point of this railroad. Then came the winter resorts, some of which became famous for healthfulness, convenience and luxury.

I quote from a southern newspaper that I picked up on a train: "During the coming year the two great steps in advance for our country as a whole must go to the credit of Florida."

A state, large only in extent of its acreage, but insignsficant in population and wealth, compared to many of its sisters, will set the pace in works of national importance, and the whole world should be invited by sound of trumpet to "sit up and take notice."

Any sum less than one thousand million dollars will be ultimately spent on the Panama Canal, with the full approval of the people, provided only that a small portion of it may be dissipated in waste and graft. When completed the canal in commercial and military importance will be worth a billion dollars to us, though it should not cost half as much. But subsidiary to that work, it is the glory of Florida that she will see the completion of the East Coast extension, (one of the greatest engineering feats of the age), a trunk line that will put the canal within a few hours of all centers of population, and supply a sister enterprise that means much to the military systems as to that of commerce. The extension will make easier and more certain our control of the Carribean and the gulf, the protection of the canal, and must prove a most efficient instrument in that commercial control of South America, which loomed so largely in the eyes of Blaine and McKinley.

Of no inferior significance is the completion of the East Coast canal, the first link forged in that great chain of defence and commercial interchange which is to bind the Atlantic States together from Boston to Key West. Florida may well be proud of what 1908 will bring her, she should not forget through and by whom such glory is hers. For this year she will lead without a rival who will follow; she and hers have done this rather with the opposition than the help of the national government, to which others look when making plans for the future.

The southern states, south of Maryland and West Virginia, are less affected by financial panics, railroad and mine strikes and labor disturbances generally, including political upheavals, than their sister states north, east and west. This was true of the great railroad strike of 1877. All of the important lines, especially the trunk lines, were practically closed to traffic for weeks, and commerce was at a stand still during the summer of the year above mentioned. The strike did not interfere with the movement of freight on southern roads. I remember well of reading statements in our own northern newspapers, that the people did not feel the depression south that we did north. As many of our people will remember privation and suffering reigned supreme among all classes of laboring people here. This was only twelve years after the Civil War. The thirty-one years entervening till now has made a much more rapid progress towards the great "New South" of to-day.

The Civil War closed, leaving destruction in its wake from the center to circumference practically leaving nothing to begin home life with. No seed to plant and raise crops from, homes broken up, stock of all kinds scarce and very high in price, especially was this the case in the matter of work stock to plow and cultivate their crops. The worst feature in these conditions, there was no money to buy with, their currency had become worthless. Had not Gen. U. S. Grant, in his magnanimity, refused to include in the term of surrender at Appotomax the army horses, saying to the Confederates to take their horses home with them, that they would need them to plow their land and cultivate their crops, a noble people of a lost cause would have been in a still worse condition without their horses. By no means the least of calamities brought on by four years of war, blood shed, loss of human life, and destruction of property, there were left in the southern states about four million exslaves, ninety-nine out of a hundred were not in a condition for self support. These were a great loss and burden to the people of the southland. But, to them the assassination of one of the wisest of the presidents of the United States was the greatest calamity. Thousands of people north and south believe yet had not Mr. Lincoln been removed by the hand of an assassin the negro problem of the country would have been settled following the close of the war. The new south of to-day is nobly recovering from all of these reverses and burdens. The sons and grandsons of the old slave holders have been taking off their coats and pushing up their sleeves above their elbows and personally superintending their affairs—they regard labor as a necessary adjunct to a proper elevation of morals and religion. These institutions are upon a solid basis. Churches of every denominahion are in a happy condition and are doing splendid work for the Master. Their schools, from the primary to the college, are among the best in this God-blessed country of ours. Out of the churches and schools have come the champions of temperance, which is spreading like a mighty sea of glory over the beautiful south land. Not Republicanism nor Democracy, nor Prohibition, has done this great work singly and alone—but the people rising in their might, are throttling the greatest enemy of mankind. Prohibition has become a necessity in the great centers of the colored population, as well as among a certain class of whites. It is contended by the business men that to simply restrict the traffic does not produce the desired effect.

The southern states are getting out of the old ruts and taking up new ideas and new methods in agriculture and commerce, and have become the gateway to the nation's new destiny. It needs the best class of immigrants, and they will measure the supply to the demand. Soon the commerce of the south will teem, and lines of steamers flying the American flag, will carry its products along the coast lines of South America. All this, and much more could be said, I quote Secretary Strous, of the Department of Commerce and Labor, in an address before the Savannah Board of Trade: "Formerly the south was spoken of as if it were undivided in its politics, and in its aspirations. Today it is the strongest bidder for immigrants. It has the highest rewards for capital, it is enthusiastic over chief domestic undertakings, such as the canal and American home commerce. it is loyal to the foreign enterprises of the government, it is distinctly national and thoroughly hospitable to ideas for its advancement in common with the rest of the country."

Without disparagement to others it was republican presidential nominee. Mr. William H. Taft, who struck firmly the key note of southern nationalism that has been vibrant ever since his notable address upon the south in national relations. In a little over thirty years its railroads have multiplied over five fold in trackage, its cotton factories in the same period have advanced from eleven, to one hundred and sixty-three millions in out puts. As the secretary points out the furtherance of commerce must be by close understanding between the business interests and the country through a national council of commerce "such as has been proposed." In this the south would enter actively. It is without significance to note that the words of inspiration for the south to become wealthy and influential according to its situation and products, come from those who have been and are identified with republican administrators To versify these statements more fully, I recall a conversation with a gentleman I met on a train and with whom I traveled several hundred miles, a typical southerner, a Georgian, who spoke freely of the condition of the south generally. Its agriculture, fruit, coal, iron, and vast commercial interests, society and schools. He warmed up on the temperance question and the wave that was sweeping over the southland. Becoming enthusiastic over the result, declaring that he had spent thousands of dollars to rid the state of Georgia of the traffic, and would do much more. I made inquiry as to his occupation and he said he was a merchant and planter, and was going to Charleston, S. C., to look after cotton he had in storage, and a drop of 2 cents per pound meant a loss of $2,700 to him. Mr. Lee spoke of Messrs. Bryan, Taft and Roosevelt as nominees of their respective parties. Mr. Lee declared that the democrats did not want Mr. Bryan, and would not support him, but would vote for Mr. Roosevslt if he was a candidate—not as a republican—but as a man who had done and was doing more to build up and foster the interests of the south than Mr. Bryan could hope to do. Mr. Lee claims the Lee family of Virginia as his ancestors.

Mr. Editor thanking you again for past courtesies, I remain,

GEO. L. MICHAELS.

A toil-worn farmer sat upon the top bar of the gap down by the cow pasture. His heart was heavy and he wept. Great tears oozed out at the corners of his eyes and went rolling down the sunny slope of his picturesque nose and fell like ocean spray upon the knee of his corduroy trou ers and went shimmering away through the evening twilight as though laughing at the old man's discomfiture, but could not shut out of his mind the stormy scene up there in the kitchen, or close his ears to Mary Ann's voice as she said: "Hiram Shallowtop, yer a born fool. You's done chucked yer vote away twice on that Bryan critter an' you'd be bustin' yerself now to donate $5 to his campaign boodle an' I jist tell yer now I haint goin' fer stand sich doins any longer. You kin tell Mister Bryan yer poor old wife spent that $5 fer a meetin' dress an' you will have to dig taters an' won't have time to vote fer him this time an' I'll guarantee you'll feel like an American fer the fust time in yer life."

LicKing the Editor.

In some portions of the United States it has always been a favorite pastime when a man was not satisfied with what appeared in the local paper to go and lick the editor. Some unwise guy imported the scheme into the southwest recently. It was tried in El Paso, and the editor is still doing business, while the man who wanted to lick him is buried in Oklahoma. Last week in Albuquerque a policeman tried it. He was six inches taller and weighed fifty pounds more than the editor. The policeman was taken to the hospital in an anbulance, and when he recovered consciousness the nurse gave him a message from the mayor announcing that he was fired from the police force.

It is probable that the editor of the Liberal and Col. Max Forest of the New Mexican are about the only editors in the territory whom it would be safe for an ordinary man to try to lick.—Lordsburg Liberal.

THEIR GOLDEN WEDDING.

Celebration of an Event, The Principals of Which Have Many Garrett County Relatives.

A great event in the life of Elder and Mrs. Joel Gnagey occured at the Gnagey home in Trans-Meyersdale, on Thurday last, July 30, 1908, when after months of planning the entire family of this venerable couple were brought for the second time together around the family alter. This time it was to celebrate the Golden Wedding of their dearly loved parents and to witness the solemnization of the marriage of Della, the youngest daughter, to Otto L. Minnich, of California, by her aged father. The only daughter dead is Amanda, former wife of M. C. Horner.

We give a short summary of the family history:

Joel Gnagey, born February 9, 1836, on the old homestead farm, where he lived sixty-seven years.

Catherine Fike, born August 22, 1842

Joel Gnagey and Catherine Fike were married January 31, 1858. From this union eleven children were born, of which but one member died, mention is made below.

Amanda, married to M. C. Horner, died July 21, 1886.

Ellen, Married to Samuel Lichty, of Nebras a.

Annie, married to M. S. Peck, Somerset county.

Ida, married to J. F. Cable, Iowa.

Eliza, married to S. Sweitzer, Iowa.

William married to Miss Cora Boose, Berlin.

John, married to Alice Blough, Illinois.

Emma, married to H. J. Speicher, Maryland.

Sadie, married to H. M. Speicher, Maryland.

Della, married to Otto L. Minnich, California.

Grace, unmarred.

There are also 20 grand children and 3 great grand children. Of these are Cora Bittner and Foster Horner.

As an expression of the nature of the day that called them together, the aged couple were presented with a purse containing fifty dollars in gold, and Della, the happy bride received a number of useful and dainty gifts to take with her to her new home in California, which we hope will be a happy and prosperous home indeed. The sons-in-law are all prosperous men, and men of work and note at their homes—a body of men the venerable Elder may well feel proud. Miss Grace is a graduate of Mt. Morris College, but will return there soon.

And the feast. It was such an one as can be furnished only in a Somerset county farm home. That was a jolly party, and it was thoroughly enjoyed, at what will in all human probability be the last gathering of all as one family.

It is a pleasure to write of those whom so many here know, all of whom are respected and esteemed by every one who knows them. May the venerable couple have many annual recurrences of this joyous day.—Meyersdale Commercal.

A WEST VIRGINIA LADY

Accompanied Commander Peary and Party Over a Portion Of His Journey To North Pole.

A West Virginia lady is a member of the North Pole hunters under the command of Commander Robert E. Peary, as the guest of Mrs. Peary.

The lady referred to is Mrs. T. H. Chase, of Portland, Me., who was formerly Miss Jennie Painter, of Aurora, Preston county, and who is a sister of Mr. Howard Painter, of Grafton and William Painter, of Thornton, Mrs. Theodore Bush and Mrs. W. B. Sawyer, of Grafton. Mrs. Chase and Mrs. Peary are quite warm friends and as Mrs. Peary has always accompanied her husband when leaving on his exploration trips a portion of the long journey to the Arctic regions, Mrs. Chase was invited by Mrs. Peary to be her companion on this trip on the good ship "Roosevelt," which is quite pleasant recognition or the frienship existing between the two ladies.

The "Roosevelt" sailed from New York about ten days or two weeks ago for Sidney, C. B., where the ladies will disembark and return to New York City, and from where the "Roosevelt" will go to a point on the east coast of Greenland, where the real trials of the trip will begin.

NOW GOVERNOR!

List to the Baltimore Sun! It speaketh as the good mother to the favorite son. "My son keep my words and lay up my commandments with thee. Get thee a good wife."

"His Excellency," says the Baltimore Sun, "the Honorable Austin L. Crothers, Governor of Marvland, in a speech on Saturday to Carroll county farmers, their wives and daughters, said: "The true wife is man's best asset." What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith and have not works? Can faith save him? What are we to think of a man who recommends an investment to his neighbors while steadily refusing to put his own money in the venture? What has Governor Crothers to say in extenuation of his conduct in neglecting to invest in the asset which he pronounces the best of all assets? If a wife is such a valuable asset, why does he not invest in one? Can it be possible that the Governnr was merely giving "taffy" to the Carroll county ladies? There is absolutely no excuse for his failure to live up to his professions. The Governor has a fine, large house, ready furnished and with every appurtenance. The only thing that is needed to convert this house into a home is that "best asset" of which the Governor spoke so eloquently and with regard to which he has acted so negligently.

"The Governor not only has encouraged himself to invest in the best possible asset, but he has the encouragement of the most illustrious authority. No less a person than President Roosevelt himself, the "people's most exalted servant," has approved and commended matrimony. He has declared in a recent letter that "there are no lovers like wedded lovers." Then why cannot the Governor become a wedded lover and make his whole life one long sweet song? If any extended period of time should elapse between the speech to the Carroll county ladies and some decisive action upon his part, a committee of those ladies should wait upon him and ask him his intentions. The ladies should not permit him to escape after his Carroll county speech."

STOLE A SAWMILL.

But Was Unable to Cover His Trail and Was Caught.

To steal a saw mill in Pennsylvania, ship it to Cumberland and then to Rowlesburg, W. Va., and when detected in the theft, have to work to pay the freight back for the mill was the hard luck of a lumberman named McMin.

About a week ago Sterling & Dillinger were moving their mill to the farm of Emmett Lyons, and being overtaken by nightfall near Gans, Pa., moved the mill to the side of the road.

The owners of the mill were not quite ready to go to work and left the mill as they supposed standing along the road for a few days. When they returned the mill was gone. Inquiry developed the fact that some one had taken the mill apart and a man engaged Lyons to haul the mill to the railroad station at Cheat Haven, where it was shipped to Rowlesburg. The mill was consigned to a man named McMin. The owners started for Rowlesburg, where they secured their mill and then had McMin arrested.

There were $70 charged for moving the machinery back and forward over the road and as McMin could not pay them he agreed to work it out, and when the mill was taken back and set upon the Lyons farm he started in to work, but disappeared after pegging away for three days. The saw mill owners are satisfied to have their mill back again and will make no further search for the man.

The theft of the mill was looked upon as a big joke in the neighborhood.

VOLUME 32. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, AUGUST 13, 1908. NUMBER 24

THE COURT HOUSE ROOF.

A Communication from Judge Robert R. Henderson on the Subject.

To the Editor of The Republican.

My attention has just been called to a statement in your issue of July 30th under the caption "Copper Will Be Used," which unwittingly does injustice to the contractor of the new court house, W. A. Liller. The part of the article to which I refer, is as follows: "The contractor had already covered a portion of the building with tin, said to be a low grade material, entirely unsatisfactory to all after it was found that it was of an inferior quality."

The facts are these: The contractor had nothing to do with the change of material from slate, called for in the specifications, to tin nor with the selection of the quality and grade of tin. This was the act of the majority of the Commission, at a meeting hastily called to meet what was believed to be a pressing emergency, without notice to the other members. As soon as it was discovered that the absent members were strongly opposed to the use of any quality of tin, the whole Commission was called together and copper was decided upon for the roofing material.

There was, however, no doubt about the quality of the tin, the whole question being whether tin should be used at all. The tin used by the contractor was precisely that which the executive committee of the Commission had ordered, to-wit: Taylor's Old Style, double dipped, Target and Arrow brand tin; and that tin is the very best roofing tin to be had in the market, and it is made in Maryland.

It follows that the statement that Mr. Liller was using an inferior quality of tin is not corrrect and does an injustice to him, and to the commission, which I hope you will correct by publishing this communication

I am, very respectfully yours,
ROBERT R. HENDERSON.

[In making publication of the article referred to above by Judge Henderson, it was not the editor's intention to cast any reflection either upon the court house contractor or upon the Court House Commission, but simply gave voice to a well defined rumor, and from a source which we considered competent, that the tin used in the construction of the conrt house roof was of an inferior quality, or at least, a low grade material. We trust this explanation of our position will be satisfactory to all concerned.—Ed. Republican.]

SUNDAY SCENES AT THE MOUNTAIN CHAUTAUQUA

How the Residents Spend the First Day of the Week in Peace And Quiet.

NO SUNDAY EXCURSIONISTS THERE

Vespers at the Hall of Philosophy—Throngs in the Amphitheatre and Magnificent Music at the Sacred Song Service—News Items.

The Chautauqua at Mountain Lake Park, which is located on a magnificent plateau of the Alleghany Mountains, midway between New York on the east and St. Louis on the west, is probably, with one exception, the most national and the most cosmopolitan of all the Chautauquas of the country. Some of the others may hire the same lecturers and the same entertainers, they may organize department of instruction, they may cultivate all the reforms and they may move with all the movements, but they remain more or less provincial.

At the Mountain Chautauqua, however, there is to be found a distinctly national, if not international breadth, and the spirit of the place is hospitable to world ideas and world impulses. This characteristic makes the place delightful and congenial to the thousands of agreeable people who come to Mountain Lake Park year after year from all parts of the country. The week just closing, which is also the wind-up of the second week of the Twenty-Sixth Annual Session, brought in large numbers from every section of the country. Indeed, the hotels and boarding houses have become so crowded for room that private residents are being beseiged for rooms in their dwellings so that the strangers may be accommodated. By the end of the week everything will be as full as comfort will permit and Mountain Lake Park will have established the record of having the largest number of people within her gates in the history of the place.

All this prosperity coming to Mountain Lake Park with such a rush is but the expected response to the work and energy displayed throughout the entire year by the genial superintendent, Dr. W. W. Davis, who has traveled incessantly since early last fall, preaching and talking in cities of the first and intermediate class, in towns of some pretensions and in hamlets and villages, always pushing Mountain Lake Park to the forefront as the leading Christian summer resort of America. Then he has sent out thousands of well written and neatly printed booklets, circulars and personal letters inducing people to come. The honor, in great measure, for the large crowds present therefore, necessarily goes to Dr. Davis and his efficient manner of doing things at the right moment. May he continue in his present position is, or at least should be, the earnest wish of all friends of Mountain Lake Park.

Sunday at Chautauqua is a unique experience for the frequenter of other summer resorts. The ubiquitous Sunday excursionist and picnicker is entirely cut out. Trains do not stop at the station after midnight Saturday until the following Monday morning, so that if one desires to be at Mountain Lake Park on Sunday the only way to arrive there is to be there Saturday night or drive from Oakland or Deer Park Sunday. Trains fly up and down the railroad track but they do not even slow-down at the depot. This restriction usually strikes the casual visitor as a bit of Puritanical sabbatarianism, but it has the virtue of preserving a unique and characteristic Sunday for the Chautauquans. The day is given up to rest and religious exercises, and one may rest and worship out in the open air beneath the spreading branches of the giant oaks, within the canvas skirted walls of the magnificent amphitheatre or in one's own privacy without being disturbed by the excursionist or his activities.

The eleven o'clock services in the big amphitheatre last Sunday morning drew a crowd of three thousand or more to hear Dr. Charles W. Baldwin, President of the Mountain Lake Park Association, deliver a sermon in which the speaker urged the adaptation of the Christ-life by his auditors. At 5 o'clock in the afternoon the most delightful and characteristic of all the Chautauqua religious services, the vesper service indigenous to the place, was held in the Hall of Philosophy under the personal guidanc of Dr. W. L. Davidson. Hundreds crowded the Hall and participated in the beautiful and worshipful liturgical service of the vespers.

One of the most beautiful things of the day is the grand sacred concert and song services in the amphitheatre in the evening. The Chautauqua chorus, with its many trained voices, the soloists, the orchestra and the mighty throng of the audience furnish some inspiring and soul-stirring sacred music. No wonder the casual visitor to Mountain Lake Park is likely to return again and again and to become at last a confirmed Chautauquan.

Fortunately no one is compelled to surfeit himself by attending these many services. He may wander in the woods, may drive through the country or may stroll about the well kept streets, but Sunday at the Chautauqua is largely devoted to other things than amusements. Nevertheless, I have heard more than one person ordinarily possessed of little interest in the religious side of life admit after trial of it that Sunday at the Mountain Chautauqua is not half bad.

The most prominent features on the program for the week beginning with tomorrow are as follows:

Friday, 11.00 a. m., Lecture, "Man For the Century," Rev. H. C. Millington. 7.45 p. m., Musical Prelude. 8.15 p. m., Lecture, "Radium," Dr. C. H. Tyndall, with practical demonstrations.

Saturday, 11.00 a. m., "Wireless Telegraphy," Dr. C. H. Tyndall. 8.00 p. m., Grand Week-end Concert.

Sunday, 11.00 a. m., Sermon, Dr. Russell H. Conwell, with special music by Chorus and Lotus Glee Club. 7.00 p. m., Eventide Song Service and Stereopticon Views.

Monday, 11.00 a. m., first gathering of the "Seton Indians." 8.00 p. m., Lecture, "The Silver Crown," Dr. Russell H. Conwell, a favorite at the Park.

Tuesday, 2.30 p. m., Lecture, "Panama, a Drama in Four Acts," Dr. Robert S. MacArthur, of New York. 7.45 p. m., Weber Male Quartette. 8.00 p. m., Musical Lecture, "Grand Opera," with Stereopticon Views—something new.

Wednesday—"Fraternal Day," Red Men, 11.00 a. m., Lecture, "America's Great Place Among the Nations," Dr. Robert S. McArthur. 1.00 p. m., Convocation of Red Men. 3.00 p. m., Lecture, "The Uses of Ugliness," Jahu DeWitt Miller. 7.45 p. m., Weber Male Quartette. 8.00 p. m., "Goeth's Faust in Music and Art," with Stereopticon Views, and Vitagraph Moving Pictures.

Thursday, 11.00 a. m., Annual Question Drawer, Jahu DeWitt Miller. 8.00 p. m., Lecture, "The Greatest of All Americans," Dr. Henry R. Rose, followed by Moving Pictures.

On Monday, August 17th, the annual Tournament, for the benefit of the Woman's Civic Club of Mountain Lake Park will be held in Bishop's Field, near the Dennett Hotel, at 2 o'clock p. m., with Maj. J. M. Burns, as Manager, and Dr. H. W. McComas as Chief Marshall. Governor Crothers has been invited to be present and deliver an address on "Good Roads." Fine horses, excellent exhibitions of horsemanship, foot races, sack races, etc. Music by Stephens' Famous Band. This Tournament will doubtless draw a great crowd.

On Wednesday next there will be in all probability one of the largest crowds ever on the grounds. The "Red Men" will be here in force, accompanied by their families and friends. They will burn a "Pale Face" at the stake at 9.15 p. m., in Chautauqua Park. This will be very realistic. The members of the local lodge are requested to meet at Hayden's Hall at 8.45 a. m.

There are quite a number of Uniontown, Pa., people here this season At the Chautauqua Hotel are Dr. and Mrs. L. B. Brownfield, Dr. A. E. Crow, Mr. Alexander Chisholm, and Misses Edith Ritenour and Edith Abraham. At the Mountain Lake Hotel are Mr. and Mrs. Frederick, Attorney Corpenny and Mr Darrell Smiley, and on Saturday this number will be enlarged by Mesdames Dr. Hill, Chas. H. Dixon, Thomas Howard, and Geo. A. McCormick, Mr. Harry Whyel and wife and Dr. LaClair and wife. Mr. A. Stewart Ingles is still here—and we have a successful season as we have had every season that Mr. Ingles has been with us. We have his promise to be here next season.

RAILWAYS WILL AID GOOD ROADS

The Transportation Problem is the Most Important Encountered.

The railroads which gridiron Maryland will do their part in building good roads by granting reduced rates on all carloads of crushed stone to be used in constructing permanent hard roads in the state. The railroad companies were quick to grasp the benefits which they would derive through freight rates and through more prompt delivery of freights if the roads leading to and from their stations are hard and durable. Hence, their ready compliance with the request of the state roads commission for lower rates than the average.

It was rather a difficult problem which the ratemakers of the railroad companies confronted when they were asked to grant a reduced rate on crushed stone. If the cars hauling the stone had to pass through another state, as would be the case, for illustration, in transporting stone over the Pennsylvania railroad from both Port Deposit and adjacent quarries to any county on the Eastern Shore, except Cecil, the Interstate Commerce Commission would have to be consulted and would have to give its consent, after a notice of 30 days, to the requested reduction, since the cars would have to pass through another state, Delaware additional to Maryland. The Baltimore and Ohio and the Western Maryland companies are similarly handicapped along certain portions of their route, since the two roads freely mingle in Maryland and West Virginia, west of Harper's Ferry.

In the confines of Maryland, however, the railroad and steamboat companies are not hampered by the Interstate Commerce Commission and the reduction in rates for crushed stone can be at a figure which will cover the cost of transportation.

When the State Roads Commission started out on its mission to build permanent highways it recognized the necessity of low rates in order to bring the building of roads within reasonable cost. Chief Engineer Crosby was instructed to secure from the railroad companies as low rates as possible.

Masonic Outing and Picnic.

Oakland Lodge of Masons is in receipt of an invitation to attend an outing and picnic to be held at Morris Park, on the Morgantown and Kingwood Railroad, Thursday, August 20th. The outing will be under the auspices of the Masonic Lodges of Preston county, W. Va., the invitation to the local lodge having been extended by the Terra Alta fraternity. Members of Oakland lodge who wish to avail themselves of the outing may communicate with the Master of Oakland lodge by Saturday of this week and not later than Monday of next week. The picnic grounds may be reached by leaving Oakland on train No. 3 Thursday morning and the return can be made on train No. 12 the same evening.

OAKLAND AGAIN VISITED BY DISASTROUS FIRE.

Two Valuable Horses, Three Stables, Vehicles and Other Property

DESTROYED YESTERDAY MORNING

Mr. G. A. Shirer, In An Endeavor to Save Horses from Stable, Very Seriously Burned About His Face and Hands.

Yesterday morning shortly after one o'clock an alarm of fire was sounded by the electric light siren which brought the majority of the residents of Oakland to the streets, knowing as they did that a fire or some worse calamity was occuring.

At the time of the alarm a heavy fog was over the town and the location of the fire could not be ascertained immediately but within a few minutes it was located in the alley running through the block bounded by First, Oak, Second and Water streets, and in the rear of Shirer & Co's stove and tin store, where it had its origin in the stable belonging to the firm. Occurring as it did so late in the night and in the building where no one connected with the firm had been for five hours, there is every reason to believe that it was set on fire, whether intentionally or otherwise being a matter of speculation.

The fire was discovered in the upper portion of the stable where a quanity of hay had been stored and had gained so much headway that it would have been impossible to save the building had men and means been on the ground. Mr. G. A. Shirer, one of the firm, who resides in the Shirer home fronting on Oak street which is removed but a little distance from the stable site, was one of the first to see the fire. As quickly as possible he went into the stable where the horses where tied and endeavored to release them. He succeeding in loosening one which rushed from the building through the alley doorway which had been opened from the outside by other men who had arrived. The released animal when it went through the door was a mass of flames and ran down the street where it was caught and taken to another stable. In the meantime Mr. Shirer's clothing had taken fire and his face, neck and hands were horribly burned, but retaining his presence of mind he ran from the building and was taken to his home where his injuries were dressed by Dr. J. E. Legge. The remaining horse in the stable could not be gotten out and it was incinerated.

From the Shirer stable the fire communicated to the stable on the lot adjoining, belonging to Mr. G. S. Hamill, which burned, along with the stable opposite on the Townshend lot, and rented by Mrs. Baker Banks, who had a quantity of hay stored therein for winter use.

Yesterday morning the horse belonging to the Shirer firm was shot, its injuries being of such a nature that it could not recover.

Besides losing the two animals a wagon, buggy, several sets of harness, grain, etc., belonging to Messrs. Shirer were also burned, entailing a loss variously estimated at from $1200 to $1500. The other buildings burned were of a more or less substantial nature and will cost to replace them about $500.

Some excellent work was done by the assembled citizens in keeping the fire confined to the buildings burned

This morning Mr. Shirer's condition is considered favorable by his attending physician, although at times he suffers very much.

To the Fruit Growers of Garrett County.

OAKLAND, Md., August 12, 1908.

At the State Horticultural Exhibition, held in Baltimore in December, 1906, $23 were won in premiums upon Apples from Garrett county. I now offer the above to be contested for in Oakland, on a date to be named in October.

For the best general collection of Apples, consisting of not less than 7 apples of a kind, and including as many kinds as possible. First prize, $5; second prize, $3.

For the best single plate of Apples, consisting of not less than 7 apples of one kind, fifteen prizes of $1 each will be offered, being awarded to the most perfect fruit. (Winter, or late keeping varieties are most desirable).

In this competition, absolute perfection of each apple must be sought rather than size. They should be hand picked, and each apple wrapped in soft paper separately, and closely packed in a small box in layers. The name of the apple and the owner's name and address, should be written on a slip of paper and accompany the fruit.

W. MCCULLOH BROWN,
Vice Pres. State Horticultural Society.

Tournament at Mt. Lake Park.

The tournament scheduled to take place next Monday afternoon on the Bishop Field, adjoining Hotel Dennet, under the auspices of the Woman's Civic Club of Mountain Lake Park, promises to be well attended and quite interesting. Seats will be provided for all who may be present and an admission fee of 25 cents will be charged. A number of Oakland riders have signified their intention to enter the lists, as well as several from near-by points. The ladies having charge of the affair will have ice cream, lemonade and other refreshments on sale. They deserve a a liberal patronage.

Conditions Justify Some Increases In Freight Rates.

By MARTIN A. KNAPP, Chairman Interstate Commerce Commission.

JUSTIFICATION for increase in freight rates, if there is to be such increase, may be found, if at all, only in the fact that increased cost of operation and maintenance of railroads has reached a point where reasonable profit on money invested in them is not possible from the revenue they now receive.

The country does not stand still. Each year marks an increase in effort and output and therefore an increased demand for transportation facilities. If the highest point of capacity was reached, then it stands to reason that to meet the increased demand for the years that follow there must be an increase in those facilities commensurate at least with the demand for them. To provide new facilities takes money.

IN ORDER TO INVITE THE INVESTMENT OF CAPITAL A RAILROAD MUST BE ABLE TO SHOW THAT ITS REVENUES PAY COSTS OF OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE, COSTS OF NEW FACILITIES AS NEEDED AND A FAIR CERTAIN PROFIT ON MONEY INVESTED. THE CAPITALIST IS NOT SATISFIED TO KNOW THAT IT IS POSSIBLE FOR A ROAD TO DO THIS. HE MUST BE ASSURED THAT IT IS CERTAIN TO DO IT AT ALL TIMES.

Wages have been increased a number of times by the railroads in recent years, while FREIGHT RATES HAVE PRACTICALLY REMAINED UNCHANGED. The cost of operation and maintenance of a railroad approximately, as last year, is 70 per cent of its gross receipts. Out of this 70 per cent about two-thirds is paid in wages. Now, it stands to reason that if wages are increased 5 to 10 per cent there is a big increase in the cost of maintenance and operation of the road. In just the degree that this cost is increased is lessened the opportunity of the road to provide new facilities and to bring the old facilities up to a fixed satisfactory standard.

IT IS A MATTER OF PUBLIC INTEREST, FIRST, THAT GOOD WAGES BE PAID RAILROAD EMPLOYEES; SECOND, THAT PRESENT TRANSPORTATION FACILITIES BE KEPT UP TO A SATISFACTORY STANDARD AND, THIRD, THAT NEW FACILITIES BE PROVIDED TO MEET THE EVER INCREASING DEMAND FOR THEM.

Inasmuch as the cost of wages has been raised considerably in many instances during the last year or so, and inasmuch as the cost of equipment has also increased, while the rates are practically now what they were before these increases occurred, it is not unlikely that some roads may have to increase—not all, perhaps, but some—their freight rates.

Talk About War With Japan Pronounced Sheer Nonsense.

By THOMAS J. O'BRIEN, American Ambassador to Japan.

SHEER NONSENSE IS WHAT I SHOULD TERM THIS PALAVER ABOUT WAR BETWEEN JAPAN AND AMERICA.

It is a matter of sober fact that the Japanese, as far as one can learn by close observation and by being brought in contact with their leading men, are not inclined toward war at all. They do not want war either with the United States or with any one else.

THE PICTURE OF JAPAN AS A BLOODTHIRSTY NATION, ITS HEAD ON FIRE WITH THE LUST OF CONQUEST AND WITH A VERY LARGE CHIP ON ITS SHOULDER, IS QUITE ABSURD. JAPAN IS LOOKING FORWARD TO A FUTURE OF COMMERCIAL GREATNESS ABOVE ALL ELSE. HER EYES ARE NOT FIXED UPON WAR, CONQUEST AND BLOODSHED.

Japan wants to be a great commercial country, a great manufacturing country and a wealthy country. She is seeking to extend her markets wherever possible, to increase the scope of her manufactures, to open up new markets and to add to her mercantile marine.

I find IN JAPAN A SENSE OF SURPRISE OVER THE TALK OF THE POSSIBILITY OF WAR of which our newspapers were so full some time ago. In Japan Americans are popular in the extreme. Japan regards us as HER MOST IMPORTANT CUSTOMER and the country as the one with which, above all, she must maintain friendly and close relations. We take about half of her exports today and are by far her largest customer. She also buys quantities of material from us.

The money which Americans pour into Japan each year for Japanese goods, especially silks, is of much importance to the islands. Japan appears to have no intention of doing anything to interrupt the course of trade and the maintenance of friendship between herself and America.

Poor Rich People Can't Pay Their Ordinary Bills.

By STUYVESANT FISH, Former President Illinois Central Railroad.

I KNOW OF MANY WEALTHY PERSONS WHO HAVE NOT THE READY CASH TO PAY THEIR BILLS. The result is the merchant does not get his money to make new purchases, and therefore business is at a standstill. It is harder for a man who has been living at the rate of $200,000 a year to get down to a $50,000 a year standard than for the man who has been living on $15 a week to get along on $10.

In August I expect there will be a revival of the cry of "hard times," as there always is in presidential years. It will be used by the campaign collectors to get money from men of riches to elect a certain candidate to bring a return of prosperity and a resumption of employment for the workingmen and to restore confidence.

I look for SOME SLIGHT REVIVAL OF BUSINESS AFTER ELECTION. The crops are enormous and the railroads will have all they can do to move them this fall. The gross receipts will show a tremendous improvement, but on account of the high price of labor there will be no improvement in the net earnings. The farmers will get the benefit, and although the railroads will be busy they will not be making any money with which to purchase new materials or to make improvements in roadbeds or extend their lines.

THE WATER CURE THE BEST OF ALL

By Its Use Beauty And Health at Beck Of Every Woman.

Water! water, just as it is, if pure, is the most efficacious and cheapest of beautifiers. Generally speaking, we drink about one-fourth as much as we should through the day. Physicians advise water repeatedly, but we do not "get the habit." We are perhaps busy, and may allow a day to go by without one glass of water between meals; then we drink freely while we eat, which is worse than not drinking water at all, as it retards digestion, especially when the water is icy cold. One should drink water four times a day regularly, half an hour after breakfast, after luncheon, after dinner and half an hour before retiring, the temperature to suit individual taste (except very cold.) The quantity should never be less than four to six large glasses or three pints in twenty-four hours; the water should not be ice cold, nor of a nauseating lukewarmth. Many benefit by a cup of hot water before breakfast in the morning, and if troubled with a form of indigestion called "gas" half a teaspoonful of powdered charcoal should be added. It affords speedy relief; then omit any liquid at meals. Avoid fatty, rich foods; masticate thoroughly and slowly. It is surprising how soon one becomes used to not drinking while eating, and also how soon the good results will be manifest.

One women, whose skin is the admiration of all, washes her face with lukewarm water, the best toilet soap and a piece of soft old flannel each night upon retiring, and rubs it very gently upward with an old linen towel. Then she sips a cupful of hot water; in the morning she dashes cold water over her face and neck and pats it dry with a Turkish towel, and sips a cupful of hot water again. She has never used a cosmetic, and attributes the beauty of her skin to the generous use of water, both internally and externally.

To keep the blood in perfect circulation there is no better aid than bathing. Use a turkish towel mitten for the scrub off and a huck, or Turkish towel for the vigorous afterrub. This is most beneficial as a tonic bath. A little salt added sometimes gives good results to those in poor health.

The value of systematic and proper use of water is really wonderful, but for a person who is physically weak (unless it is ordered by a physician) the cold "dip" in the morning shoud not be indulged in. Sometimes it depreses, and again it accelerates, the heart action, and causes exhaustion or sinking. After a strenuous day, what a luxury to have a sponge or tub bath, to don fresh linen and to sit down and rest. One should not indulge in it while very warm, or immediately after heavy eating, however. Water is one of the greatest luxuries, and one which rich and poor may enjoy with equal freedom.

TO WED OR NOT TO WED

Answer Depens on What Brother of the Woman Says.

Sunday's Cincinnati Times Star.

Frank Englehart, of Guseman, W. Va., and Elizabeth Evans, of Worthville, Ky., "looked each other over" in Cincinuati Saturday morning in order to decide whether they will marry. The man was willing, he said, but the woman hesitates, saying she wants first to get the approval of her brother, who is coming from Worthville to "have a look."

The meeting took place in the home of Mrs. Adams, 1026 Rittenhouse street. Or, rather, it took place in a candy store Mrs. Adams conducts, so it was a sweet meeting from every aspect. Miss Evans is a sister of the Cincinnati woman, and the meeting at Rittenhouse street had been arranged by correspondence.

Englehart works in the woolen mills at Guseman. He put cards in packages of woolen goods being shipped from the factory, inviting girls to correspond with him. Miss Evans says she was in a store at Worthville when a package was opened and one of the cards dropped out. She wrote, and for nearly two years the correspondence continued. The meeting Saturday was to see if each suited the other enough to make it man and wife.

Englehart was to have met his "bride in prospect" at the depot Saturday morning, but when it was found that the train would arrive at 5 a. m. it was decided to meet at the Rittenhouse street home. So he was taken there in a cab, and as the sun was peeping over the housetops he stepped out, entered the store, and greeted Miss Evans, waiting in the store, with a "How do you do?" There was a clasping of hands while each took mental measurement of the discussion as to whether there would be a marriage.

The second chapter of the romance has not been written.

Englehart said: "It was August 6, 1906, that my brother and I put tags into a number of the woolen goods boxes with our names and addresses on them. We got many answers. My brother was unfortunate. He corresponded with a girl for quite a time, got a picture of a fine-looking girl and went to see her. But instead of the girl shown in the picture he found that his correspondent was a colored girl."

LIGHTNING AND THE SHIPS

Vessels on High Seas Are Struck Oftener Than Is Suppose.

In spite of a popular impression to the contrary, ships remote from the land, we are told by a writer in Knowledge, are seldom damaged by lightning, although some of the most awe-inspiring displays of atmospheric electricity are frequently witnessed by those on board them. To quote:

"Standing rigging, and even parts of the running gear, are now made of steel wires, and this substitute for the old-fashioned hemp serves the purpose of a lightning conductor when the ship is not fitted with such an aid to safety. The electric current is conveyed down the wire rigging, and reaches the sea through the vessel's metal hull. Damage occurs only if the current be interrupted on its way to earth. In a comparatively large proportion of instances the fore-royal truck is struck by lightning, that of the main less frequently, and the mizzen least of the three. Very serious casualties under this head occurred to war ships and merchant vessels in the days of wooden hulls and hempen rigging. In July, 1802, as 13 sail of the East India Company were trying to round the Cape in the vicinity of Algoa Bay, homeward bound, two of them, the Britannia and the Bombay Castle, were struck by lightning. The foremast of each was soon enveloped in flames, and the two masts had to be cut away in order to save the ships and their combustible cargoes. A heavy gale was blowing, the night was dark and the other ships of the fleet, which were hove to at the time, were witnesses of this thrilling incident.

"Many vessels are now fitted with lightning conductors of approved types, lest the wire rigging should fail to carry off the electric current. In May, 1896, shortly after a severe thunder storm, accompanied by lightning and rain, in 3 degrees south, 87 degrees east the P. & O. steamship Victoria had a sudden increase of deviation amounting to 6 degrees in both the standard and the wheel house compasses, and later on it was discovered that the lightning conductor on the fore had fused. The ship must have been struck by lightning during the storm. At 10.55 on the night of December 29, 1907, in 26 degrees 50 minutes north, 21 degrees 20 minutes east, the P. & O. steamship Britannia, outward bound to Syndey, N. S. W., came under the influence of a heavy thunder storm, accompanied by vivid lightning, a deluge of rain and very large hailstones. * * * This weather continued till 5.30 on the morning of the 30th, * * and it was discovered that during the night the fore lightning conductor had been fused in places, and that the strands of the last ten feet of it had been open out. Neither the Victoria nor the Britannia was injured, and this immunity from injury was doubtless due to the presence of lightning conductors."

THE LAW'S DELAYS.

The speech of Mr. Taft at Hot Springs, Va., before the Bar Association of Virginia, is full of practical suggestions for making the processes of justice quicker and less costly. Simplify the codes of procedure recommends Mr. Taft, as England has done. "The code of the state of New York is staggering in the number of its sections." Says the New York Tribune in an editorial yesterday, commenting upon Mr. Taft's address: "It is a familiar observa- among members of the bar that no lawyer, however wide his experience, ever really knows the New York code of civil procedure. Much of the time of courts is cord with this staggering document and many cases are delayed by the failure of attorneys to master it."

There is not state in the union to which the same objection may not apply in reference to its code of procedure. Many attempts have been made to simplify the code of Maryland in both civil and criminal cases. Some progress has been made, it is true, along the line of eliminating antiquated statutes, but in the matter of costs and speedy trials we are no better off than we were fifty years ago.

Appeals, too, says Mr. Taft, should be restricted. The great body of litigation, he thinks, should be confined to courts of the first instance and to intermediate appellate courts. One appeal should be enough, except in certain typical cases which involve constitutional questions or the construction of a statute; upon these he would have the court of last resort pass. Court fees should be reduced so as to make litigation as cheap as possible, and the judges should be induced to render their opinions promptly on the conclusion of a trial, as the English judges do, instead of incubating the matter for protracted periods, as is the American custom. Arbitration wherever feasible should be employed on account of its greater cheapness.

Mr. Taft raises a genuine moral issue, and one of which the country is sure to hear more in the future, when he points out that the present delays and cost of court procedure operate to produce virtual inequality before the law. The poor litigant cannot afford the expense and he cannot endure the delay attendant on getting justice. If one of the parties to a contest is poor and the other rich, the rich litigant can wear out the other's patience and exhaust his resources by resorting to technicalities, delays and appeals. It becomes between them not so much a question of justice as of endurance, and this relative advantage that the rich litigant enjoys over the poor causes dissatisfaction just as surely as if the judges openly discriminated in favor of wealth and power. Mr. Taft's experience on the bench enables him to expose effectively the inequality before the law that results from the present freedom of appeals:

"There is nothing which is so detrimental to the interest of the poor man as the right which, if given to him must be given to the other and wealthier party, of carrying the litigation to the court of last resort, which generally means two, three and four years of litigations. Could any greater opportunity be put in the hands of powerful operations to fight off just claims, to defeat, injure or modify the legal rights of poor litigants off from what is their just due by a lawsuit for such a period, with all the legal expenses incident to such a controversy?"

No man in public life in this country is better qualified than Judge Taft to take the lead in reforming court procedure. The defects of our judicial system as compared with England, for example, have been recognized for years, but the recognition has been academic. No one has addressed himself persistently to the task of arousing and educating public opinion to demand a reform. Mr. Taft regards the reform of court procedure to do away with the law's delays and inequalities as the "greatest issue before the public today." It is safe to say, therefore, that his interest in the question is more than academic. He addresses himself naturally to the reform of the federal judicial system, where, it is objected, the faults which he points out are by no means as prevalent as in the state courts; but a beginning of reform has to be made somewhere, and if something is accomplished to make justice quicker and cheaper in the federal courts the states will not be slow to take up the improvement.

Saving the Ticket.

By Carl Williams.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

"I suppose that all this seems very tiresome to you," said pretty Nelly Briggs as she slipped into a chair beside Carol. "It's not much like your swell parties in the city. They must be grand."

Carol smiled and nodded an absent-minded assent. She was beginning to hate the farce she was playing. Ill health had sent her back to Broadwater, and her old associates in the little town had taken it for granted that because her few dresses were well tailored and her feminine knickknacks were better than those sold at the Boston store she had prospered mightily.

She had not told them that the dresses were last year's styles purchased at the bargain counter after infinite sacrifice and that the knickknacks which seemed so precious in Broadwater eyes were the odds and ends of remnant sales. She had permitted them to believe that her life was one round of gayety and it was all that they in their wistful imaginings pictured.

She was beginning to hate herself for the acted lie. At first it had been very pleasant to receive the homage of her associates, to read the nice things that were said about her in the Broadwater Bulletin and to speak grandly of "in town," but now she found that it had set her upon a pedestal apart from the rest, and she was minded to step down and mingle with the crowd.

Only two days remained of her vacation, and this dance had been arranged in her honor, marking the termination of a round of festivities. As the guest of honor Carol shared her dances impartially with all applicants, dividing a dance between three or four of the boys, but Nelly's remark had dampened her pleasure in her belleship.

It was not at all like the parties in the city. The town hall was no more dingy than the places at which were held the only dances she attended. More, it was clean and bright, and no insistent calls of the waiter jarred the sensibilities and reminded the merry-makers that patronage of the bar was considered indispensable.

"WE'LL SAVE IT!" CRIED SETH JUBILANTLY.

A piano and cornet constituted the orchestra, and they were playing last year's selections. Carol smiled as she contrasted their playing with the fifteen piece bands at the summer parks near town, but the atmosphere was altogether different, and with a sigh she realized that in a few days she would be going back to the tawdry glitter of the city, where she was only one of the lookers on at the real events and where her own field was restricted to the people in her boarding house, the few congenial girls in the church club to which she belonged and the half dozen men in the office where she spent her days bent over a typewriter.

Seth Morey came up to claim the first half of the next waltz, and as she placed her hand in his he said, as Nelly Briggs had done before him:

"I suppose it all seems foolish to you. I guess you're used to men in dress suits and all that."

Carol thought of the men who danced with their hats on the back of their heads and only smiled in reply.

"I'm thinking of coming to the city next fall," continued Seth. "I guess I need a little polishing up."

"You're better off where you are," said Carol wearily. "If you'll take my advice you'll stay here."

"Of course we can't all be as clever as you and get ahead as fast," he said stiffly. "There's Tommy Madigan. I think he has the second chance at this dance."

Carol knew as well as Seth that Tommy was not next in turn, but she accepted the exchange and went whirling about the hall with him, while Seth sat in a corner glowering upon the crowd of dancers and fiercely assured himself that he was foolish to imagine that a girl like Carol would care for a country fellow like himself after she had met so many smart men in the city.

Humbly he admitted the truth of her suggestion that he could not make progress in town, and he succeeded in becoming thoroughly miserable.

He was glad when the two piece orchestra struck up "Home, Sweet Home," and the girls hurried to the dressing room for their wraps. He waited at the door for Carol.

"May I walk home with you?" he asked as she came from the dressing room in her smart coat and furs.

"If—if you won't be cross again," assented Carol, slipping her arm through his. "You know very well," she added as they descended the stairs, "that Tommy Madigan was not next on my list, and yet you got angry because I urged you to stay here at home instead of trying your luck in town."

"I know I was foolish," he asserted, a little sadly. "I'd stand no chance with those city bred fellows. You always were clever and could get ahead."

"It isn't that," explained Carol. "I'm going to tell you all about it, Seth. It's all been a big mistake. Everybody up here supposes that I am doing so well that I can afford to come home for a rest without waiting for the summer vacation. That's not it at all."

"But you're here, and it's only April," he reminded her.

"I'm here," she went on, "because I broke down trying to live and dress myself and do everything on $7 a week. I had to have nice clothes or I could not get a place. I had to put my money on my back instead of into my food. They have no use for a girl who does not convey the impression that the office is a prosperous one. I'm sick and tired of it all, and I loathe the idea of going back."

"You wouldn't care to stay on here," he declared incredulously. "You don't have half the fun. This was a big event tonight for us. Just contrast it with the times you have in town."

"I have; that's what makes me so miserable," she confessed. "In town I don't go to the great balls you read about unless it's to stand outside in the street and catch a glimpse of the rich people as they go in. My balls are in halls smaller than this town hall, and they're horrid. When I go to the theater, it's to climb to the top gallery to hang over the rail and see only a part of the stage."

"And you'd rather stay here in Broadwater?" he asked. "You'd rather live in this sleepy old town than in the city, with all the lights and life?"

Carol looked about her. An April rain that afternoon had left the air cool and sweet. The scent of moist earth and of growing things filled the air with fragrance, and the moon touched with kindly light the little huddle of houses gleaming white against the soft new green of the budding trees.

Then she thought of the city, with its noisome streets, the trenches smelling of gas pipes and sewers, of the reeking pavements and the harsh glare of the electric lights.

She contrasted the quiet of the night with the hurrying, jostling throng of humanity, men and women who never were rested, who thought only of themselves and had no time for others.

"You don't know—the city," she said, with a little sob in her voice. "It's a vampire, merciless and menacing. It sucks your lifeblood and throws you aside for fresh victims."

"Then why go back?" asked Seth quietly. "I haven't spoken before because I thought that you never would be content with Broadwater again, but if you want to stay, dear, can't you stay—as my wife?"

The glad light sprang to Carol's eyes, but the eternal feminine within her rose. It seemed too easy a surrender.

"I have the return half of my ticket," she objected. "I can't waste that."

"I'll get one, too," he suggested, "and we'll go together—on our honeymoon."

"I'd like to go back to the city—for a honeymoon," said Carol shyly. "It seems a shame—to waste the ticket."

"We'll save it!" cried Seth jubilantly. "I'm grateful to the city since it sent you back home—to me."

Satisfied.

"Please, sir," piped the tiny customer, whose head scarcely reached the counter, "father wants some oak varnish."

"How much does your father want, my little man?" asked the shopman.

"Father said you was to fill this," said the little fellow, handing over a half gallon can.

It was duly filled and handed over.

"Father will pay you on Saturday," said the recipient casually.

And then the face of the shopman grew dark.

"We don't give credit here," he said. "Gimme back the can!"

Meekly the little lad handed back the can, which was emptied and handed back to him, with a scowl.

"Thank you, sir," he said. "Father said you'd be sure to leave enough round the sides for him to finish the job he wants to do, and I think you 'ave, sir."—London Scraps.

Most Important Work.

A reporter recently took a journey of considerable length for the purpose of interviewing a rising literary light as to his next novel. On reaching the house he discovered the author seated in his garden engaged in earnest conversation with a little boy who had a large towel pinned around his neck. The author received his visitor cordially, but seemed rather absentminded.

"Are you willing to tell me a little about your next important work?" asked the reporter.

The literary man clicked a pair of shears and patted the boy on the shoulder.

"We were just talking about it as you came up," he said. "Willie thinks I ought to do it with a bowl, but I think I can do it without. What would you advise? You see his mother has always cut it before, but she's away just now!"—Home Magazine.

The Age of Invention Not Fairly Started Yet.

By THOMAS A. EDISON, Inventor.

THE AGE OF INVENTION IS NOT PASSING; IT HASN'T STARTED YET. THE NEXT FIFTY YEARS WILL SEE A MUCH GREATER MECHANICAL AND SCIENTIFIC DEVELOPMENT THAN THE PAST HALF CENTURY ALONG ALL LINES.

You can never tell what some APPARENTLY small discovery will lead to. Somebody discovers something, and immediately a host of experimenters and inventors are playing all the variations upon it. Take Faraday's experiments with copper disks. Looked like a scientific plaything, didn't it? Well, it eventually gave us the trolley car. Or take Crookes' tubes—looked like an academic discovery, but we got the X ray from it. A whole host of experimenters are at work today. What great things their discoveries will lead to no one can foretell.

Why, WE DON'T KNOW ANYTHING YET. Tell me, what physical law do we know? Not one. So far as science is concerned we're still GROPING ABOUT IN THE DARK. With this world of knowledge before us, how can any one say that the age of invention has passed?

Why, we don't even know what electricity is yet. How can we say that we've reached the limit of a force whose very nature we are ignorant of?

It is impossible to predict the lines along which electricity will be developed. It may be illumination. It may be power transmission. Then there's wireless telegraphy and telephony—commercial propositions already, but BOTH IN THEIR INFANCY.

The trolley—that's a thing that's going to develop and spread wonderfully during the coming years. I expect to see Long Island and all the land about New York built up. My molded houses will be a big item in this suburban development.

JUST THINK WHAT IT WILL MEAN WHEN YOU CAN SET UP AN IRON MOLD, POUR IN CONCRETE AND HAVE A COMPLETE HOUSE CONSTRUCTED IN TWENTY-FOUR HOURS.

It's going greatly to reduce the cost of dwellings and enable the poor man to get OUT OF THE CROWDED TENEMENTS. I'm at work on my mold now and expect to have it completed in a few months.

Wall Street a Fixed And Crooked Game.

By ALFRED O. CROZIER, Lawyer, of Wilmington, Del.

WHEREVER I go all over the country I find the victims of Wall street. IT IS A FIXED AND CROOKED GAME FROM BEGINNING TO END. It is a game put up by the insiders against those who are without, and the latter always lose. Your financial games do MORE HARM than all of the other gambling devices combined.

Every panic is followed by a crop of suicides. It is a principle of law that a man is morally responsible for the result of his acts.

THESE WALL STREET MEN MAKE PANICS FOR THEIR OWN SELFISH ENDS. THEY KNOW THAT THE VIOLENT DEATH OF MANY WILL FOLLOW. FOR THE LIFE OF ME I CANNOT SEE WHY THEY ARE NOT GUILTY OF MANSLAUGHTER, IF NOT OF MURDER IN A HIGHER DEGREE.

Some people came out of the recent panic WEARING HALOS. I believe these same men CREATED THE PANIC FOR THEIR OWN LAWLESS ENDS. But whether they actually created the panic or whether they simply took advantage of it is of little consequence to the industries forced thereby to go upon the bargain counter and to be bought up by the same halo wearing gentlemen.

I KNOW THAT THESE SAME INTERESTS NOW PRACTICALLY DOMINATE EVERY MILE OF RAILWAY IN THE UNITED STATES AND THAT DIRECTLY OR INDIRECTLY THEY CONTROL THE ENTIRE FINANCIAL INTERESTS OF THE COUNTRY. THEY ARE AT THIS MOMENT LAYING PLANS TO SEIZE THE CONTROL OF THE POLITICAL GOVERNMENT OF THE UNITED STATES DURING THE COMING NATIONAL CAMPAIGN BY FORCING NOMINATIONS OF MEN WHO WILL GOVERN THE COUNTRY IN THEIR INTEREST.

They would reverse all of the advances made in recent years. Shall we turn over to them the one remaining thing essential to make their strangly grasp on the throat of the country complete? I refer to the control they desire over the entire volume of the currency of the people. They wish the power to expand and contract it at will as a means of raising and lowering the prices of listed securities.

Better No Divorces Than Secret Ones.

By DAVID J. BREWER, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court.

DIVORCE suits are conducted without publicity. A commissioner is appointed to take testimony which is reported to the court and upon which the divorce is granted, while the testimony and the entire proceedings, except the result, are concealed from public view. There are, it is said, unpleasant disclosures. There is a skeleton in the family; public trials bring to light a fearful mess of revolting facts; YELLOW JOURNALS are constantly spreading those impure and disgusting details broadcast through the land—all should be withheld from public gaze.

While I regret as much as any one the disposition on the part of some journals to hunt out the nastiness of life and lay it before their readers, yet against ANY CONCEALMENT OR SECRECY IN JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS I most earnestly protest.

BETTER NO DIVORCES THAN DIVORCES OBTAINED BY SECRET JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS. LET NO MAN BE RICH ENOUGH TO BUY A VEIL TO COVER THE RECORD OF A COURT OF JUSTICE. IF HE WILL COME INTO COURT, IF HE WILL ASK JUDICIAL ACTION, LET HIM DO SO ONLY UPON THE CONDITION THAT EVERYTHING IS TO BE OPEN AND PUBLIC.

BOWSER RIDES HORSE

Says Doctor Recommended It For Some of His Ailments.

IT IS MUCH LIKE A CIRCUS.

First Mount Proves Refractory and Dumps the Old Philosopher on a Pile of Sand, Much to His Sorrow. Shows Spite at Mrs. B.

[Copyright, 1908, by T. C. McClure.]

As soon as dinner was over the other evening Mr. Bowser slipped upstairs with a bundle under his arm that Mrs. Bowser had not caught sight of when he came home. She had carefully studied his features during the dinner hour, but had failed to ascertain that there was anything doing. She had got seated with the cat on her lap, when he came downstairs and made a dramatic entrance. A stranger suddenly appeared before her, and she almost screamed out, and the cat stood up and arched her back. One long look, and the stranger vanished and Mr. Bowser stood in his place. But what a metamorphosis! He had a riding whip in hand; he had on a riding jacket; he had on riding leggings and fancy gaiters; he wore a

"HOW DO I LOOK IN THIS SUIT?"

rakish cap. It was Bowser—Samuel Bowser—the Bowser—equipped for horseback riding.

"What nonsense is this?" demanded Mrs. Bowser as she recovered from her start.

Mr. Bowser walked up and down and switched his leg, and the cock of his cap was rakish.

"What does it mean?"

"Mrs. Bowser," he said as he halted before her, "I want no words with you. On the contrary, I desire to talk over a certain thing with you in the most amiable manner. If any row follows, you alone will be to blame for it."

"But what are you dressed up like a monkey in a circus for?"

Planned to Get Well.

"The matter of my dress is a mere difference of opinion. For three months past I have had valvular trouble of the heart."

"I don't believe it!"

"I have known that at least one of my lungs was going."

"Humph!"

"I certainly have had enlargement of the liver."

"You haven't had a symptom of it—not one!"

"My spleen has been affected, and owing to the strain on my mental powers I have been skirting close to a nervous breakdown."

"And you haven't said a word about it! You have wanted a boiled dinner three nights a week and have eaten like a horse. You have also snored at night until the neighbors heard you. Only last night a policeman stopped in front of the house and listened and then shook his club at our windows."

"I have said nothing about it, Mrs. Bowser, because I did not want to alarm and worry you. I have lived in hopes that a way would be opened for me to pull through. You know I have always been a suffering but a silent man."

"And you have at last found a way?" she sarcastically asked.

"I rejoice to say that I have, my dear. Dr. Shields was in the office on business this morning, and as soon as he saw me he told me what ailed me and gave me medical advice. He says that if I follow instructions I will be a well man within two months. There is nothing chronic, but I have caught things just in time. Two more weeks and it would have been too late."

"And his advice was for you to slip and slide and bob around on a saddle, was it?"

"His advice, madam, was for me to take a little gallop every morning, and I shall follow it to the letter. There will be no slipping nor sliding nor bobbing."

"And you got that rig today?"

"Yes."

"And the horse?"

"The horse will be brought here every morning by a boy. It belongs to a livery stable, of course!"

"And does Dr. Shields own the stable?"

Mr. Bowser turned white and red and glared, but had wonderful control of himself. After a moment he quietly said:

"The programme will go off just as I have laid it out to you, and on my part it will go peacefully. I desire to recover my health and shall make every effort to do so."

"But how do you expect to ride horseback?" she asked, but with less aggressiveness in her tones.

"By climbing on the back of a horse, of course," he replied.

"But—but I don't believe you were ever on the back of a horse in your life. If you don't have the gentlest kind of a horse you will be sure to meet with some accident."

"Madam, I am Mr. Bowser," he said as he walked around and swelled out his chest. "Because I haven't told you about riding to hounds in my younger days and winning four out of five hurdle races you talk about sliding and slipping and bobbing. Let us hear no more of it."

"Very well, but if any accident does happen you must not blame me. I am opposed to the affair."

"There will be no accident and no blaming. How do you think I look in this suit?"

Mrs. Bowser gave him a word of praise. She knew he would carry out his programme whether or no, and so she softened down, as a wife should, and hoped for the best. Mr. Bowser exchanged suits again and looked upon the matter as settled, and peace reigned during the remainder of the evening. Once when he happened to catch sight of the cat with a grin on her face he looked around for the ax or the crowbar, but Mrs. Bowser turned it off by saying that the cat had been looking at funny pictures in the Sunday supplements, and all was serene again.

Dreamed of Riding.

That night Mr. Bowser slept to waken at brief intervals. He also dreamed, and in his dreams he was a knight of old on a cavorting steed. Once the steed cavorted so cavortishly that the knight would have fallen out of bed had not Mrs. Bowser seized him by the shoulder. He was up and had a special breakfast and was at the gate to meet the boy and the horse. The horse came down the street mostly on his hind legs. When he wasn't walking on them he was using them to kick with.

"Isn't he a—a little fresh?" asked the knight as the steed was finally brought to the curb.

"Gentlest, quietest hoss in the stables, sir," repied the boy. "This is the hoss we let out to invalids and little girls to ride. He's just kittenish."

To corroborate the boy the horse reared and squealed and then came down to kick the wheel off a peddler's wagon. Of course a crowd collected, and of course Mr. Bowser was the cynosure. Five minutes after the arrival of the horse he would have given $50,000,000 to be five miles away picking huckleberries.

"Will he do it?" shouted a boy as Mr. Bowser stood there trembling.

"Naw!" shouted a second.

"Look at him!"

"He's got the ager!"

"He'll send the hoss back!"

"S'posin' he'd been our general in the Spanish war!"

Kicked Cart to Pieces.

Mrs. Bowser came to the door and expressed an opinion; but, whatever it was, the words were lost in the hullabaloo made by the peddler as a second wheel was shattered and his old horse got a kick in the ribs besides.

The boy now offered to assist the knight of old to mount and do some cavorting, and what could poor Mr. Bowser do? He did just what Caesar or Hannibal would have done. He got into the saddle and had the stirrups adjusted. Then the boy let go of the bridle and stepped back, and for thirty seconds the horse stood as if turned to stone.

"Look at the jimdandy!" shouted a boy.

"Watch him pound pegs!" yelled another.

A builder had just left a big heap of sand at the opposite curb, and it was upon that heap that Mr. Bowser came down after taking a war balloon sail toward the sky. He struck in a heap and on a heap, and the boy and the horse went up the street like shadows. The knight was brought in and laid on the lounge, and the crowd was dispersed by a policeman. In the course of half an hour Mr. Bowser suddenly sat up and looked all around the room and then fastened his eyes on Mrs. Bowser.

"Are you feeling better, dear?" she softly asked.

He pointed at the clock.

"Yes, dear. What is it?"

"The train leaves for your mother's at 10:10," he hoarsely whispered. "You can go now, and we will settle about the divorce and alimony another time. I know all!" M. QUAD.

The Conventional Thing.

Pater—And did that young man have the nerve to think that he was in a position to propose to my daughter?

Daughter—Oh, he was, papa! He was on his knees.—Cleveland Leader.

An Encouraging Word.

He looked at her thoughfully.

"They say," he slowly remarked, "that two can live for the price of one."

Her hopes suddenly revived.

"Yes," she softly said, "and people eat so very little in the summer time."

Then he proposed.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

KODAK SAFETY FILM

THE REPUBLICAN

BENJ. H. SINCELL, EDITOR.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 13, 1908.

FOR PRESIDENT,
WILLIAM H. TAFT,
OF OHIO.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT,
JAMES S. SHERMAN,
OF NEW YORK.

FOR CONGRESS,
GEORGE A. PEARRE,
OF ALLEGANY COUNTY.

HURRAH FOR BILL!

No one who knows anything worth mentioning of the gospel of what's what needed any additional assurance. It was not intended as assurance. Neither, we are persuaded, was it intended for publication, but only as a private guarantee of good faith. Nevertheless, since it has been printed that the Republican nominee for president of the United States checked the reporters who were handing him titles, and told them to address him as Bill, there is a great wave of content that has a week at Atlantic City simply faded. "Just call me Mr. Taft," said the nominee, after he had been secretaried, and governored and judged for a season, "and if you drop into colloquialism call me Bill." This is getting right in among the people and being one of them, without frills or embroidery. Bill it is. Hurrah for Bill!

Some poet of childhood it was who wrote:

My mother calls me Willie,
My sisters call me Will,
My father calls me William,
But the fellows call me Bill!

Being Bill was acceptance into full comradeship and more to a boy than his first long pants. We won't try to say what might be suggested in one way or another by either of the other diminutives of the name in full, but to be Bill was to have arrived. To know that to be Bill was promotion to the high level of unsullied and unqualified democracy in which there is no superior was to be worthy, and to take promotion in the spirit in which it was conferred was getting into a noble brotherhood with both feet. The Hon. William H. Taft has long been Bill to the American people as a popular recognition of him as one of themselves and he answers to the name as one raised on it.

With Bill on the White House job the plain people will know that one of themselves is attending to their business just like Teddy did, and that will be like ready money to the whole nation. Everyone can go right on attending to business and leave the rest to Bill. It will be like having one of the home folks attending to the nation's affairs.

CHANGE IN TACTICS.

At the time of the Denver convention and immediately thereafter the whole declared purpose of Bryan and his immediate supporters was to make their campaign in the States of the Middle West. They were turning their backs upon the East.

It was represented that such States as Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota and Kansas were so aflame for Bryan that he would carry all of them, though not one had voted for him in either of his former campaigns. With these States it was no trouble to calculate that the United States farther West would be swept into the Bryan column, so that from Ohio to the Pacific there would be a pretty solid body of electoral votes for the Democratic candidate. This with the South would make Eastern support unnecessary.

But there has been a change. An Eastern man has been made chairman of the National Committee, and a Bryan program of Eastern invasion has been announced within a day or two. What has caused this change in the plan of battle? Has it been discovered that the States of the Middle West cannot be depended upon to sweep away from the large Republican majorities they have been returning in the recent past and give their electoral votes to the Democratic nominee? That certainly would be the discovery if proper inquiry were made into conditions as they exist today.

Impartial reports from these States—the seven above named—do not put any in doubt except Wisconsin, with a suggestion of suspicion about Indiana and in both these situation is due more to local than general causes. They are affected if at all, by conditions which are not felt in the other States, and there is after all very small reason to believe that either will fail in the round-up to give its electoral vote to Judge Taft.

The discovery of the Western situation and the shifting of the campaign within a month are not encouraging signs in Bryan's cause. Anybody can tell Mr. Bryan that he has nothing to hope for in the East: if he cannot get a nearly solid West he is done for, and it is very clear he knows he cannot get it.

WIPING OUT FORESTS.

Speaker Cannon's opposition to the forest reserve bill in the last session of congress is yielding results, as indicated by the recent announcement that one of the largest bodies of virgin forest in the eastern States is scheduled for destruction. This is set forth in the news item announcing the sale by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad of 200,000 acres of hard wood timber land in West Virginia to a company which will begin operations. Another recent sale in that section turned over 129,000 acres.

The Pittsburg Dispatch of yesterday, under the editorial caption, "Wiping Out Forests," uses the above transactions in the following comment:

"The inevitable results," says the Dispatch, "of transferring these 500 square miles of forest to the ordinary lumbering enterprise is the complete denudation of the forests region. This is for the reason that the cash profits are larger when a tract is cut straight through and cleaned out by wholesale than if only the fully matured trees are selected and the partly grown trees saved to yield a steady production of lumber for the future. American enterprise seeks the return in sight for this generation. It may be that wise modifications of State tax laws could be made to increase the inducements for private owners to preserve forests. But under existing conditions the passage of any timber tract into ownership organized for profit means the destruction of the forest.

"The first fruit of Speaker Cannon's opposition to forest reserve policy is, therefore, the doom of a forest region as large as a good-sized county, the wiping out of what might be a perpetual natural resource, and by the loss of the forest cover the accentuation of the changes from flood to low water in the Ohio and its West Virginia tributaries. Doubtless other forest regions in the Appalachian slopes will go the same way. But as the votes which keep Speaker Cannon in Congress are not affected by the loss he will probably view the results with philosophical complacency."

Advertising That Paid.

The California Fruit Growers' Association, working in conjunction with the Union Pacific Railway, determined upon a publicity campaign to get people to buy oranges. The fruit growers wanted an enlarged market and the railroad wanted a long haul to the market, so together they bought newspaper space to tell Iowans of California oranges. The first shipment of oranges comprised a full train and the fruit found a ready market. A second train of twenty-five cars brought more than the market price. Iowans this year increased their consumption of oranges by 70 per cent over any year preceding. The people were satisfied with the fruit, the Union Pacific was satisfied with its returns from the freight charges, and the growers were well pleased with the prices which the fruit brought. All three got their money's worth and the railroad and the association have their principal expended in advertising back in their pockets and along with it the reward of enterprise.

But the profit is not all accounted for yet. Interest on the original advertising outlay will be collected by the railroad and fruit growers for years to come.

Does advertising pay? No practical man of affairs presumes any longer even to consider the question one of a debatable nature.—Racine Wisconsin Times.

THE DEATH RECORD.

MRS. JULIA D. HOWARD.

Mrs. Julia D. Howard, wife of Capt. McHenry Howard, a prominent member of the Baltimore bar, died Saturday at her home in Oakland of heart trouble. She had been ill for three weeks, but it was only in the past few days that her illness became alarming. She was 66 years old. Mrs. Howard was born in Louise county, Virginia, was the daughter of the late Clayton G. and Sarah Jerdone Coleman. For the last 30 years she had lived in Baltimore. Her city home, 919 Cathedral street, was at one time the scene of many brilliant social functions. Mrs. Howard was of distinguished ancestry as is her husband, who is a grandson of Col. John Eager Howard. Besides her husband Mrs. Howard is survived by one son, Mr. Charles McHenry Howard, and three daughters, Misses Elizabeth G., Julia McHenry and Mary Howard. The body was taken to Baltimore Monday. Funeral services were held at Emmanuel Church Chapel, Read and Cathedral streets, Tuesday.

MRS. MARTHA DELL KELLEY M'ILLWAIN.

Mrs. Martha Dell Kelley, wife of Captain David B. McIllwain, died on Friday, the 7th inst., at her home, No. 45 West Sixtieth street, New York City, after a short illness. She was fifty-seven years of age and was the daughter of General Benjamin F. Kelley, who was said to be the first Union officer wounded during the Civil war and who died on his farm near Oakland some fifteen years ago. Mr. and Mrs. McIllwain lived in Paris for many years after the war and only returned to the United States in 1901. Mrs. McIllwain's body was interred in Wheeling, West Va.

THE TOWN OF CRELLIN

And the Railroad Built From It Through the Mountains.

From Tuesday evening's Grafton Republican the following interesting article relative to Crellin and the Kendall lumber interests is clipped:

The editor returned last evening from Crellin, Md., where he spent a few days very enjoyably with relatives, after a season of pretty hard work at his desk, and where he found considerable relief from ills following overwork. Crellin is about two miles from Hutton, and five miles from Oakland, Md., located on the waters of Youghiogheny. Here has been established one of the largest and most important lumber plants that may be found in Maryland or in the section of West Virginia bordering on that state. The plant was established some fifteen years ago. It was at first owned by the Preston Lumber Company, but was purchased some years ago by the big Kendall Lumber Company, who have many mills in Maryland, Oregon and other states, and whose headquarters are at Pittsburg. The lumber plant that was first erected at Crellin was destroyed by fire some years ago, and a larger and better plant, substantially built and containing all the modern improvements known to lumber mill plants, was erected in its place. The Kendall Company has been busy throughout the entire past season of dullness, and the works have been shut down not at all. The mills at Crellin are equipped with model mill machinery and a recent acquisition is the steam log-loader, by which three men, operating a huge machine, do the work of ten or twelve in loading the mammoth logs on cars all along the several branches of standard-guage railroad that has been built by the company and which reaches out in all directions over the surrounding country.

While the plant itself and the town of Crellin is located in Maryland, it is so near to West Virginia line that the greater portion of the company's valuable timber holdings and fields are in this state. The railroad built by the Kendall company is first class road, rock-ballasted and graded in many places. The line now being mostly used is built and used to within a few miles of Parsons, W. Va., so one of the very valuable assets of the company thereof re is its railroads. The company owns coal mines, with the railroad running to them. The town of Crellin is comprised of the possibly fifty two-story houses, all of them owned by the company and occupied by the employees. The lumber plant is right on the banks of Youghiogheny, at one edge of the town itself. A splendid electric light plant in the mill building provides light for plant, the mill and for the main street of the town, for the company's big store and for the superintendent's residence.

The plant has railroad outlet at Hutton, on the main line of the B. & O., from which point all the shipments of lumber, &c., are made. The employees of the Kendall Company, something over a hundred in all, are a well contented and happy people. They enjoy many privileges and the comforts one would not expect to find a location of the kind, and are in the midst of a good agricultural community, obtaining the freshest and best country produce. The town has a nice church building and a commodious school building.

In all probability of the line of railroad that has been constructed through the mountains toward Parsons, Tucker county, will in the future become a busy freight and passenger line. All indications point that way. It would prove a quick transit from the B. & O. to the Western Maryland, and, touching as it does, so much valuable farming, timber and coal lands, would prove a great developer to a section of country that would otherwise lie dormant for numberless years.

LINCOLN MEMORIAL ROAD.

Route Proposed by Representative George A. Pearre.

Congressman George A. Pearre will aid in the movement to have the proposed Lincoln Memorial Boulevard from Washington, D. C., to Gettysburg, Pa., run through Frederick. In a letter Col. Pearre states that he proposes at the next session of Congress to introduce a bill providing that the route of the road, if constructed, shall be from Washington through a part of the District of Columbia and Montgomery county to Rockville, thence through Gaithersburg, Germantown and Clarksburg, in Montgomery county; thence through Urbana and Araby to the city of Frederick, in Frederick county; thence through Creagerstown and Thurmont to Emmittsburg, and thence to Gettysburg. Concerning this proposition, Col. Pearre says:

"Although this is not a straight line, yet it would run through Montgomery, and Frederick counties into Pennsylvania, over a great part of the line on which the Union soldiers marched and fought during the civil war, in this respect unlike the Lafean route, not a mile of which was covered by the soldiers of the Union until Gettysourg is reached.

When you come to town don't forget to call at the Gold Mine Store. Candy, tobaccos, fishing tackle, 2 bottles pop for 5c. Geo. M. Mason, Prop'r.

TO WALK OVER BRADDOCK ROAD

Students of History to Combine Investigation With Recreation.

A party composed of educators, students and others interested in history will start this morning from Cumberland to walk over the entire length of the famous Braddock road from Cumberland to Braddock, Pa., the scene of Braddock's defeat in the French and Indian war.

The pedestraians, who have been at the Queen City Hotel since Saturday, are John K. Lacock, of Amity, Pa., a student of history at Harvard, taking a post graduate course, who was largely instrumental in getting up the expedition; E. K. Weller, Washington, Pa., photographer on the trip; Prof. C. F. Abbott, Somerville, Mass., teacher of history; Prof. Henry Temple, teacher of history, Washington, Pa., and son, John Parr Temple, a student at the Washington Academy; Edgar B. Murdoch and brother, John H. Murdoch, Jr., a student at Washington and Jefferson College, Washington, Pa.; Prof. Clarence S. Larzelere and Mr. Isaac Yohe.

The trip is in the nature of an outing, which however, will combine study and investigation with recreation. The course of the road is about 130 miles. Some sections may have been obliterated, but there are parts that are still well defined. Notes will be taken by the members of the party. It is expected that the exhibition will be fraught with interest to the students of colonial history—Cumberland News.

A Painful Accident.

Tuesday a young man named Alonzo Martin, employed on the Kendall mill at Crellin as a lath sawyer, had one of his heels ground off between the cogs of some machinery on the mill. His injury was dressed by Dr. McComas.

An Enjoyable Hay Ride.

One of the most enjoyable times was spent last Tuesday night by a crowd of our young people who went on a hay ride to Aurora. It was no trouble to tell when they left and the citizens of Aurora were well aware that something was coming long before the crowd arrived. A good time was awaiting them at the Lantz House, where some excellent music and refreshments were served to the satisfaction of all. On leaving, Aurora's young set came out and bid them farewell by singing "Good Night, My Lady." This started them off in high spirits. Our young people claim to have had the best of times but they say the after effect is terrible. The crowd was composed of Misses Vernie Shrock, Pearl Lawton, Bessie Ward, Beatrice Hayward, Annie Lowenstein, Jennie Lee, Margaret Lawton, Marie Helbig, Anita Poling, Teckla Johnson and Messrs. Roy Hammond, Wellington Crane, Lloyd Durst, Harry Porter, Fred. Furbee, Ralph Thayer, Ralph Weber, Philip Peddicord, Paul Naylor.

Forest Survey of Garrett County.

Mr. F. W. Besley, the State Forester, with two assistants is making a forest survey of this county, and gathering data as to its forest resources and conditions. In due time a forest map will be published and the data presented in the form of a report. Mr. Besley has established field headquarters at Mountain Lake Park where he will be glad to consult with those interested in the care and protection of woodlands. Part of the duty of the State Forester is to examine woodlands of private owners when requested by them and to recommend plans of management. He can be seen at Mount Pleasant Cottage at the Park or can be reached by mail at that place.

GIVE THEM A START

The New Year is rapidly approaching. This would be a good time for you to start your young folks on the road to Success.

Early training in the practice of self-denial; instruction as to the use and value of money; opportunities for earning and saving money; all these tend to fix and fasten the children in the ways of thrift and prosperity.

We most gladly assist the young people in getting started.

One Dollar opens an account and entitles the depositor to one of our Savings Banks.

We shall be pleased to have our Garrett County friends call and receive a 1908 Calendar.

The Baltimore & Ohio has awarded contracts for 14,500 tons of steel rails. The contracts were about evenly divided between the Maryland Steel company, the Bethlehem Steel company and the United States Steel Corporation. The rails are wanted by the company as soon as they can be delivered, and they will be used for replacing old rails all over the system. The price is understood to be $28 per ton, which makes the total cost $408,000.

Edward A. Shaffer, of Oakland, Md., was in the city for a few hours this morning enroute to Wheeling and other points west, and during the interval between trains spent the time as the guest of friends. Mr. Shaffer is the chief operator of the Western Union and the B. & O. at the Mountain City and is quite prominent in Democratic politics at his home city, having been associated with the "unterrified" since birth and was long a worker in the Gorman ranks before the demise of the noted leader.—Grafton Sentinel.

TRAIN LOAD OF REGULARS.

Battalion of the Fifteenth Infantr Passed Through Friday.

Last Friday morning a battalion of the Fifteenth United States Regular Infantry passed through Oakland on a special train run as the first section of train No. 3, being bound for Fort Douglas, at Salt Lake City, Utah, from Fort Slocum, New York, where the battalion had been stationed for some time.

At the station here a number of the men got off the train and when it pulled out one of them was left behind, although he made strenuous efforts to catch the train by running after it until it disappeared around the bend west of depot. He returned to the station and was taken on west by regular train No. 3 which followed a few minutes afterward.

The soldiers were quarted in five cars of the old-fashioned Pullman type. They were in charge of two sergeants there being no commissioned officers on board. The soldiers were a very jolley set of men and seemed to be enjoying their trip immensely.

Major J. C. Alderson, formerly of Mountain Lake Park but now residing in Charleston, West Va., was very seriously injured by falling over a horse block while walking along a street in his home city a few days ago. His condition is improving but it is said that he will suffer from the effects of his fall for some time to come.

State Senator W. McCulloh Brown spent Tuesday in Oakland on business. In another column of this paper Senator Brown urges the Garrett county horticulturalists to send in specimens of their apples for exhibit at the fall meeting of the State Horticultural Society to be held in Baltimore. Arrangements are also being perfected for an exhibition of the fruit in Oakland or at Mountain Lake Park prior to the meeting of the State Society.

Mr. Leonard Lochner, of Lonaconing, who was employed in this office during the year 1905 as job printer, is again in our employ, having taken his old position on Monday of this week. With Mr. Lochner's natural ability as a workman, coupled with the fact that he has at his command the resources of a specially equipped and up-to-date printery THE REPUBLICAN office will keep up the standard of prefection in its job printing department with Mr. Lochner at its head.

Engraved calling cards and wedding invitations may be procured by leaving your orders at this office. A very attractive and stylish line at moderate prices is shown.

Mr. Scott T. Jones, of the Garrett National Bank, made a hurried trip to Somerset, Pa., last Thursday evening, returning to Oakland Friday night. While in Somerset Mr. Jones purchased a five passenger Maxwell automobile, the car arriving here Tuesday morning, being driven across the country from Somerset by a representative of the manufacturing company. The start was made from Somerset about seven o'clock, the machine reaching Oakland shortly before noon, which is considered a good record.

The Potomac Valley Railway Company which has just obtained a franchise in Keyser, Piedmont and along the county road from Keyser to Bloomington, has made a contract with James P. Martin for 16,000 ties, sufficient to complete the entire line from Keyser to Bloomington, delivery to begin at once. Rails have also been ordered and construction will begin in a few days in that portion of Keyser where new paving is to be laid, the franchise requiring the work to be done at the same time as the paving. Immediately after the completing of this work construction will begin in Piedmont and will be pushed to Bloomington as rapidly as possible. The line in Piedmont will have close connection with the Cumberland and Westernport Electric railway, which has its terminal at the Westernport end of the bridge connecting Westernport and Piedmont.

Mr. S. A. Kendall, the proprietor of this paper and the Vice President of the Kendall Lumber Company, left on Monday night for Seattle, Washington, Portland and Roseburg, Oregon. He is on one of his regural trips to the Pacific Coast to look into the real estate holdings owned by the Kendall Lumber Company in Douglas county, Oregon. The Kendall Lumber Company commenced to purchase about two years ago very heavily in that territory. They now own 14,000 acres of the finest Oregon fir and sugar pine timber on the Pacific Coast. In order to make their holdings absolutely secure they bought the riparian rights for forty miles on the North Umpqua River. Also bought the water and light plants at Roseburg, Oregon, together with 250 acres of mill and town sites at Winchester, Oregon, where the Southern Pacific Railroad crosses the North Umpqua River. It is not their intention to develop this property other than the water and light plants, but they expect to continue to add to their holdings from time to time.—Meyersdale Republican.

Fraulein

By FRANK H. SWEET.

Copyright, 1903, by Frank H. Sweet.

"WHEN the two so fond lovers were made quick into fairies' land by the beautiful white swan," concluded the tale told the children by the little German governess.

"It's a pretty story," said Della, "but not as nice as the one about the little wooden shoes, is it, Joe?"

"Yes," disagreed Joe, "better. The wooden shoe one chops off in the middle and doesn't end."

"But it might end some time, mightn't it, fraulein?" Della questioned earnestly.

"Ach, no—not until floats back the one shoe that was not more seen by the boy and girl playmates."

Fraulein Wilma Kraft was not lackadaisical. Her eyes were a cheerful blue and looked philosophically upon life as she found it; her face was like a round, pinkly ripened peach, and her wholesome mouth had no pathetic tendencies; her waist was plump enough to discredit any suggestion of pining, yet it seemed as if the buckle of the belt, fitting so trimly around it, creaked faintly—about as much as the extra strain of a sigh might occasion.

"Ach, no."

"I wish I had been the girl to go paddling barefoot in the rushes in the edge of the lake." Della looked with discontented eyes upon the fine kid that held in her rebellious toes. "What do you think became of the shoe that floated away, fraulein?"

"Ah, who could say that?"

"Well, I wish I could see a wooden shoe—I never did." Della mourned, with a dismally defrauded expression that turned fraulein's heart to wax.

"Tomorrow iss the Saturday's holiday," she reminded. "Come you up to mein brutter's house once—ask the mutterkin—there haf I the one little shoe that the girl safed yet."

"Goody!" rejoiced Della. "Mommy won't care. How did you get the shoe, fraulein?"

"Ask me not some questions and I tell you not some fips," said fraulein, laughing and springing suddenly up. "I must now absent me."

Going down the granite walk of the Stanhope grounds, Fraulein Wilma passed Miss Aurelia's new music teacher in the shadow of the winged griffin that snarled above the gateway. He was large, the professor, and ruddy cheeked; his hair, the color of a fresh pine shaving, hung straight to his ears and then curled under; his eyes shone amiably down under big round glasses.

"Gute efening."

Kindly Professor Yost could scarcely pass by a cow in unfriendly silence, much less a little rosy fraulein in the employ of his own patrons. A respectful "Gute efening," in broad, mellow German tones reached her sociable soul.

"Gute efening," she responded, with a quaintly distant courtesy, and went her way, dreaming absently of red clover patches and strong, shapely trees and tranquilly flowing water brooks, all because of the ruddy German with his mellow greeting.

Frau Lena Kraft scolded loudly about the prospective invasion of the Stanhope children on the next day.

"Schildren cooming on the Saturday alretty," she protested shrilly. "They will the cleaning hinter and some mud on the clean floors make!"

Each Saturday it was the good frau's practice to so scrub and scour and splash and sluice the cottage that it was surprising there was a sliver of woodwork left about it. And Wilma was not excused from sharing the household tasks in the face of the fact that she paid her board to her brother and his wife. Lena was a thrifty soul and a driving one.

"Vat you make, Lena?"

"She pay fife tollar efery week? That make no different," would Lena asseverate. "She will scour the tin ant the coff kuchen bake ant make the socks me d."

S. Wilma's opportunity for retrospect or day dream was narrowed to the darning hour, and even that Lena's sharp tongue oftentimes rendered stormy.

Herman, the slow, tranquil husband and brother, smoked his long stemmed pipe in unconcerned silence through Lena's brawlings, but occasionally he opened his mouth briefly and quenched her.

"Vat you make, Lena? Let the schildren coom," he said comfortably on this occasion.

And Lena submitted, though with much wasplike scolding and buzzing, to which Herman paid as little attention as to the rattling of a dry bean pod.

The birds among the trees in the quaint old Dutch yard of the Krafts opened their Saturday morning rehearsals unusually early in response to the sound of Frau Kraft's swishing, splashing, brooming and mopping begun in the rosy gray dawn, and the fraulein's faithfully burnished tinware flashed broken javelins to the rising sun. The good frau was still searching for undrenched corners and Wilma busy frying big round apple butter doughnuts when the young Stanhopes raced up the freshly reddened brick walk edged with blue flag clumps and a fringe of lad's love.

A dark presage of tracks, together with Wilma's desertion of the doughnuts to show the children the wooden shoe, set Lena buzzing like a red wasp.

The wooden shoe.

When the fat little sabot, with its odd, curved toe and wide flat heel, had been returned to the inner circle of Wilma's trunk and Joe and Della were hovering dangerously close to the pink knots of the sacred oleander, Lena fell upon fraulein.

"Ach, himmel!" she scolded. "The house we must to the schildren gif yet—yess. Some tracks they make ant the blumen break—vat you care? Now, yust make on your bonnet once ant make dose schildren home—yess."

Fraulein found no hardship in compliance. Better the smell of dew wet earth than that of boiling lard; more congenial a crisp morning walk between strips of spangled grass than the monotonous forming of knobby fried cakes and the tireless retrain of Lena's pungent tongue.

The children skipped happily beside their little plump governess along the sleepy bystreet which ran suddenly out into the wide avenue where rose the griffin guarded gate. From the opposite side came Professor Yost, beaming rosily, his sleek, pine shaving hued hair gleaming with the vigor of its recent brushing.

"Guten morgen," he greeted as the four reached the shadow of the griffin.

"Guten morgen," fraulein responded sedately, retreating gently. "Guteby, schildren. I must absent me."

The professor's eyes beamed commendingly after the fresh, starchy blue calico of fraulein's disappearing house wrapper.

"Vas ist the little fraulein's name yet?" he asked the children, who went hopping before him like robins.

"Wilma Kraft," Della replied. "She's"—

"Vas?" The professor was standing stock still on the stone walk with his mouth open. "Vere lif she at, hey?"

"In the peaky little house down the next street that looks like mamma's Swiss music box. It's got little bits of window panes, with big red oleanders standing in front. And there's candlesticks and blue plates in a long row on the shelf, and fraulein has a wooden shoe in her trunk"—

"Wooten shoe?" the professor repeated.

"Yes, a stumpy little Dutch wooden shoe," Della babbled on. "She told us a story about it. A German boy and a German girl used to play together beside a lake and sail the girl's wooden shoes for boats, and once one shoe floated away, and they couldn't tell where it went. They paddled and paddled in the edge of the water in their bare feet and sailed out on a raft to find it, and they could not. The girl cried because she was afraid her papa would not buy her any more shoes, and she kept the one shoe to remind her what a nice time she had playing with the boy, for her papa and mamma moved away, and she never saw him again, but she never forgot him. Why, professor, where are you running off to? Weren't you going to give Reelie her music lesson?"

"Vas?"

The visit of the young Stanhopes and the delayed frying of the doughnuts soured Lena for the day. She scolded Wilma roundly for both happenings and made a clean job while she was about it by berating her for all the shortcomings she could rake out of the dim past and saddle upon the plump shoulders of her sister-in-law.

Patiently the fraulein bore the stings and arrows of her relative's tongue. Lena was much the older, and Wilma seldom talked back. With serene forehead and blue, unclouded eyes she trotted about at her task amid a whirlwind of shrill reproach and blunt sarcasm. In her sturdy German mechanism there was no place for hysterical nerves. And still she was a human little person, with warm blood and an inheritance of sentiment throbbing deep in her sensible bosom. She was glad when the apple butter cakes in their knobby rotundity and the sheets of cinnamon sprinkled coffee kuchen for the Sunday breakfast were set away, in company with Lena's feather bed, like loaves of bread, and she could sit near the green paper shaded window in the sitting room and see the oleanders and darn in peace.

Over the plump pink fingers of her left hand she drew a big yarn sock and set to weaving a blue latticework across the grinning hole, wondering in a patiently tranquil way if there might ever be a loophole of escape for her from Lena's perpetual driving and scolding. Her brother Herman had one time given her the practical counsel:

"You shouldt get married once." And Otto Boppert, the prosperous barber on the next block, stood ready to assist her in carrying out the suggestion. Fraulein was studying about Otto now. Otto was short, but very wide. His hands were fat and moist and always smelled of cocoanut oil soap. His face was red and glistening, as if he had but just been dipped from the lard kettle. He laughed in a puffy way, which gave the impression that he was stuffed full of feathers, and he never seemed to think about much besides customers and eatings. Maybe some time she would not mind those things, but now, just after meeting Professor Yost—

Again Wilma's belt buckle creaked.

Presently a good round knock at the entry door roared its way through the faint spattering sounds from the kitchen, where Lena was scouring the flour barrel and slop pail.

"Pettlers," thought fraulein, going tranquilly on with her blue weftage as Lena's flat shoes slapped belligerently forward.

As the door opened she heard the fresh, wholesome voice of the "Guten morgen." "Oggskoose—if the Fraulein Wilma Kraft lif heer yet."

"Ach, ja," Lena's shrill tones responded. "You should valk in, once." And into the sitting room walked Professor Yost, broad, ruddy and smiling cheerfully. He carried a small parcel wrapped in brown paper, which he proceeded silently to unroll. Then he held out upon his broad palm a little wooden shoe.

"Wilma"—he retreated from the pitfalls of his acquired English to the old, deep music of the tongue of his fathers—"dost thou remember Wendolen Yost, thy playmate, the boy who sailed with thee the little wooden shoes upon the lake? Yes? And the one little shoe that sailed away and was lost? But, no, little playmate; it was not lost. It floated to the island and caught fast in the reeds, and one day after the girl playmate was gone the boy found it there and tenderly carried it ashore. And the boy kept it for love of his girl playmate—the pretty little wooden shoe. Now, see, my Wilma, if I speak not the truth, for here is the girl's name carved into the little sole—'Wilma Kraft'—and the date the boy found it in the reeds. He carved them so. Hast thou been waiting these years, little Wilma, for thy playmate lover? Let us wait no longer, my beloved. We have found each other."

"It was not lost."

A Piute Indian Myth.

The Piute Indian myth of the sun, moon and stars is as crudely anthropomorphic as can be found in any savage belief. The moon is the sun's wife. The stars are his children. When he appears the children skedaddle. They live in terror of him. He eats them when he can catch them. His stomach—the only part of him one can see—is stuffed with stars. When he goes to bed the children emerge again from their hiding places in the blue. The moon is fond of her children, who smile as she moves among them. Every month she goes into mourning because her cannibal husband has eaten one of them. The Piute Indians account for the appearance of a comet by stating that the sun often snaps at one of the stars, his children, and does not get hold of it—he only tears a piece out—and the star, getting wild with pain, goes flying across the sky with a great spout of blood flowing from it. It is then very much afraid, and as it flies it always keeps its head turned to watch the sun, its father, and never turns its face away from him until it is far out of his reach.

Definition of a Dachshund.

This is what the boy wrote about the dachshund:

"The dockshound is a dorg notwithstandin appeerencis. He has fore legs, two in front an two behind, an they ain't on speekin terms. I wunst made a dockshound out of a cowcumber an fore matchis, an it lookt as nacheral as life. Dockshounds is farely intelligent considerin thare shaip. Thare brains bein so far from thare tales, it bothers them sum to wag the iattur. I wunst too a dockshound who wuz too impashunt to wate till he could signal the hole length of his boddy when he wanted to wag his tale, so he maid it up with his tale thet when he wanted it to wag he would shake his rite ear, an when the tale seen it shake it would wag. An Ideal Guest.

She was a most accommodating old lady, as this incident at an afternoon tea proved.

"Will you have sugar?" she was asked.

"If it's in, leave it in," she replied, "and if it's out, leave it out. It doesn't make a bit of difference to me."—London Punch.

Codfish and Taters as a Breakfast Diet Rouse the King.

HE DEMANDS AN EXPLANATION

When His Majesty Is Told That the Treasury Is Empty He Calls on His Pawnbrokers For Help—The King and the Army.

[Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure.]

His royal nibs, having prepared himself for a hearty breakfast, was made terribly indignant when he sat down to a table spread only with weak coffee and codfish and potatoes.

"By the seven roaring bulls, but is this a breakfast for a king?" he shouted at his serving man as he pranced around.

"It was what the cook cooked, O ruler of the world," was the humble reply.

"Then tell that cook to hump himself to me and explain. I'm either a king or a swab, and I want to find out which."

"DEAD BROKE AGAIN, YOUR MAJESTY."

"O most gracious and highborn, but I cooked what was given me to cook," said the wrestler of pots as he made his appearance with his hair standing on end.

"Away, then, and send the household purveyor here! By my haldom, if this was intended for an insult some one shall die before noon! Codfish and taters for a king's breakfast!"

"O most gracious and benign," said the purveyor when he had arrived, "but this was the best I could do with the 15 cents at my command. I fear thy dinner will be still more meager."

"Fifteen cents! Do you mean that we are out of dough?"

"So the Yankee people across the sea would term it, O ruler."

"Then send my royal treasurer here. He has got to show me, or off comes his head. There has been knavery here. There has been grafting to put America to shame."

Three minutes later Mustapha Murphy, the royal treasurer, came lounging in, and the king greeted him with:

"Scoundrel, will you look at that breakfast!"

"It's better than I had, O ruler. They left the coffee out on me."

"But why is it? What is it? What's the reason for it? Get right down to business and explain things."

"Dead broke again, your majesty. I told you yesterday that we hadn't a stiver in the box."

"And I told you to send out the royal silver watch pitcher and raise some shekels on it."

"I sent it out, O beneficent, but the pawnbrokers shook their heads and handed it back. It is only silver washed, you know."

"And it is thus that the pawnbrokers of my kingdom impugn my kingly honor! Send messengers to all parts of the city and assemble about a dozen of the three ballers here."

An hour later twelve pawnbrokers had assembled in the king's audience hall, and, with the big water pitcher at his elbow, the ruler of the sun, moon and stars sweetly purred:

"Subjects, a dispute has arisen, and you are here to settle it. I ask that each one step forward and examine this pitcher and tell me its worth."

Those pawnbrokers were no spring chickens. They had done business with the king before. The first one, therefore, put the price of 100 shekels on the five shekel pitcher, and the others named the same figure in rotation. They realized that one of them would have to advance that price, but the others were to chip in and help him out.

"Subjects, I thank thee," replied the king, with a smile of innocence on his face. "Such patriotism as yours must be rewarded. Only one of you can hold the pitcher at the same time; but, knowing your feelings toward your king and wishing to honor all alike, I shall rule that each of you pay over to me 100 shekels and then hold the pitcher in rotation."

And when the twelve sighing, dejected men had departed, leaving their money behind, his majesty turned to his treasurer and asked:

"Say, Murphy, why do I pay you $75 per month and board?"

"You don't pay, O benign. You simply agree to."

"Same thing."

"My duties are to raise the spondulix for the royal treasury and keep it safe."

"Then why don't you do it?"

"I give it up."

"Because you are a chump, Murphy Lord, man, but if I didn't have this king business on hand I'd go at it and within a week I'd have all the Rothschilds and Morgans and Rockefellers climbing for the tops of blue gum trees!"

The King and the Army.

One day when the king had come in from a ride he was met by Murphy, who showed signs of much excitement as he said:

"O ruler of the lands and seas and all else, we have bad news from the east."

"Well, what's broke loose in the east?"

"The soldiers are on the point of mutiny because they have had no pay for six months."

"Um! What else?"

"The soldiers in the north have refused duty for the same reason."

"Um! I suppose it's the same in the south and west?"

"Worse, if anything, O ruler. They even threaten to march on the capital and loot your palace."

"Getting pretty warm, eh? The loot they'd get around here wouldn't pay one of them off, but of course they don't know that. Well, what shall we do about it?"

"I don't see any other way but to send them on a hundred thousand shekels from the tax money coming in. That may keep them quiet for a time."

"What! Send on the money I am going to use to build a new tower on my palace? Murphy, you must be getting baggy. Not on your life, my boy!"

"But we can't keep them quiet with further promises, your majesty."

"We don't have to. Issue a proclamation in my name to the effect that the world has never seen such soldiers before and that their courage and hardihood are making nations tremble. Add that I have watched them with a fatherly eye and shall continue to do so. Tack on to that a statement that the memory of all that have taken in the line of duty will ever be preserved in the archives of a grateful country."

"It's the same old sweet oil, your majesty."

"But we'll help it out this time. How many soldiers have I, Murphy?"

"About 8,000."

"How much will it cost to get 8,000 medals for bravery struck off?"

"We can get them as cheap as ten shekels the thousand."

"And what will be your expenses to visit the four armies and pin them on the gallant boys in my name?"

"Another eighty shekels, O liberal hearted ruler."

"A hundred and sixty shekels against a hundred thousand! Murphy, you're a lop shouldered, double eyed chump! Get out the proclamation and the medals and hustle to the front. When I took an Irishman to run the financial part of this government I thought I had a daisy, but, by John, I don't believe you'd know enough to come in on the ground floor of a Texas oil well! You'd want to stop and sniff and smell all around to see if there was really any oil there!"

He Blushed.

Jane did not know that young Mr. Sterry was waiting for her in the parlor.

"Ma," she called down the stairs in her clear contralto voice, "I wish you'd come up and button my waist."

"Jane," her mother hastily called back, "Mr. Sterry is here."

"Why, ma, the very idea!" gurgled Jane.

And young Mr. Sterry blushed.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Leisure Class.

"Does youah leisure clawss in this country follow the hounds at all, Miss Pepprey?" asked the visiting British nobleman.

"No," replied Miss Pepprey; "the hounds usually follow the leisure class here. We always try to keep the hoboes on the move."—Catholic Standard and Times.

Sagacity.

"Don't you know," said the solemn person, "that ice is full of germs?"

"What marvelous sagacity!" replied the man who suffers from the heat. "I had no idea that germs knew so much about making themselves comfortable."—Washington Star.

Not Hinting.

"Won't you sing something for me, Miss Board?" asked the late stayer.

"I can't do it now," she yawned, "because I'm superstitious."

"What do you mean?"

"Well, I've always been told that it was unlucky to sing before breakfast."—Cleveland Leader.

EVIDENCE TO FIT.

Lawyer Barrett's Experience With Two Chinamen Looking For Help.

When John J. Barrett was new at the San Francisco bar two Chinamen entered his office and retained him to help prosecute "one velly bad man, Jim Hing."

Having locked the retainer in the safe, Mr. Barrett inquired what Jim Hing had done.

"Him velly bad man," the spokesman replied. "Jim Hing kill he wife. He live same alleyway, 'closs the stleet. Me—my blother—both look out window 'closs alleyway, see Jim Hing stabbee wife. She die light away. He lun. You hang Jim Hing?"

"Certainly," said Mr. Barrett. "But you must tell the police just what you saw."

"Jim Hing kill wife"— they began, when the lawyer interrupted:

"Yes, yes, I know. But when you first saw Jim was the knife up high or down low?"

"Hoong yeh goyamen zoon fah goon quuong gey yoola"— the Chinamen began jabbering and singing at each other, when Mr. Barrett again interrupted:

"Answer me truthfully. Stop consulting. Was the knife up high or down low?"

The elder Chinaman looked puzzled. Restraining the impulse to consult his brother again, he turned a guileless stare on Mr. Barrett.

"Which you think best?" he replied.—Harper's Weekly.

His First Visit.

Stubb—Why in the world did Uncle Hank Green start to follow that automobile?

Penn—He heard the horn.

Stubb—What of that? The horn went "Honk, honk!"

Penn—Yes, but the old man is a little deaf and he thought it said "Hank, Hank!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

No Misrepresentation.

Boarder (at summer resort)—Didn't your booklet say there were no mosquitoes here?

Use of the Digits.

You realize when shouts arise
And rend the air with clamor
The thumb was made that it might form
A target for the hammer.

The index finger has its use
In every land and nation;
It points with scorn and thus enjoys
Most constant occupation.

The middle finger, being made
Much longer than the others,
Can reach to some one else's pie—
Your neighbor's or your brother's.

The third has more romantic aim,
Of words and vows unbroken;
'Twas made on purpose to display
Engagement's sparkling token.

Within the last each one believes
Dame Wisdom's stores to linger;
Though Smith is smart, Jones has more sense
Within his little finger.
